Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I was interested in noting that the House had sent us a bill imposing certain duties which will result, as I understand, in providing a benefit of approximately $300,000,000 for the sugar-raising States. We have just discussed the debenture plan under which, in certain circumstances, when the President so wills or his farm board so wills, corn and wheat, and cotton, possibly, might receive a benefit to the extent of $200,000,000. Therefore, I hope, in making up their program, that the Republican majority will provide that the sugar schedule shall be taken up first, so that later wheat and corn and cotton may have their share.

Mr. WATSON. I think that the program for the consideration of the bill, so far as the program has been outlined, as to the method of examination, is to take up the schedules just as the House bill embodies them.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. DILL. Will the Senator tell us now just what his idea is as to when we will have a recess, when it will begin, and how long it will last?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Indiana answers that question I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. WATSON. Certainly.

Mr. GLASS. He being entirely familiar with tariff statistics, I want to ask the Senator from Indiana if he can give us an approximate estimate of how many farmers buy and use shingles as compared with those who make shingles?

Mr. WATSON. I refer that question to my friend from Washington [Mr. JONES] on this side of the Chamber and to my friend from Washington [Mr. DILL] on the other side of the Chamber, to be answered at a later date.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me ask for a reference also as to shoes and brick and cement.

Mr. WATSON. Those items will be attended to later, I will say to my friend.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. FESS. I have a great number of letters in regard to the duty on sugar—a question which has been discussed pretty widely—and in every single case the letter is from a beet grower. I take it that a beet grower is an agriculturist, a farmer. I am wondering whether the Senator from Missouri is opposing the sugar duty, in which I have no interest whatever, on the ground that sugar is not an agricultural product?

Mr. HAWES. No; but my inquiry was this: If the American people are to be taxed $300,000,000 a year for the benefit of some seven or eight States producing a certain agricultural commodity, why is it that the same consideration can not be given to States that raise wheat and corn and cotton?

Mr. FESS. Consideration is being given to wheat by putting a duty of 42 cents a bushel on it.

Mr. HAWES. The Senator knows, of course, that when we stop Canadian wheat from coming into the United States it simply makes its way to Liverpool and helps to establish the price of wheat there, which price affects our surplus as well as the wheat sold in our domestic market.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE rose.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield further to me?

Mr. WATSON. I will just sit down until this colloquy ends, because by friend from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] also wants to get in.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to make one statement, and give my view——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana has the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. WATSON. No; I do not decline to yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana yields the floor, and the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] is recognized.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from California yield to me to ask the Senator from Indiana a question before he sits down?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. With pleasure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, boiled down, as I understand the position of the Senator from Indiana, it is that he does not agree with the President's recommendation of a limited revision of the tariff?

Mr. WATSON. That altogether depends on what that means. If it means that no schedules are to be touched except those relating to agricultural products, I do not agree with him; but I do not so understand the President's message at all, nor, in my opinion, is that the President's understanding.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understood the Senator, he said that he was in favor of considering the general revision of the tariff as sent here by the House.

Mr. WATSON. That is exactly what I stand by.

Mr. McKELLAR. And, therefore, that is an unlimited revision of the tariff, as the Senator has already said.

Mr. WATSON. I would not say "unlimited," but a very general revision.

Mr. McKELLAR. With 4,100 articles out of 4,400 articles affected, it is substantially an unlimited revision. The Senator does not agree with the President on that subject?

Mr. WATSON. I want to say this to my friend: That articles——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California now has the floor.

Mr. WATSON. I will ask the Senator from California to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Present rates have not been changed in the House bill sent over to us in multiplied hundreds of instances. They have embodied the tariff bill and sent it over to us; and in other instances the rates have been but very slightly changed.

Mr. HARRISON. But, Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. I am not going to enter into a discussion of the House bill. What I got up here to talk about was the recess, and I have never had an opportunity to talk about it.

Mr. DILL. Why does not the Senator from Indiana let the Senator from California proceed?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will yield momentarily if the Senator from Indiana will state his position in respect of the time of taking an adjournment or a recess.

Mr. WATSON. I shall be very happy to do that if given an opportunity to finish one sentence. I always like to be good natured.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California yields to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; on the contrary, I do not, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well; then the Senator from California has the floor and is recognized.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Connecticut? The Senator from California may not yield for a speech.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of saying that outside of California I know of no more delightful summer resort than the city of Washington; and, as for me, I am quite willing to remain here during the charming summer months.

I favor a revision, if it be so, upward of tariff rates. Whatever meaning may be attributed to the phrase "limited revision" I am not now concerned with. I think that many of the agricultural products of practically every State in the Union need added protection by way of increase of rates or readjustment of the process of fixing rates on kindred imported products. For example, Arizona, Texas, and Mississippi, as well as the State I have the great honor in part to speak for—California—are greatly interested in the cultivation of cotton. I think, and, along with the better service of others, I hope to persuade the Senate that that great agricultural industry is entitled to a tariff on what is termed "long-staple cotton," which is now on the free list. I think we are entitled to that upon the fundamental principles of the American protective-tariff system.

Mr. President, I do not think we should be hasty about this matter; and I beg to add that I think that if the Senate Committee on Finance shall continue industriously to consider the bill which is now before it we can finish our labors in from a month to six weeks—at the utmost, two months—and be ready to report the bill to the Senate. On that committee are very able men—one excepted. The Democratic side is represented by Senators of long legislative experience, of profound learning, broad minded, and desirous, I know, of advancing the interests not only of their individual States but of our whole people.

We may differ, but that difference is the difference that may arise between honest men, both devoted to the interests of their country; and I indulge myself in the hope and belief that before we shall have finished our labors in committee we shall have framed a bill which will be acceptable to the Senate. Going further, I indulge myself in the belief that that bill as amended will be, in its substantial framework, acceptable to the House; and I go further and indulge myself in the hope and in the belief that when the two Houses shall have sent this bill to the White House it will be approved by the great, the broad-minded, the far-seeing, the patriotic President of the United States.

I do not for one moment think, Mr. President, that he will set up his individual view as to what perhaps that view called for in the first instance, whatever it may have been, as against the matured judgment of the Congress of the United States.

I realize, though at times I fear that some Senators and some Members of the House and the country at large do not grasp the truth, that the President of the United States has a large legislative power. We speak of the executive department, presided over by him, the President; but he has a large legislative power. Indeed, that power is equal to, if not somewhat greater than, the power of one-third of the membership of the Senate.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, it comes mostly through patronage, does it not?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. On the contrary, that power comes from the people of the United States speaking through the Federal Constitution; and the appointive power, now characterized as the patronage power, subject to the approval of the Senator from South Carolina, is wisely lodged in the President.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I will then yield. I was calling attention to the fact that the President has a large legislative power by virtue of the veto power.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, right on that point, I want to ask the Senator if he does not think the House bill delegates to the President the little remaining legislative power that we have?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No, Mr. President; if the Senator's question invites consideration to the power given to the President, upon the ascertainment of certain facts, to raise or to lower a given rate, I do not think it is an abdication of our power or an unconstitutional delegation of power to the President.

Mr. GLASS. I did not raise the point of constitutionality, though I think it could readily be raised; but I raised the point of fact. We are delegating to the President of the United States in the House bill the right to levy taxes, to determine processes of valuations, and many things that properly belong to the legislative branch of the Government and not to the executive.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I appreciate the force of the thoughtful words of the Senator from Virginia; but may I be permitted to suggest that if the view of the Senator is sound, then every tariff bill that has been enacted has in a sense delegated power in respect to the levying of a tariff duty on imports. Indeed, the Senate committee this day was considering a proposition which involves, in a sense, the delegation of power to appraisers, to men in the Treasury Department. There are different methods of arriving at the basis for the imposition of given ad valorem rates; and the power or authority to determine that basis is necessarily, as my distinguished friend knows, delegated to certain officers of the Government. So, in a sense, speaking loosely, we are abdicating, we are delegating power to fix the amount of duties to be paid on an imported article.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. I do not concur. I think we are simply charging the administrative branch of the Government with doing exactly what the legislative branch of the Government would find it impossible to do. It is a mere question of administration; that is all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Truly; and in the case of delegating to the President the power to raise or lower rates, the exercise of that power is dependent upon certain ascertained facts, which facts are to be ascertained by officers that we ourselves designate——

Mr. GLASS. I will point the Senator to one instance in which it did not depend upon ascertained facts, and I have no doubt the instances are innumerable. The Tariff Board ascertained, or affected to have ascertained, facts with respect to the duty on sugar; and the President of the United States either rejected or ignored the ascertainment by the Tariff Board, and did not touch the matter at all.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I will not engage in controversy over what may have been done or not done in a given case. I am stating and, of course, but very briefly and without going into detail, that in respect to the so-called flexible section of the existing tariff act we are not delegating legislative power any more than we are delegating legislative power when, under the present law, the power vests in certain appraisers to determine the basis for imposing the rates fixed in the law.

I return to the thought I was expressing.

Mr. GLASS. But, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Carrying the Senator's argument to its legitimate conclusion, he would contend that the collection of revenue by the port officer is a delegation of legislative power by the Congress.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. On the contrary, it is not a delegation of legislative power in that instance, nor in the instance provided for under the present section 315 of the tariff act. I deny that it is a delegation of legislative power; and I repeat myself that if there be a delegation of legislative power under section 315, then it is a delegation of legislative power to authorize an appraiser to determine, as between one, two, three, or four situations, what duties shall be imposed on an imported article.

Mr. GLASS. Or to require a port officer to collect those duties.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely. It is not a delegation of legislative power.

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator takes that view, it is useless to continue the controversy.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Quite so. We are at the extremes of the poles at the north and south.

I was taking the liberty to waste the time of the Senate by observing that the President of the United States, whoever he may be, has not only what we technically term executive power, but, in and about legislation, he has a large legislative power, and that legislative power runs along and should run along hand in hand with executive power and duty. That legislative power, by virtue of the veto power or authority, is equivalent to, if it does not exceed, the legislative power of two-thirds of the Senate and two-thirds of the House.

There are those who contend that a veto by the President should, in a true constitutional sense, be overruled, if at all, by two-thirds of the full membership of the House and of the Senate, and not by a two-thirds vote of a quorum present and voting. Whichever theory be correct, in a constitutional sense, this, of course, is true, that the President has a very large legislative power, vested, and intentionally vested, by the great men who framed our Constitution, and some of the greatest of them came from the State represented by the distinguished Senator who has differed from me here, and perhaps may differ from me on many other questions.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. With pleasure.

Mr. PITTMAN. My reading of the Constitution never led me to believe that it was the intention of its framers, or of the States ratifying it, that the President of the United States should have any legislative power. It seems to me that it was the intention absolutely and permanently to separate the functions of the legislative, the Executive, and the judicial. Nor do I think that any President of the United States—and I include the present President—ever interpreted the power of veto as a power to be utilized for an expression of his opinion as to legislation. In other words, the veto power was undoubtedly only intended to be used by the President in rare cases. It never has been used by a President except in a rare case.

It is the President's duty, undoubtedly, when a legislative act in his opinion violates the Constitution of the United States, to veto it, because he is sworn to support the Constitution of the United States. I will not take issue there with the Senator. It is undoubtedly the duty of the President to veto an act when in his opinion that act is destructive of our form of government, or is so hastily and ill-advisedly conceived that it is obvious that it will be destructive in its effect.

But if we should follow the opinion which, I understand the Senator from California to indicate in his construction of the veto power; that is, that it was intended that the President should have legislative authority equal to one-third, if not more, of the Congress of the United States, then we would have to admit that he would be justified in utilizing the veto power whenever he simply differed with a majority of the Congress of the United States as to the wisdom of any legislation.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. He has that power, answerable to the people, or to his own conscience, or his own sense of duty toward his country.

Mr. PITTMAN. I admit that that power was vested in him, but the President of the United States, under his oath of office, is just as much bound by the intent of a provision of the Constitution as is a Senator or a judge, and I do not believe for one moment that the present President of the United States would assert that in his opinion it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution, and the States which ratified it, that he should utilize the power of veto simply when he differed with Congress in opinion in regard to legislation.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I thank the Senator for his thoughtful observations. I do not wish to attempt to make a vain display of acquaintance with the proceedings in the Philadelphia convention which framed this great organic instrument of government. I may be pardoned, however, if I say that I am more or less familiar with those proceedings as they have been recorded, and with philosophic works, historical papers, since prepared and written of and concerning the debates so far as known, the reasons so far as given, in that great secret gathering of great Americans.

Here I turn aside to observe that there appear to be now in our country—not in the Senate, of course—gentlemen who think that in order to carry on legislation it must be in the public square, as though the people doubted the fidelity, the wisdom, the patriotism, of their chosen representatives. What would have happened if the convention which met in Philadelphia had been held in open session? There is not any man or woman in America to-day at all familiar with conditions then prevailing who does not know and would not here admit that if the convention had been open it would have broken up in quarrel and in dissention, and the great Constitution would never have been agreed upon or submitted to the States for adoption.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Pardon me just a moment. Thinking of the great State to which we owe so much because of the great men born there and who spoke for her and the Nation, thinking of the great State of Virginia, what would have happened if the debates in that convention had been known, had been broadcast, attacked, ridiculed, condemned during the deliberations of that great body of great men?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In one moment. Touching publicity, and touching the press, I may have something to say on that subject. I have defended more guilty newspaper men than any lawyer in the State of California, or perhaps in any other State in the Union, for my brother was a publisher, and always had a dozen civil or criminal libel suits pending against him. Pardon me for adding that no one I defended ever went to jail. I know much about the press, to which I am greatly indebted. I will have something to say about them in a day or two, which may or may not please them, but which I think will gratify the Senate and satisfy the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. PITTMAN. I just want to add a few words to what I said to the Senator from California. I was contending that the position taken by the Senator from California to the effect that the Constitution had granted legislative authority to the President of the United States——

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. By virtue of the veto power. The Senator grasped my meaning, I am sure.

Mr. PITTMAN. Exceeding that of one-third of the Congress, and possibly much more, sometimes two-thirds, in the opinion of the Senator—that that position did not reflect the intent of the Constitutional Convention, or of the States which ratified the Constitution. No President up to date has so construed it.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator unduly, but I question that last statement. There have been Presidents who have discussed that very question, as to whether under the veto power the duty was lodged in the Executive to exercise a legislative power, and have contended that, by virtue of the veto power, the present and continuing duty was upon the Executive to have concern as to legislation affecting the welfare of the people of the Nation.

Mr. PITTMAN. I know of no construction—and I would be glad to hear of any—on the part of any President of the United States to the effect that the power of veto was intended to give to the Executive legislative power.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think the great Grover Cleveland advanced those views.

Mr. PITTMAN. I well remember his views; I know he vetoed a great many measures, and he took the ground emphatically that it was the duty of the Chief Executive, under the constitutional provision granting him the power of veto, to stop legislation which he thought was unconstitutional.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Or unwise.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I do not remember the word "unwise."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If that is not the exercise of legislative power, what is it? No bill, even though first passed unanimously by both House and Senate, becomes a law until it is approved and signed by the President. If he does not approve and sign the bill he returns it, "with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it." Without reading, I invite the Senator's attention to section 7 of Article I of the Constitution.

Mr. PITTMAN. Be that as it may, there has never to my knowledge been any President, not even including the present President, who has ever taken the view which the Senator has just announced, that the power of veto was a delegation of legislative authority equal to that of one-third if not two-thirds of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I did not say a delegation of power. By virtue of section 7 of Article I, the exercise of the veto power is the exercise of a legislative power or function.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am interested in this principally because I think the Senator has raised a very vital question, which is worth discussing. The power which President Cleveland asserted was the power to stop legislation of a certain character, but not the power to impress upon Congress his views with regard to that legislation.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. The Senator forgets that provision in the Constitution which imposes upon the President the duty to advise Congress, to advise the people, of and concerning matters of a public nature, which necessarily carries the idea of legislation in respect of them.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is right, and that has been the practice of the Presidents of the United States, to advise the Congress with regard to the state of the Union; but with the development which the Senator from California is now urging the President does not stop with his message to Congress, he does not stop with his veto to stop a certain kind of legislation, but he issues a statement now from the White House, not to the Congress of the United States, in which he not only states that this bill is bad but that the other bill is good.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That is what Grover Cleveland did, and what every President of the United States has done, in effect and substance.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not only has the drift of things gone that far, but it has gone so far now that the President calls into consultation the leaders of Congress, to tell them how they shall proceed in Congress.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I take exception to that remark. I know the Senator did not mean it in an offensive sense. The President told no one how he should or must proceed. He may call anyone, Senator or Representative, into counsel to confer. Is there any impropriety in that?

Mr. PITTMAN. No. Is there any impropriety in this procedure, and does the Senator see no danger in it, that when a tariff bill is about to be prepared and submitted to the Congress, the leaders go into consultation with the President; that the procedure is then adopted by which, in the House of Representatives, which, under the Constitution is the body that must initiate the legislation, the bill is introduced, is reported out by a committee of leaders representing only a small portion of the body, that then a rule is obtained from another committee representing only a small portion of the body, by which debate on the bill is limited to a certain period of time, and then a rule is adopted by which those who disagree with any of the 4,000 provisions of the bill may not even offer an amendment for consideration?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Well, what is the conclusion from all that?

Mr. PITTMAN. I say that that centralization of power in the President of the United States, with regard to legislative matters, was never conceived by the framers of the Constitution and the States that ratified it, and this constant development of legislation by the President of the United States and by a few leaders in the House of Representatives, the representative body of the people of the country, without debate and without even the power on the part of individual Members to offer an amendment, is a drift which I am now opposing and which the Senator from California is so ably supporting.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Oh, no; I am not commenting on, approving, or condemning proceedings in the House. I rose merely to make some idle remarks in regard to the specific matter of taking a recess or adjournment. Under normal conditions I am in favor of recesses and adjournments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. For what purpose?

Mr. COPELAND. To ask a question.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps the debate between the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from California has proceeded to the point where it is unappropriate to ask the question I had in mind. However, the Senator was discussing and emphasizing the harmony that prevailed in the Constitutional Convention of 1787. Has he forgotten that there was such a serious lack of harmony that Dr. Benjamin Franklin suggested the importance of calling in a minister to offer prayer each day?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I had not forgotten it, and I am going to make a like request here for the Senate before we are through.

Mr. HARRISON. Is the Senator going to make it for the Republican membership?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. No; I will ask him to send up his petition for the benefit of my friend from Mississippi and other distinguished brethren on the Democratic side of the Chamber.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief statement?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to announce that Senators yielding for speeches will yield the floor.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Then I must decline, under the rule, to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The present occupant of the chair will endeavor to enforce the rule.

Mr. FESS. I hope the Vice President will observe the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I repeat that I took the liberty of rising to make, as I then hoped, a very few brief remarks in regard to the subject matter which seemed to be agitating the minds of the learned Senate, namely, whether we should or should not take a recess or adjourn to a day certain or sine die. I did observe, and repeat, that outside of California I know of no more delightful summer-resort city than that of Washington.

Mr. GLASS. May I——

The VICE PRESIDENT (rapping for order). Senators desiring to interrupt must address the Chair.

Mr. GLASS. I was about to ask the Senator if he would yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Under the ruling of the Chair I must decline to yield.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California declines to yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, I think I had reached the point of stating that this is a delightful summer-resort city named after the Father of His Country, who, if I remember correctly, presided over a certain convention holden in Philadelphia. I wish to say now, lest the opportunity may not be given me in the future, that the Constitution which went out of that convention was opposed by one of the greatest men of this or any other nation, the superb orator, the devout patriot of Virginia. No other voice of that period or since has ever uttered such appealing calls to liberty and for the rights of men to speak and to write and to print as did Patrick Henry. I am making no display of familiarity with these matters, for all Senators are aware of what I am about to say—that Patrick Henry opposed the ratification of the Constitution in the Virginia convention chiefly because there was no protection for the freedom of speech and of the press. He believed in the freedom of the press and in the freedom of speech, and he feared that Congress might abridge, perhaps destroy, that freedom.

It is known that Washington and Marshall and others personally appealed to Patrick Henry to abate his efforts, to abandon his opposition to the ratification of the Constitution. Of course, he had other grounds, but it was not until there was an authoritative promise made that immediately upon the ratification of the Constitution those first great 10 amendments would be adopted and made a part thereof, that the Virginia convention, by the narrow majority of 10, ratified that Constitution. The first of those amendments, the one which Patrick Henry had insisted upon, and in his splendid, eloquent, convincing way sustained, was the amendment which denies to Congress the power to make any law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.

But not to ramble too far away from the path, I was observing that by virtue of the veto power the President has a legislative power. Words I suppose are designed to express ideas, to state or describe facts. Sometimes the ideas are wanting, sometimes the facts are distorted; but words I suppose are intended to convey ideas.

Mr. GLASS. Talleyrand said they were intended to conceal ideas.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. Words, indeed, are often used to conceal ideas. But whether we call the veto power an executive power or whether we term it legislative power it has to do with legislation. I am not speaking for the present occupant of the White House. I am making some observations as to the right of a President to express his sentiments concerning matters of legislation affecting the welfare of the country, and I know of no President from Washington to this hour who has not exercised that perfectly legitimate authority and performed his duty as he conceived it to be. Mentioning it again and again, and not to curry favor with anybody, Grover Cleveland was a great man, a great President, according to his school of politics. Have we forgotten his great message when he demanded wool upon the free list? Some of my brothers here might say that he offended against the Constitution when he expressed his sentiment in respect to tariff matters. I do not say so. I think he exercised his legitimate power or authority and discharged his duty as he saw it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. May I remind the Senator that we have not forgotten his demand that sugar should be on the free list?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. That may be so, but I do not think sugar should be on the free list. Right here I desire to say that I am a protective-tariff man. I believe in developing the American manufacturing industry. I believe in developing the agricultural industries of our Nation. I believe that if and when we develop a great manufacturing city, giving employment to men, we are at the same time creating a consuming market for the agricultural sections of our country. The converse is true. When we make the country prosperous, when we make any of our States agriculturally prosperous, those States become the consuming market for the products of the cities, and therefore I favor adequate protection—I do not call it high, I do not call it low, but adequate protection to every American industry whether it be in village, city, or on farm.

If my friend from Virginia can show me that there is an industry, be it an infant puling in its nurse's arms, that can be developed in Virginia if given adequate protection against foreign imports of the article produced, I will vote for it. Why? Because I claim to be an American and to love that State as I love every State and the people in it. That is my political philosophy. We may differ as to the rate that would be adequate to protect that industry; but if by a tariff it can be developed, giving employment to American men, women, and children, I am for it—not that I hate other nations, but I love my own.

Mr. President, I apologize for taking so much of the time of the Senate. Touching the matter of recess, touching the matter of the President's sentiments, touching the matter of his power or his duty, I have said perhaps enough.

(At this point a message in writing was transmitted to the Senate from the President of the United States by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.)

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I do not know what that message contains, but if it were a message to the Senate of the United States expressing the mature, deliberate judgment or views of the President of the United States in respect of a legislative matter affecting the welfare of this people, the message would be proper constitutionally. As to any President, be he the present occupant of the White House or any of his successors—and I hope that there will be successors in that chair to the last syllable of recorded time—such a message would be perfectly proper and no impropriety constitutionally or otherwise.

Mr. President, I wish it to be known that if it be deemed necessary for the Senate to remain in session, I shall be entirely agreeable to that. If members of the Senate Finance Committee think that they can not properly carry on their duties in the committee and be subject at the same time to be called to perform duties on the floor, and therefore think there should be a recess, I, of course, shall not oppose it. I venture the thought that perhaps we would make better progress all around if we took a recess for a limited period, but I do not want that recess to be taken until the so-called farm relief bill shall have been enacted into law.

Mr. DILL obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. DILL. How much time does the Senator from Mississippi want?

Mr. HARRISON. I merely wish to say that, following the Senator from Washington, I shall try to answer some of the questions which have been raised as to the recess, if I can get recognition of the Chair.

SUPREME COURT DECISION IN THE O'FALLON RAILROAD CASE

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have intended for several days to discuss the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of the O'Fallon Railroad Co., of St. Louis, and I have waited until I thought there was no pressing business before the Senate. Inasmuch as there does not seem to be any demand for a vote on the unfinished business to-day, I want to take this opportunity to discuss that decision.

On May 20, 1929, the Supreme Court of the United States decided what is popularly known as the O'Fallon Railroad case. It has been called a "red-letter day" for the railroads, the idea of that expression being that it marks the day when the railroad valuations of the country were authorized to be so increased that higher rates will be possible, and therefore the date when railroads won a great victory. An analysis of the decision, especially in view of the conditions surrounding the transportation business, causes me to wonder whether or not that "red-letter day" may not mark the beginning of an entirely different period in transportation history, namely, a period of more strict Government control if not of Government ownership.

This was a 5 to 3 decision, the ninth judge not participating in it, although had he so participated he undoubtedly would have voted with the majority. His long service as an attorney in cases of this kind he very properly thought disqualified him from participation in the decision.

The trouble with this decision is that it does not decide the question that should be decided, which the country and the Interstate Commerce Commission wanted to have decided, and which, I think, they were entitled to have decided. The Supreme Court decision sums up in one paragraph this situation:

> The question on which the commission divided is this: When seeking to ascertain the value of railroad property for recapture purposes, must it give consideration to current or reproduction costs? The weight to be accorded thereto is not the matter before us. No doubt there are some—perhaps many—railroads the ultimate value of which should be placed far below the sum necessary for reproduction. But Congress has directed that values shall be fixed upon a consideration of present costs along with all other pertinent facts; and this mandate must be obeyed.

That paragraph comes as near telling what the court said about the weight that should be given to the reproduction cost as any part of the decision, and it does not tell anything. The commission can not tell, no attorney can tell, no railroad man can tell whether they shall add 5 per cent or 10 per cent or 20 per cent or 50 per cent or 80 per cent in consideration of reproduction cost in arriving at the valuation to be used. The court simply says that it must be given "due consideration." If the Interstate Commerce Commission should say that railroad valuation shall be increased from $23,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000—a 5 per cent increase—because of the consideration of reproduction costs, that would be challenged in the courts immediately. If they should say it shall be increased 10 per cent, that would be challenged; if they say it shall be increased 20 per cent, that would be challenged; in other words, the whole situation is left "up in the air," as it were. We have no way of knowing what proportion of the valuation shall be determined by a consideration of reproduction cost.

I have here an article by Amos Pinchot, published in The Nation of June 5, which, I think, sets forth the situation most excellently. He says:

> Here, as in most Supreme Court decisions involving public questions of the first magnitude, we have two groups of allegedly intelligent, informed justices, seeing the same facts through different eyes and reading the law to an exactly opposite conclusion. This, as will be remembered, is precisely what happened in the Dred Scott case, where Chief Justice Taney and his four southern associates welcomed the opportunity to confirm the status of slavery in the Territories, while Judge Curtis and his antiextension associates took the opposite tack. Both sides invoked in their arguments the same Constitution and brought equally powerful batteries of precedent into action.

It was of the Dred Scott decision that Abraham Lincoln said, "The court has declared the law; we can not change that, but we can change the judges."

My greatest hope is that before this question is passed upon by the court again there will be a changes of judges.

Now, as a matter of cold fact—

I am reading again from Mr. Pinchot's article—

> the decision in the O'Fallon case is no more a decision of law than the Dred Scott decision. It is a decision of men representing certain social ideas, of individuals who are dishing up, not the law and its precedents, but such selections therefrom as will best express their preconceived ideas. The truth, as every lawyer knows, is that the law, except in very clear cases where its application is unmistakable, no more governs the justices of the Supreme Court in their decisions on vital current matters, like rate fixing, than, we will say, Biblical authority governs clergymen in their attitude toward parochial problems. There is always an abundance of law and enough apt, forceful precedent to support an argument on either side of almost any question. It is the man's own conviction that sways him, not the law. And all that the O'Fallon case proves is that there sit on our highest bench five men who think the railroads ought to have more money, three who think they are getting enough, and one who did not record his preference.

I think that is about the best statement I have heard as an explanation of this decision. The judges decided this case simply on the question of whether the railroads should have more money, but they did not go to the extent of saying how much more money they should have; they did not go to the extent of saying how much consideration should be given to reproduction value.

Let me call attention to the fact that when the transportation law was passed in 1914 there was much dispute as to what weight should be given, in valuing the railroads, to original investment and what weight should be given to reproduction cost. At that time reproduction cost would have been less than the original investment or original cost, and the railroads contended for the original investment theory of valuation; but to-day reproduction cost is far greater than it was either in 1914 or at the time the railroads were constructed. The commission took the 1914 value and the additions and betterments, less depreciation, plus the value of the land which the railroads had secured by purchase or by grant at present prices, and attempted to use that as a basis for valuation. The court has overturned that valuation and said the commission did not give "due consideration" to reproduction cost. What is the situation now? Nobody, neither the railroads nor anyone else, knows what is the proper basis of railroad valuation.

The President was very quick to announce that he did not think the decision would possibly mean an increase in railroad freight rates; the railroad presidents announced that it was not to mean an increase in railroad freight rates; but the logical conclusion of the decision can be but one thing, and that is an increase in the valuation of the railroads which will permit an increase in the rates that may be charged; in fact, if the reproduction theory of the valuation of the railroads is to be followed, then there will come times when it will be impossible to charge rates sufficiently high to give a fair return on such valuation, because the traffic will not stand rates high enough to give such returns. In fact, if the rates are too high the returns will be less.

It is bad enough that this uncertainty should exist in regard to the railroads, but when we consider that this is a rule laid down not merely for the railroads but for all public utilities throughout the country it becomes even worse. The valuation of other public utilities now approximates about $25,000,000,000. The electric light and power public utilities are valued at about $10,300,000,000; the electric railways at about $5,500,000,000; the telephone and telegraph companies at about $4,400,000,000; and the privately owned water supply facilities at about $700,000,000. If the reproduction valuation theory is also to be followed in connection with those public utilities, then the public will be at the mercy of the high rates which may be charged on those necessities of life as well.

This leads me to call attention to another fact. The present statute regarding the valuation of water-power plants built under a permit by the Power Commission to develop hydroelectric power, provides that these power plants, if taken over by the Government 50 years hence, shall be valued according to the original cost of the plant; and up to this time the Power Commission has not had enough money to keep an account of what the original cost is. The past Congress appropriated $50,000 for that purpose, and I understand that that will enable the Power Commission to begin upon a fair accounting system, with a view to securing the original cost accounts of all the water-power plants that have been built under these power permits. But more money will be needed, and it is extremely important to future generations that the Power Commission shall have the necessary funds to keep an account of the original investments, so that when the time comes to recapture these plants, should the Government want to do so, the records will be clear. Unless these accounts are kept, and unless they are accurate, the owners of those plants, when the time for recapture comes, will fall back upon the indefinite situation created by decisions like the O'Fallon decision.

(At this point Mr. BLEASE asked permission to insert certain matter in the RECORD, which will be found at the end of Mr. DILL'S speech.)

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, this plan of valuation suggested by the Supreme Court is so impractical that it seems to me that Congress must take cognizance of the situation and pass legislation that will give us a stable rate basis. Unless we do this, with the price of material and the price of labor and the price of building operations continually changing, there will be a rate basis that is as unsteady as is the changing cost of living and the changing cost of the building and rebuilding of the great public-utility systems of the country; and if this uncertainty is to continue, there can be but one refuge for the people of this country, and that would be the public ownership of the public utilities, and particularly of the railroads of this country.

I am not to-day advocating public ownership; but it would have certain advantages that it is impossible to realize under the hodgepodge valuation system with which we are now confronted. We would know the costs upon which rates were to be based. The valuation would be fixed. We would have a certain fixed return upon the bonds with which the railroads were paid for. We could have an amortization that would retire the bonds, and the railroads would become a public utility for service rather than for manipulation and expensive litigation; because equally as bad as, if not worse, than the unstable basis of our rate structure, as a result of this decision, is the invitation to litigation which that decision holds.

I was rather impressed with the summary of the Philadelphia Record as to what this decision means. It sums it up as follows:

> For the commission, the decision means that it will continue the prodigious labor of bringing valuations down to date under the new instructions.
> For the railroad, it offers no prospect of a big jacking up of rates, but a gratifying assurance that they will not have to reduce their charges.
> For the public, it signifies no drastic rise in the cost of living, but the quenching of hopes for lower transportation costs.
> And for a large number of corporation lawyers it promises years of profitable employment.

So I say this decision leaves us in a worse position than we were in before, because the commission's work has been upset, the commission has been told that the valuation basis is not satisfactory, that a higher valuation must be given, and yet no real basis of valuation has been set out.

Now, what can Congress do about it? What should Congress do about it? There are two or three things that Congress might do.

If this higher valuation of from eleven to twenty billions of dollars is to be added to the railroads, if the meaning of the decision be that reproduction costs are to be the basis, then Congress might amend the act of 1920 by providing that the return shall be lowered from 6 per cent to 4 or 4½ per cent. Whether or not the court would declare that rate so low as to be confiscatory we have no means of knowing; but Congress at least would show its intention and purpose in that connection.

A second thing is that Congress might specifically provide what percentage or what amount of consideration shall be given to reproduction cost in fixing the valuation of the railroads. Whether the court would overturn that, I do not know. Nobody knows. I think, however, that if a reasonable proportion of the valuation were based upon the reproduction cost, the court might permit it to stand.

Then there is a third thing that the Congress might do, especially if we are to pass the consolidation legislation which is now pending before the Congress. We might require, as a condition for consolidation, a fixed and stable and fair valuation of the railroad properties that are to enter into the consolidation.

And, of course, the last resort would be Government ownership of the railroads, as I suggested a while ago.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DILL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. A very interesting feature of the present situation, in view of the decision of the court, is that a large per cent of the Class I roads are making a return now, as I understand, in excess of 6 per cent.

Mr. DILL. That is true.

Mr. SMITH. The logic of that situation is that no matter what valuation has been placed upon the roads arbitrarily, or according to court decision, or what not, the roads are declaring a dividend in excess of that that is provided under the recapture clause. If the court's decision has a tendency arbitrarily to raise the value of the property under consideration, what excuse would the roads have for raising their rates, when upon all the property devoted to public use, owned by these corporations, they are returning a dividend in excess of that allowed by the law? The mere statement of the court that a piece of property is worth $10,000 which has been paying a dividend to those who own the property of 8 to 10 per cent might increase the nominal value of the property, but the amount that the individual is receiving for what he put in remains the same.

So I do not see how the action of the court, in view of the returns of the roads, can affect these rates legitimately. They are declaring now that all the property that they have devoted to public use is paying a dividend in excess of that allowed by the law. If they come and ask for a higher rate, it is upon a mere verbal decision that does not affect the facts at all.

Mr. DILL. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the court in this case said that due consideration had not been given to reproduction cost, without saying how much consideration must be given to reproduction cost. The O'Fallon road is not required to turn over its excess profits under the law because the valuation has not been raised high enough, and any other road that the commission attempts to interfere with on the basis of a valuation already made will naturally go into court and get the same result; and there is nothing in the decision to guide the commission or the attorneys for the road or anybody else that will give a definite basis upon which it can be determined.

Mr. SMITH. But the Class I roads have already declared that "upon our estimation of the value of our property we are returning to our stockholders a certain rate of dividend." If, under the decision of the court, they come and ask for a higher rate, they are practically stating that the value of the property that they returned was not correct.

Mr. DILL. It has increased because reproduction costs have increased, and that is the very confusion I have been discussing that has resulted from this decision—that we do not know anything at all as to the basis that should be used by the commission. We are simply told that the commission has not given enough consideration to reproduction cost. How much shall it give? Nobody knows.

Mr. SMITH. Was the decision of the court to the effect that due consideration had not been given?

Mr. DILL. That is the decision, and that is all that is said about valuation in the decision.

Mr. SMITH. As the Senator knows, the La Follette Act and the Esch-Cummins Act both provided that consideration should be given to reproduction cost.

Mr. DILL. But the court says that due consideration has not been given and does not say what "due consideration" would be.

Mr. SMITH. I know; both say that due consideration should be given; and in their attempt to value this property under the La Follette Act and under the Esch-Cummins Act, of course, they were following, as I construed it, the strict letter of the law.

Mr. DILL. My understanding is that they took the 1914 valuation, plus betterments and replacements, less depreciation, plus the present value of the land, whether bought or ceded to them, and gave consideration, as they said, to the reproduction question, but had no proof on the question. The majority opinion condemns the valuation because they say "due consideration" was not given; but they do not set out what would be due consideration. In other words, they do not set out what increase in the valuation is necessary; and the commission under the present situation must guess again. If it guesses right, if a majority of the members of the court think it has guessed the amount of consideration that they think should be given, that will be approved; otherwise it will not be approved.

Mr. SMITH. Has the Senator investigated the brief that was presented by the commission, to see what consideration they gave reproduction cost in the O'Fallon case?

Mr. DILL. I have read that brief, and they do not set out definitely what consideration they gave. They simply say that they have given consideration. The dissenting opinion says that they gave "due consideration." The majority opinion says they did not.

Mr. SMITH. I have not had an opportunity to study closely the brief of the commission. Of course, I shall do it as a member of the committee; but here is the point I want to make:

Suppose the Senator and I invest $5,000 each in a certain piece of property, and after operating that, we declare a dividend of 6 per cent on the $10,000. The matter goes to the court, and they say the reproduction cost of that property must be taken into consideration. We are operating this plant on our investment, and we have stockholders, and we are paying 6 per cent on what we consider the investment, the amount of money that we put in for public use. We are declaring a dividend of 6 per cent on it. The court comes in and says that the real value of it is $20,000. If we get 6 per cent on the $20,000, we get 12 per cent on our investment.

Mr. DILL. The trouble with the Senator's illustration is that it is not in accord with what the court did. The court did not say what the valuation should be. It did not say how the valuation should be arrived at. It left the whole matter in the air.

Mr. SMITH. I am basing my remarks on what the railroads said on their own initiative, because having been chairman of the committee twice, I know that the valuations upon which our rates, fares, and charges have been predicated have been largely the voluntary valuations of the railroads, the ex parte valuations of the railroads. With that privilege in their hands, they have a certain freight rate and passenger rate fixed, and upon that it is declared that they are earning a dividend in excess of what is allowed by law. Does the Senator think that we, as a Congress, should allow an added valuation, added either by the Congress or any other body, without some redress in law, to increase the burden on the people, when the railroads themselves say that, according to their own valuation, they are earning a dividend in excess of what the Esch-Cummins law allows?

Mr. DILL. I do not think so at all. The point I am trying to make, and the reason I want to call the attention to this decision, is that under the recent decision of the court there now exists no basis for rate making. The court's decision gives no basis. It simply criticizes and overturns the basis that was laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission by saying that due consideration was not given to reproduction costs, and what "due consideration" is nobody knows. The whole basis of our rate structure has been toppled; it has been made unsteady, unreliable, undependable, and I say that it becomes the duty of Congress to fix a basis of valuation which will be reasonably stable, will be reasonably reliable; and that can be done only by a certain kind of legislation. Unless the Congress sees fit to legislate specifically and concretely on this question of valuation the whole question of railroad valuation will continue to be one of litigation for an almost unlimited period.

I maintain that this decision makes it incumbent upon the Congress to fix a more definite and concrete basis of valuation for the commission, which the courts will permit Congress to do. I recognize there are certain limits beyond which the court will overturn an act of Congress, but the indefiniteness of the wording of the Esch-Cummins statute has been taken by the court as a basis for its decision that has set up a rate basis that is absolutely undependable and unreliable in every respect.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the Senator's contention is this, that Congress has the rate-making power under the Constitution.

Mr. DILL. So long as it does not confiscate property.

Mr. SWANSON. Congress has delegated that power to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the commission, exercising a power that belongs to Congress, simply interprets an act of Congress in doing so, and the act of Congress is so indefinite and so inconclusive as to what the intention of Congress was in the matter of fixing valuations of the railroads—and under the Esch-Cummins law the rates are fixed on the valuation—that it is the duty of the Congress to make the law clear, so that we will know the basis upon which rates will be fixed. As I understand, the recent case was simply an interpretation of the act of Congress and not of the power given to the commission.

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator that from my viewpoint the interpretation by the commission was a reasonably fair interpretation in the valuation of the property, but the Supreme Court, when it overturned that valuation, did so because it said that the commission did not give due consideration to reproduction costs, and failed to give any suggestion as to what "due consideration" would be.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand from that decision that they thought that Congress, in passing the law, intended that this should be done, because if Congress should prohibit it, it could not be done.

Mr. DILL. They indicated that, but they did not say it.

Mr. SWANSON. That was the impression I received from the decision. Congress, as I understand now, has given the commission the power to fix rates, and rates are fixed on valuation, and Congress has been very indefinite in fixing a method of valuation, and what the Senator contends for is that Congress should make it definite.

Mr. DILL. That there should be a more definite basis within limits which the court will permit.

I do not want to take any considerable length of time in this discussion, but I did think it was important to place these facts in the RECORD, and to call the attention of the Senate to the necessity of some legislation on this subject, in order that the great railroad industry, and all the commerce and industry that depend on it in this country, might have some stable, reliable basis, rather than this changeable and undependable basis.

I do want to call attention, before I sit down, to that part of Mr. Pinchot's article in The Nation where he discusses the background of these Supreme Court justices that influenced their opinions. In discussing what Congress might do about it, he said:

It is also possible that the public will look at the decision of the court realistically, seeing in it not so much the echo of the law of the land as the reflection of the background and consequent bias of five individuals who may be described respectively as (1) an ex-attorney of the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; (2) an ex-attorney of the Southern Pacific Railway Co.; (3) an able, conservative lawyer, once Attorney General of the United States, who has, on the bench, shown at least ordinary zeal in defending corporate interests; (4) a member of the Republican old guard of Tennessee, the selection of President Harding. This justice's father was principal owner of the Knoxville & Ohio Railroad, later bought by the Southern Railway; and his own law firm was counsel for the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia, as well as the Knoxville & Ohio. And finally, the Chief Justice, Mr. William Howard Taft, an amiable Ohioan, also elevated to the bench by President Harding, who has throughout his long office-holding career rarely strayed from the easiest, most comfortable path.

I call attention to these men, and the background of their legal experience, as being in part an explanation of the interpretation which they put upon the statute regarding valuation, an interpretation that demands a higher valuation, and makes legal increased rates on all the products carried by the railroads of this country. I think it high time that men with a different background of legal experience be placed on the Supreme Court at the first opportunity.

I ask that at the conclusion of my address there may be inserted in the RECORD an article by Donald R. Richberg in The New Republic of June 5, 1929, discussing the O'Fallon decision, and also the article of Amos Pinchot from which I have read some excerpts. I also ask to have printed a clipping from The Literary Digest giving the amounts of money of the various railroads that have accumulated and would have been recapturable under the present law if the valuation had been sustained.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The New Republic, June 5, 1929]

AFTER THE O'FALLON DECISION

The most remarkable feature of the decision by the Supreme Court of the O'Fallon case is the uncertainty in which it leaves the law concerning the valuation of public utilities, despite the tremendous effort of all the participants to obtain a clear statement of just what the law is. On the day when the opinion was handed down President Hoover appointed the National Law Enforcement Commission, headed by former Attorney General Wickersham, who argued the O'Fallon case in behalf of the United States. Mr. Wickersham might well suggest to his colleagues that one of the difficulties in enforcing the law often arises from grave doubt as to what it is.

For many years the Interstate Commerce Commission has been engaged in valuing the properties of the railroads, under the mandate of an act of Congress requiring the commission to give "due consideration to all the elements of value recognized by the law of the land for rate-making purposes." This provision was properly interpreted by the commission to mean—as the Supreme Court now holds in the O'Fallon opinion—that the commission should "consider" all the "elements of value" described in the celebrated opinion of the Supreme Court in Smyth against Ames, a case decided in 1898. According to this opinion, "the orginal cost of construction * * * the present as compared with the original cost of construction," and many other factors, "are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case."

Ignoring the minor factors, the critical issue presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission in valuing railroad properties under this "law of valuation" has been: What relative weight should be given to the inconsistent factors of "original cost" and "present construction" cost? It is impossible to ascertain either the "actual" original cost of the railroads or what it would "actually" cost to construct them to-day; and estimates must be used.

If the commission should give dominant weight to estimates of original cost, it might find that to-day the railroads had a "value" of $23,000,000,000 or less; but, on giving dominant weight to estimates of reproduction cost, the "value" of the same properties to-day might be fixed at $35,000,000,000 or more. Under the law $12,000,000,000 added to the rate-base valuation would authorize adding about $700,000,000 annually to transportation rates.

Facing this problem, a majority of the commission determined, in the O'Fallon case, not only to exercise their best judgment as to the relative weight to be given to estimates of original cost and reproduction cost, but also to express their reasoning so clearly that the Supreme Court might either approve their weighting of the valuation scales or state what weights would be "just and right." In brief, what the commission did was candidly to give dominant weight to its estimates of the original cost of the O'Fallon properties, although it expressly allowed the "present value" of lands and fixed a final "value" which was over $32,000 higher than a maximum original-cost estimate (after due allowance for physical depreciation). The effort of the commission to explain why it regarded the weight which it gave to the various "elements of value" as "just and right" is described in the majority opinion of the Supreme Court by Mr. Justice McReynolds as follows:

"The report of the commission is long and argumentative. Much of it is devoted to general observations relative to the method and purpose of making valuations; many objections are urged to doctrine approved by us; and the superiority of another view is stoutly asserted. It carefully refrains from stating that any consideration whatever was given to present or reproduction costs in estimating the value of the carrier's property."

Mr. Justice Stone, in his separate dissent, takes direct issue with the statement last quoted, and says:

"That the commission gave consideration to present reproduction costs appears not only from its own statement but from the fact that it gave full effect to increased current market values in determining the value of land and to additions and betterments since June 30, 1914, taken at their cost less depreciation."

To harmonize these conflicting statements, one would be inclined to interpret the majority opinion as a holding that insufficient weight had been given to reproduction costs. But Mr. Justice McReynolds explicitly negatives this interpretation when he writes as follows:

"The question on which the commission divided is this: When seeking to ascertain the value of railroad property for recapture purposes, must it give consideration to current or reproduction costs? The weight to be accorded thereto is not the matter before us. No doubt there are some, perhaps many, railroads the ultimate value of which should be placed far below the sum necessary for reproduction."

Perhaps the clearest view of the doctrine announced by the majority can be obtained in reading the exhaustive dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Brandeis—in which Mr. Justice Holmes and Mr. Justice Stone joined. This opinion, while upholding the action of the commission, asserts that the "commission is required by the rule of Smyth v. Ames, reaffirmed in the Southwestern Bell case, to determine the rate base under section 15–a by actual value as distinguished from prudent investment."

It is then pointed out that the commission must therefore consider all those factors which affect "actual value," such as "the commercial and the legal limitations upon rates, * * * the effect of competition upon the volume of traffic, * * * efficiency of the plant, * * * functionnl deterioration," * * * and other factors that cause a "lessening of service value," such as "changes in the volume or character of its traffic," * * * or "progress in the art of rail transportation," causing obsolescence in equipment, roadway, shops, terminal facilities. All these factors, it is pointed out, may "more than counterbalance that increase in its actual value which would otherwise flow from the rise in the price level since 1914." Therefore the dissenting justices conclude that "only the then service value of the property is of legal significance under the rule of Smyth v. Ames."

It is the conclusion of Mr. Justice Brandeis (and his concurring colleagues) that a finding of "actual value" annually for each of the railroads of the United States through detailed consideration of all the appropriate factors "would be a stupendous task, involving perhaps prohibitive expense." But it is suggested that the commission, through its general knowledge of transportation conditions and special knowledge of an individual railroad, such as the O'Fallon, might properly be permitted "the exercise of its judgment upon all the evidence, including enhanced reproduction costs." Because, the opinion concludes, we are dealing "with a legislative question which can be more easily determined by a commission composed of persons whose special skill, observation, and experience qualifies them to so handle great problems of transportation as to do justice both to the public and to those whose money has been used to construct and maintain highways for the convenience and benefit of the people."

It may be difficult for a lawyer who argued in support of the order of the commission, which is now reversed by the Supreme Court, to give an unbiased view of the results. But, in truth, no one can do more than guess at what may follow. The majority opinion states that "in the exercise of its proper function this court has declared the law of the land concerning valuations for rate-making purposes." This law is that "such weight as may be just and right in each case" shall be given to a large number of variable, uncertain, and inconsistent factors which must be weighted according to unknown ratios. If the minority interpretation of the majority opinion is correct, it appears that when the Interstate Commerce Commission has properly appraised the "actual value" of the railroads the result will practically defy analysis. Perhaps this will render them immune to judicial reversal, if it is made evident that the commission has sought with conscientious purpose and indefatigable energy to consider and weigh every factor showing the "actual value" of the existing properties. Just how the commission can revalue every railroad annually according to this method is, however, not clear.

In this situation there are certain opportunities for legislative action that might be helpful to protect the public interest. It is possible that further definite instructions to the commission as to what weight should be given to original and reproduction costs might be upheld by the Supreme Court as reasonable additions to the "law of the land." But it is also possible that such legislative action might be regarded as an invasion of the "proper function" of the court.

It is, however, quite evident that both the "actual value" of railroad properties and the rates which railroads may seek to charge depend considerably on the cost of substitute transportation services. Thus the development of competitive transportation by water, by air, and by actually "public" highways, under the fostering care of State and national legislatures, may serve as an effective regulator of railroad rates, even though direct regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission may be retarded or even nullified by the impossibility of establishing and maintaining a stable and reasonable rate base.

It also seems clear that legislative wisdom would dictate an early effort to revise the rate-regulating provisions of the transportation act of 1920, which, after nine years of experimentation, have been definitely shown to be unworkable. Finally it has been made evident that consolidations of railroads into larger units of still greater "actual value"—which would provide the basis for increased rates—should not be encouraged unless accompanied by additional safeguards of the public interest in reasonable rates. The acceptance of a fair valuation of the consolidated properties, as a future rate base, could properly be required as a condition of permission to consolidate.

THE RAILROADS WIN THE O'FALLON CASE

By Amos Pinchot

Since the Dred Scott decision in March, 1857, the Supreme Court has adjudicated three momentous economic or business cases: In 1895 the income-tax case, in which, by a 5 to 4 vote, the court reversed its own decision of the previous year and staved off a graduated Federal income tax for 18 years; in fact, until the sixteenth amendment of the Constitution broke the impasse; in 1911 the Standard Oil or "rule of reason" decision which pulled the teeth of the Sherman antitrust law, defeating the purpose of the Fifty-first Congress, which was to discourage industrial monopoly and keep down prices; and now the St. Louis & O'Fallon Railroad valuation, or more accurately speaking, rate case, which, if I am not very much mistaken, will prove to be the most momentous decision of the three.

Momentous it would be if it only applied to the railroads. But it is doubly so since, as seems inescapable, it will likewise apply to all public utilities regulated by commissions, and furnish a precedent for a general boosting of rates, thereby increasing the concentration of wealth, already a serious enough problem in this country. As the executives of the railroads have been quick to point out, the significance of the O'Fallon decision lies in the fact that it hallows the theory, long fought for by the railroads and other utilities, that the current cost of reproduction should be a main, if not the main, consideration of a regulating commission in fixing the rates that a company may charge for its services. It is also significant that, if this reproduction-cost theory were strictly followed, the resulting valuation of the railroads would be about forty billions instead of the twenty-three billions now fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. In other words, it would be so high as virtually to permit the roads to charge whatever the traffic would bear, thus, in effect, nullifying rate regulation altogether.

The O'Fallon decision is thus a smashing victory for the roads, and, inferentially, for the public utilities companies. So much so indeed that both the railroad authorities and the Government hasten to assure the public that the railroads will not seek to take advantage of it by raising rates. The future will, I think, prove the contrary.

Summarized in a few words, the contentions of the five or majority justices, McReynolds, Taft, Sutherland, Sanford, and Van Devanter on the one hand, and the three dissenting ones, Brandeis, Holmes, and Stone on the other, are substantially as follows:

Justice McReynolds, speaking for the majority, holds that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in valuing the O'Fallon road for rate-making purposes, did not follow the provision embodied by Congress in the transportation act of 1920, which directs that "due consideration" shall be given to the current reproduction cost. Indeed, says Justice McReynolds, the commission did not take the reproduction cost into consideration at all; and in consequence the value it put on the O'Fallon road is not high enough. Justice Brandeis, speaking for the minority, insists that the evidence shows there was "due consideration" of reproduction cost. He regards the commission as a body with discretion. He justifies its findings. He asserts that Congress did not intend that the commission should accord much consideration to "elements which would give a valuation double that which had been rejected" (by Congress in the debates on the act as being too high). He points out the difficulties that the commission encountered in trying to ascertain the "current reproduction cost." He says the commission "could only act on proof." It had no proof. Therefore, if it allowed itself to be guided by a mere estimate of what the reproduction cost might be, it would, in effect, be making a decision on "mere conjecture." Justice Stone, who, with Justice Holmes, signs the Brandeis opinion, adds a short dissenting opinion of his own, in which he maintains, in flat contradiction of Justice McReynolds, that the commission not only considered "all the elements of value brought to its attention by the carrier" (the railroad) but discussed the reproduction cost "at length in its report."

Here, as in most Supreme Court decisions involving public questions of the first magnitude, we have two groups of allegedly intelligent, informed justices, seeing the same facts through different eyes and reading the law to an exactly opposite conclusion. This, as will be remembered, is precisely what happened in the Dred Scott case, where Chief Justice Taney and his four southern associates welcomed the opportunity to confirm the status of slavery in the Territories, while Judge Curtis and his antiextension associates took the opposite tack. Both sides invoked in their arguments the same Constitution and brought equally powerful batteries of precedent into action, which drew from Abraham Lincoln the shrewd commentary that the Dred Scott decision was not a decision of law at all, but a decision of men.

Now, as a matter of cold fact, the decision in the O'Fallon case is no more a decision of law than the Dred Scott decision. It is a decision of men representing certain social ideas, of individuals who are dishing up not the law and its precedents but such selections therefrom as will best express their preconceived ideas. The truth, as every lawyer knows, is that the law, except in very clear cases where its application is unmistakable, no more governs the Justices of the Supreme Court in their decisions on vital current matters, like rate fixing, than, we will say, Biblical authority governs clergymen in their attitude toward parochial problems. There is always an abundance of law and enough apt, forceful precedent to support an arugment on either side of almost any question. It is the man's own conviction that sways him, not the law. And all that the O'Fallon case proves is that there sit on our highest bench five men who think the railroads ought to have more money, three who think they are getting enough now, and one who did not record his preference.

Not the least interesting element in the decision is the additional light it casts on commission regulation of railroads. Forty-two years ago the Interstate Commerce Commission was established, not, as is commonly supposed, primarily to regulate railroads, but to free the industrial world from a system of railroad favoritism, with which great producers, such as the Standard Oil, the packers, and other trusts, were driving as they are doing to-day independent industry to the wall. After the World War the railroads, many of which were put on their feet with Government money, became impatient of the restraints imposed by the commission, and, under a barrage of propaganda which, by the way, has steadily increased in intensity, they attacked Congress and pushed through the transportation act, thus largely taking the rate question out of the hands of the commission through the provision of that act that the railroads should be practically guaranteed rates that would yield them a satisfactory return.

This pleased the roads for the time being, but a few years later, when the mammoth successes and earnings of industrial companies and public utilities got under way, the railroads began once more to feel poor and wronged. The Class I roads were particularly scandalized at being permitted to keep only a niggardly 6 per cent plus half of their earnings above that figure, and, inspired by an inflated boom notion of what was due them, they conceived the idea that, under a second and heavier barrage of propaganda, they could advance, not on Congress this time but on the Supreme Court, and break through with the O'Fallon case into richer fields of profit. As to the effect of such a move, it was not unreasonable to assume that the public would submit to anything that could remotely be related to success and prosperity, the gods for whom all other divinities had been abandoned. The people, being demonstratively sheep habituated to shearing, would not be likely to flinch from another touch of the shears. Whether the assumption of the railroads was correct is yet to be seen.

Only one threat to the O'Fallon decision lies on the horizon. This is that it is well and publicly known that the railroads' cry of poverty is by no means bona fide. Lately the Class I roads have enjoyed enormous prosperity. Their 1927 net operating income exceeded that of 1926. Two-thirds of the carriers reported larger net earnings in 1928 than in 1927. Some roads have increased their stock issues and cut melons. One hundred and eighty-three Class I roads reported the January, 1929, net income as $77,261,000, an increase of 30.6 per cent over January, 1928. Last December Mr. Aishton, president of the American Railway Association, stated that the railways were in the best condition in their history.

What will Congress have to say about the O'Fallon decision? It is possible that this extraordinary finding of our august highest court may in essence be reversed by the lowly Congress through a law repealing that provision of the transportation act which directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to give reproduction cost "due consideration." It is also possible that the public will look at the decision of the court realistically, seeing in it not so much the echo of the law of the land as the reflection of the background and consequent bias of five individuals who may be described, respectively, as (1) an ex-attorney of the Northern Pacific Railroad Co.; (2) an ex-attorney of the Southern Pacific Railway Co.; (3) an able, conservative lawyer, once Attorney General of the United States, who has, on the bench, shown at least ordinary zeal in defending corporate interests; (4) a member of the Republican old guard of Tennessee, the selection of President Harding. This justice's father was principal owner of the Knoxville & Ohio Railroad, later bought by the Southern Railway, and his own law firm was counsel for the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia, as well as the Knoxville & Ohio. And, finally, the Chief Justice, Mr. William Howard Taft, an amiable Ohioan, also elevated to the bench by President Harding, who has throughout his long office-holding career rarely strayed from the easiest, most comfortable path.

The public will also note that, in sharp disagreement with these five justices, stand Louis D. Brandeis, who has many times earned its confidence by fearless and supremely intelligent service, and Harlan F. Stone, a comparatively new justice but one who has already finely proved his mettle. And Oliver Wendell Holmes. May that revered but eternally young David retain his keen eye and strong sling arm throughout the Hoover administration, in which, unless signs fail, he and his liberal companions on the bench will have their work cut out in holding back the Philistines.

RAILROADS THAT WIN

Sums that would have been payable by leading railroad companies to the Government on account of "excess earnings" if the Supreme Court had sustained the Interstate Commerce Commission's methods, as estimated by Dow, Jones & Co. and reprinted from the Wall Street Journal. First column shows recapturable half of earnings for 1928; last column the accumulation of liability for the period 1921–1928:

	1928	Total arrears 1921–1928
Atchison	$2,800,000	$25,500,000
Atlantic Coast Line[1]		14,000,000
Baltimore & Ohio	2,000,000	7,100,000
Chesapeake & Ohio	8,600,000	36,200,000
Delaware & Hudson	400,000	2,200,000
Delaware, Lackawanna & Western	100,000	2,750,000
Great Northern	500,000	1,700,000
Kansas City Southern	425,000	2,175,000
Louisville & Nashville		1,500,000
Missouri, Kansas & Texas	600,000	4,450,000

Western Maryland	250,000	1,250,000

[1] Inclusion of Louisville & Nashville if allowed by Interstate Commerce Commission would reduce recapture liability except for 1926 and 1925.

THE RELATION OF MENU PRICES TO FREIGHT RATES

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask to have published in the RECORD three menus, one of breakfast and dinner in one of the restaurants of this city, and the Senate restaurant menu of Saturday last, in connection with what the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] has said as to freight rates. If you will notice the prices that we pay for the farm commodities on those bills of fare, and what the farmer himself gets for them, you will see proportionately how much we pay for freight rates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

BREAKFAST

FRUITS

Sauerkraut juice	$0.15	Apple sauce	$0.15
Grapefruit juice	.25	Sliced banana	.20
Half cantaloupe	.30	With cream	.25

THE AURORA KILLING

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Christian Century for May 15, 1929, entitled "The Aurora Killing."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AURORA KILLING—A STUDY IN NEWSPAPER PRACTICE

By Paul Hutchinson

I. THE TRAGEDY

On the morning of March 26, 1929, the 865,000 purchasers of the Chicago Tribune saw this headline (headlines quoted in this study are in every case taken from final editions; facts given in the summary of the case are taken from the examination held by State's Attorney Carbary on the night of March 25, and later substantiated before the Kane County grand jury) stretching across the top of the first page: Dry Raiders Kill a Mother. The subsidiary headline, directly over the article thus sensationally announced, read: Aurora Woman is Shot; Husband is Beaten Down—Sheriffs Throw Gas Bomb into Home. At the same time, the 422,000 buyers of the only other Chicago morning newspaper of general circulation, the Hearst-owned Herald-Examiner, read a similar page-wide headline: Kill Mother in Dry Raid.

What had happened?

On the outskirts of the neighboring city of Aurora, in a settlement known locally as "the Hill," Joseph De King conducted a gas station. He lived next door to this station, his family consisting of himself, his wife, and his 12-year-old son. The station had been raided as a blind pig on December 3, 1928, and an automobile load of bottled liquor confiscated. George Stafford, found in charge, had confessed to a charge of bootlegging, and paid a fine of $250. Both De King and his wife had, according to affidavits made by deputies who conducted the raid, been present at the time, and had tried to "square things" with the deputies.

On the night of March 25 two deputy sheriffs, Anderson and Treadwell, and an investigator attached to the staff of the State's attorney, Hanson, were given a search warrant signed by Police Magistrate John Weber, of Aurora, authorizing them to enter and search the De King dwelling, and, if liquor was found, to confiscate it and arrest De King. The warrant was based on an affidavit signed by Boyd Fairchild, an investigator, affirming that he had purchased liquor in the De King house nine days previously.

The three deputies reached the De King house shortly after 8 o'clock. They were met by Stafford, who claimed to have no authority to admit them to the premises. He said that the owner, De King, was asleep upstairs. The officers asked the De King boy, who was present, to awaken his father and tell him of their mission. Mrs. De King was absent, visiting at a neighboring Catholic rectory.

While two deputies waited for De King, one went into the cellar and returned with a basket which contained about half a gallon of alcohol and some wine.

At about the same time De King came down the stairs. He was dressed only in his underclothes and was in a very ugly mood. He carried two .38-caliber revolvers. The deputies started to tell him of their warrant, but before the warrant could be read De King told them to put down the liquor which had been found, ordered them out of the house, vowed that he would kill them if they read the warrant, followed them to the door, and shouted: "Don't ever come here again or I'll shoot, and I don't mean maybe. If you don't think these guns are loaded, I'll show you." Whereupon he fired in the air.

The deputies, realizing that they had a dangerous man with whom to deal, divided their forces. Hanson believed that if Peter De King, Joseph De King's brother, who is alleged by some in Aurora to be close to the center of the illicit liquor traffic in that city, could be secured, he would be able to persuade Joseph De King to submit to arrest. Hanson accordingly went to the near-by Aurora to find Peter De King and bring him to his brother's house. The other two deputies went to the county seat, Geneva, which is about 7 miles distant. There three other deputies were secured. One of them was Roy Smith, a motor-cycle policeman attached to the sheriff's office. These five deputies, convinced that they were dealing with a dangerous man, equipped themselves with bullet-proof vests, revolvers, sawed-off shotguns, and tear bombs—the usual police equipment for dealing with riots. They thereupon returned to the De King house.

In the meantime Mrs. De King had returned home; Hanson had found Peter De King and the two had gone to the house. After some parley, during which Hanson and Peter De King managed to convince Joseph De King that they meant him no harm, they were admitted. There were at this time, in a back room of the De King house, which is a sort of combination dining room and kitchen, Joseph De King, Mrs. De King, the De King boy, Hanson, and Stafford. There were at least three guns visible—the two De King had shot at the first visit of the deputies, and an automatic revolver which disappeared during the subsequent confusion and has never been located. Hanson sat at the table with the De Kings, drinking some wine which they offered in an attempt to convince them of his friendship, while at the same time attempting to persuade Joseph De King to submit to arrest. He believes that he had almost succeeded in that attempt, and it had been suggested that Mrs. De King telephone a lawyer, Robert A. Milroy, and arrange to have her husband released on bond as soon as he had surrendered and been booked.

At this point, however, the five deputies returned from the county seat, knowing nothing of what Hanson had done. Three of them went immediately to a side door of the house, opening into the room in which the group was sitting. The door was open. Seeing the deputies outside the door, Joseph De King leaped to his feet and confronted them with leveled revolvers, swearing that he would kill the first man who stepped over the threshold. Mrs. De King remained at the telephone. The others were transfixed. The deputies halted just outside the door.

In the meantime Smith, seeing the front door open, had entered through it. This door gave admittance to a glassed-in porch running across the front of the house. From it Smith stepped through another open door into the living room. On the other side of the living room he saw, practically filling the doorway leading into the next room, the figure of Joseph De King, the man he had come to arrest, standing with his back to the approaching Smith, with his guns leveled on Smith's fellow deputies, and declaring with oaths and curses that he would kill them if they advanced.

Not wishing to shoot De King, but being determined to arrest him, Smith turned his shotgun around and hit De King a smashing blow over the head. The blow was so hard that the gun's butt was splintered. De King fell senseless. He fell forward into the room, his guns dropping by his side at a point somewhere near his hips (according to the later story told by the De King boy) or near his knees (according to Smith).

Immediately the room was in confusion. Hanson has testified that he "beat it," and that seems to have been the main idea of Peter De King and Stafford. Mrs. De King, however, ran forward from the telephone stand, ran around the prostrate body of her husband, and snatched for one of his guns. Smith, backing away from the confusion caused by his knocking out Joseph De King, says that she actually reached and grasped a revolver and was about to fire it at him when he fired his shotgun at her hand. The testimony of the De King boy, given that same night at the hearing conducted by the State's attorney, was:

"Q. When your father was hit did your mother do anything? Just tell us what she did.—A. As soon as the man hit him over the head she ran like she was ready to pick up the gun, but she didn't get about that far; she was——

"Q. Wait a minute. About that far [indicating]?—A. No.

"Q. Well, within about 6 inches of the gun?—A. Yes.

"Q. Then what did she do?—A. She looked at the man to see where he was running, and when she saw he was turning around, was going to shoot, she tried to jump away, but the man got her."

Mrs. De King was fatally wounded by the shot from Deputy Smith's shotgun. She made her way across the room, out the side door, and finally fell in the yard outside. There she was picked up and placed in an automobile, but she died before the drive to the St. Charles Hospital in Aurora could be completed.

In the meantime Smith, having fired and not knowing in the confusion what other persons there might be in the kitchen, was backing toward the door through which he had entered when he slipped on a rug and fell. At that instant the 12-year-old boy darted out from some corner where Smith had not seen him, picked up one of the revolvers lying by his father, and shot the deputy, the bullet shattering the knee and ranging up through the leg. Smith managed to drag himself to the front door, out of which he fell. The boy fired twice, examination of the gun showed, but the cartridge failed to discharge on the second pull on the trigger.

During all this confusion Deputy Treadwell had remained beside the car on the highway. Hearing the shooting, seeing the men running out of the side door, seeing the wounded woman follow them, and then seeing the wounded Smith fall out of the front door, he grasped a tear bomb and went to the glassed-in porch to investigate. Peering in he saw only the prostrate Joseph De King, whom he mistook to be crouching on the floor awaiting a chance to renew the shooting. Treadwell therefore flung his tear bomb through the window, meaning thereby to render innocuous Joseph De King and any others who might be in the house. That was the end of the struggle.

Having taken Mrs. De King, Smith, and Joseph De King to the hospital, the deputies immediately reported to the State's attorney, George D. Carbary. Mr. Carbary immediately came from his home in Elgin to the office of the chief of police, A. G. Wirz, of Aurora. All the witnesses except Deputy Smith were brought to this office, where Mr. Carbary took their statements as to what had happened. The examination was taken down by a court reporter. It began at 10.45 p. m. and continued until 2.30 a. m. the next morning. The testimony of the De King boy, already quoted, proved the most important part of the examination, and the last portion of the examination consisted of a trip to the De King home, where the boy reenacted the entire scene. The boy's oral testimony was given at 12.15 p. m. Every fact contained in this account of the tragedy was, according to State's Attorney Carbary, available to the press at 2.30 a. m. Most of the facts were available before 1 o'clock. (We give these hours in order to show that there was time in which to transmit the full story to the Chicago newspapers before the final editions of those papers went to press.)

II. THE FIRST REPORTS

Here was a terrible human tragedy, enacted between 8 and 9.30 in the evening. Here were the facts available before 2.30 a. m.; most of them by 1 o'clock. How did the morning newspapers of Chicago, which had the first chance to inform the public, discharge their responsibility? We have already quoted the headlines used. In order to give opportunity to contrast these facts with the newspaper treatment we now quote the entire news story printed in the Tribune for March 26, since this was essentially the story that went out to the press of the Nation and world:

"Dry raiders in Aurora killed a woman last night as she was telephoning to an attorney for help; they clubbed her husband into unconsciousness and terrorized a 9-year-old boy so that he seized a revolver and shot a deputy sheriff in the leg.

"The raiders claimed they had a search warrant to search the dwelling, and they pointed to a half gallon of wine found on the premises as justification.

"The raid was in pursuance of the policy of State's Attorney George D. Carbary, who promised to dry up Kane County, and who has made 72 arrests for prohibition violations since December, obtaining fines of from $100 to $1,500 in each case.

"The victims of last night's exploit were Mrs. Lillian De King, 43 years old, who is dead; her husband, Joseph, whose scalp was lacerated; and their son Gerald. The De Kings lived on Aurora Road, a quarter mile out of the city of Aurora.

"The raiders, led by Deputy Sheriff Roy Smith, called at the De King home about 9 p. m. Smith said they were sent there by Sheriff Leslie Urch on orders of Assistant State's Attorney Carlton Shults.

"According to Smith, the deputy sheriffs were met at the door by De King, who had a gun, and who told them he wouldn't let them in. Smith said, as he had only two men with him, he went back to the city for reinforcements and returned with three additional deputies.

"The house is a story-and-a-half frame dwelling, with an oil station occupying the front of the lot. The De Kings occupied the entire building, and, according to neighbors, bore a good reputation in their community.

"Smith said his men finally surrounded the house and he called to all inside to surrender. Failing to get a response, he threw in a mustard-gas bomb, which would force all inside to come out.

"Observations later were that he could not have waited for them to come out, as the door was broken in. The raiders are declared to have met De King at the door, felling him with blows on the head. Their explanation of the shooting of Mrs. De King was that "she must have been in the line of fire."

"Attorney Robert A. Milroy, formerly an assistant United States district attorney, who lives in Aurora, reported later that he was called on the telephone by Mrs. De King, who was pleading frantically for help of some kind.

"'I heard her calling "help," and then I heard what sounded like a shot,' he said. 'Then came a scream and the wire went dead. I couldn't get any response, so I hurried over there.'

"It was when his mother fell, the raiders related, that the boy, Gerald, took part. Seeing his mother shot down and probably dead, and his father stretched out on the floor, he picked up a revolver and shot Deputy Sheriff Smith in the leg.

"They took Mrs. De King to the St. Charles Hospital in Aurora, but she was dead when the automobile arrived there. The husband, too, was taken to the hospital, revived, and then thrown into a jail to await questioning by State's Attorney Carbary.

"Attorney Milroy found the place vacant. He made inquiry about the boy and was told Gerald had been taken to the home of his uncle, Peter De King, who lives in Aurora.

"Peter De King said he had been called to the home after the first visit of the three deputy sheriffs and was present when the six returned with their gas bombs and their guns. He had his nephew at his home but a few minutes when deputy sheriffs came and took the boy to the prosecutor's office for questioning.

"Assistant State's Attorney Shults, who ordered the raid, said the De King home had been a speakeasy for two years. Neighbors said they did not know it as such. Shults said that soon after Carbary became State's attorney last December he raided the oil station operated by De King and found 60 or 70 pints of whisky there and that at that time De King was fined $250.

"Shults claimed that he had recently secured evidence of sales of liquor at the place and that he had obtained a warrant. The De King brothers say they were not told of a warrant, nor did they see one.

"Other attorneys said it has been easy to get search warrants in Kane County recently. Where formerly it was almost impossible to get a warrant to search a private home at night, under the prohibition law it is easy, one judge's signature being sufficient, where formerly two judges had to sign to make it effective.

"A late statement coming from Carbary's office was that Smith went to the De King home about 9.45 o'clock to serve the warrant and that he obtained entrance and that Gerald, the only son, went upstairs and woke his father and, telling him of the deputy sheriff's presence, De King came down, Smith reported to Carbary, and drove him out of the house with a shotgun.

"'Then Smith went back to town and got reinforcements, bullet-proof vests, machine guns, shotguns, and gas bombs,' Assistant Shults declared. 'Returning, he stationed men at the front and rear and forced his way into the house.

"'De King met him at the door with two guns. Smith hit him over the head and he fell, his guns flying to each side of him. Mrs. De King stooped over to pick up one of her husband's guns, and Smith opened up on her. Then the boy picked up the other gun and shot Smith, breaking his right leg.'

"The prosecuting officials hesitated to declare that Smith was right in firing at a woman. They said he had been considered as a level-headed man, a good enforcement officer. He has led many raids since Carbary was elected on a platform of prohibition enforcement.

"Charles Abbott had been State's attorney of the county for many years, and he openly proclaimed his objection to prohibition enforcement. His county was liberal, he said, and he did not believe in enforcement, and there was none until after Carbary defeated him in the primary of a year ago. Carbary started raiding even before he assumed his office, and Kane County residents say he has practically dried up what formerly was an oasis."

It is at once apparent that this news story makes no use of the facts developed in the official examination conducted by the State's attorney of Kane County. It does, however, mention certain sources of information—the deputy sheriffs, Smith, neighbors, Milroy, Peter De King, Shults, "other attorneys," and "Carbary's office." Yet study of the quotations attributed to these sources quickly shows that they could not have been responsible for many of the statements given in the Tribune. Here are at least seven items that are obviously misreported:

1. The statement accredited to Smith that he led the deputies at the time of their first visit to the De King home. Smith was not present on that visit, as everyone connected with the affair has always stated and testified.

2. The statement accredited to Smith that the deputies were met at the door by De King. All statements and testimony by all participants have united in saying that De King was upstairs, supposedly asleep, when the deputies first arrived.

3. The statement, apparently accredited to Smith, that on the second visit he called to those inside the house to surrender. Neither the deputies nor any of the other witnesses has ever mentioned such a call.

4. The throwing of the mustard-gas bomb by Smith as a preliminary attack. The bomb—it was a tear-gas bomb of the type generally used by police—was not thrown by Smith and was not thrown until much later in the proceedings. Deputy Treadwell, who threw it, avowed the act and its purpose from the start.

5. The statement accredited to Shults, or "Carbary's office," that Smith was present on the first attempt to serve the warrant. Both Shults and all other members of the State's attorney's staff knew from the first that this was not so.

6. The statement attributed to Carbary that De King used a shotgun to drive away the deputies. The deputies knew well what De King used and it was no shotgun.

7. The statement attributed to Shults that De King met Smith at the door at the time of the second raid. De King never saw Smith; all the deputies and De King maintained that from the start.

Much more important than these mistakes in details, however, was the failure to include, anywhere in the story, any intimation that the first shooting of the night had been done by De King at the time of the first visit by three deputies. This fact, although clearly stated in the Aurora Daily News-Beacon in its first issue following the tragedy, was not reported in the Chicago press until it made up a part of the testimony at the coroner's inquest. Surely, in seeking to understand what happened at the De King home on the night of March 25, the public was entitled to know that the officers of the law were confronting an armed man who had not only threatened to shoot, but had actually shot on one occasion that night.

It is perhaps fair to the Herald-Examiner to say that, although its report followed in the main the lines of the Tribune story, there were several minor points in which it was more accurate—such as in correctly stating the age of the boy—and two pertinent facts were more adequately treated:

1. "Earlier in the evening he (De King) had succeeded in driving the men outside at the point of a pistol." This is certainly nearer to giving a correct understanding of what happened at the time of the first visit by the deputies, although it, too, is silent on De King's shooting.

2. "With a scream Mrs. De King ran forward and snatched one of the guns from the floor, according to Smith. As she was rising, thrusting the weapon toward Smith, he fired. She died instantly." This is substantially Smith's testimony and had an important bearing in relation to his plea of self-defense. It was buried near the end of the Herald-Examiner's story, but it was there.

III. THE MANUFACTURE OF A MYTH

With such initial reports planted in the public mind—a peaceful woman shot while at her telephone by brutal deputies invading a quiet home—it is of interest to see how this mythical version of the De King tragedy was developed by the Tribune and its Hearst-owned allies of the Chicago press, and how impotent the two evening newspapers which are in sympathy with law enforcement were to stem the tide of popular passion.

The tragedy occurred on the night of March 25. On the afternoon of the next day the Aurora Daily Beacon-News printed its 3-column story, which contained every important fact, and was obviously designed to set the whole case before the Aurora public without partisanship. Not a Chicago paper reproduced this local report, neither were its facts used to any great extent in the Chicago press.

The two Chicago evening papers which may be accounted as dry—the Post is avowedly dry and the News is at least fully committed to the enforcement of the law—tried to deal with the tragedy by minimizing its importance. Evidently it did not occur to them that the reports in the morning papers might be distorted. They therefore adopted the newspaper device of putting the story on inside pages and under single-column headlines. They maintained this policy until the coroner's jury recommended that Deputy Smith be held to the grand jury for manslaughter. After that the pressure became too heavy and the De King case moved to their front pages.

In the meantime, however, the morning papers went about the task of building up a romantic character for the De Kings, and especially for the De King boy, who had shot Deputy Smith. Within a few days the condition of Smith's wound had grown so grave that his life was despaired of, but this fact was scarcely noted in the Chicago press. The Tribune led in the effort to present the De King boy as a prodigy of modest valor. On the morning after the publication of the full facts in the Aurora newspaper, instead of presenting those facts in modification of its original report, the Tribune used this banner headline across its front page: "Son Tells How Drys Killed." Under this there followed an example of supersob writing, of which these opening paragraphs are a fair sample:

"As dusk fell across the Fox River at Aurora last night Gerald De King, 12 years old, who on Monday night wounded a deputy sheriff after he had seen a man knock down his father and shoot his mother to death in the kitchen of their home, sat alone with his father in a darkened room at the home of an uncle.

"Outside along the river front his four stocky De King uncles, known, with his father, as the "fearless De King boys," who have grown up in Aurora and have families of their own, patrolled up and down before the house. For a mile and a half incensed home owners along Aurora Road, neighbors and friends of the mother, whose life ended in a round of shotgun slugs fired in the name of prohibition, walked along the pavement and stood in groups talking of the slaying.

"Inside the uncle's home, when his aunt switched on the light, Gerald arose and with dignity stood looking at his visitors. A slim lad, fair, with blue eyes, dressed in the same sweater and knickers he was wearing when the dry raiders broke into the house Monday night. He was quiet. Faint red rims about his eyes were the only evidences of his own emotion, but he did not remove his hand from the shoulder of his father, who, thick set like his brothers, his bruised head circled with bandages, lay upon a couch."

The story continued in this same vein, most of it in the form of direct quotation on the part of Gerald De King. The crux of the matter was given in this form:

"I knew the other officers, but I didn't know this one. They said his name was Smith. He knocked his gun over dad's head, and he fell down like he was dead, and then this same fellow shot mother at the telephone. She was sitting there, and she pitched forward, crying. One hand kept holding onto the table. I couldn't stand any more and I got dad's gun off the floor and fired."

Seeing a chance to capitalize the event for its own glory, the Tribune likewise started a fund to provide an education for the De King boy. The fact dropped from view that the boy's father is not in straitened circumstances, and that some of his four uncles are reputed to be exceedingly well to do, which would seem to make it likely that he would be given by his own family all the education he desired. The collection was carried on as a daily feature for several weeks, reaching the total of $1,948.12 on April 19, which is the last accounting noticed.

IV. THE DE KING RECORD

In the meantime, however, some of the facts concerning De King's past record were coming out. Needless to say, they did not appear in the Chicago morning newspapers that were committed to depicting the De Kings as martyrs to dry ruthlessness and bigotry. But the dry evening papers made passing mention of the raid on the De King filling station in December, and its outcome. And on March 29 the Carroll County Mirror-Democrat printed a complete story of the arrest of De King for bootlegging in the town of Lanark, his conviction, his sentence of $500 fine and 90 days in jail, and his serving of that sentence. The sheriff of Carroll County, recalling the incident, was quoted as testifying to the good qualities of Mrs. De King, who visited her husband during his term in jail, but speaking of De King himself as a "hard case."

Except for a passing reference in the Herald-Examiner, this episode in De King's past found no reference in the Chicago papers, either wet or dry, until it came out in connection with his appearance before the grand jury, approximately a month later. Then it was printed that he had also been convicted and fined for a liquor offense by the Federal court in Chicago. Why the dry newspapers of Chicago made no use of these facts during the time when public opinion was forming in the early days of the case remains a mystery.

The verdict of the coroner's jury, returned on April 2, recommended that Deputy Smith be held for manslaughter. This verdict was largely a result of the testimony of the De King boy, whose version of the affair given before the coroner's jury followed closely that in the Chicago morning papers, rather than that which he had given the night of the tragedy.

Then followed an interim period. During this, the close connection of De King with the illicit liquor trade was becoming more and more clear. The course followed by the Tribune and echoed in the other wet newspapers was therefore to direct attention away from De King himself and to center on (1) the credibility of the affidavit by Fairchild, on the strength of which the search warrant had been issued; and (2) the qualification of State's Attorney Carbary for taking part in the grand jury examination. A tentative attempt was also made to cast doubt on the legality of the warrant which the deputies were attempting to serve when threatened by De King, but this was soon dropped.

The helplessness of the evening papers before this treatment of the case by their morning contemporaries was illustrated during this period by their editorial pages. Thus the News said editorially: "Displays of reckless violence in the name of the law tend strongly to negative the beneficial effects of intelligent law enforcement." And the Post, which conducts a distinguished and aggressively dry editorial page, said: "Whatever the truth may be as to the allegation that De King was armed, the fact is that the only violence was employed by the deputies up to the moment when a frightened child seized a gun and used it effectively. * * * If the real lawbreakers were the supposed law enforcers in the De King raid, they should pay the penalty." It has already been shown that the premise on which this editorial rested was erroneous.

Yet while these dry newspapers were writing in this editorial vein and were again returning the De King story to their inside pages or refraining from mentioning it altogether—thus leaving the field to the Tribune and the Hearst press—the facts as to De King's past record and as to the events of the night of March 25 were easily available. The ministers of Kane County had no difficulty in getting at them. The Elgin, Geneva, and Aurora associations formed a special committee which adopted and gave to the press on April 12 a resolution. The important part of that resolution appeared in the Christian Century for April 24:

"In view of the fact that De King had a court record as a bootlegger and has served time, that he resisted the efforts of the officers of the law to serve the search warrants and threatened the lives of the officers, discharging a gun as a warning, and that Roy Smith, the officer who is said to have shot Mrs. De King, acted because he believed his life was threatened, and that the newspapers have not published all the facts, and that some have willfully distorted the facts, we therefore appeal to the general public to wait until the facts are disclosed at the trial before passing judgment."

Now this is the amazing thing about this resolution: Although it contained allegations of fact that certainly constituted news, and although it was sent to all newspapers, it was not mentioned in any part of the Chicago press except the Tribune. That paper made it the text for an editorial, Justice in Kane County, which appeared on April 22, in which the whole statement of the ministers was held up to ridicule in this fashion:

"The 'facts' alleged by the ministers are stated with all the authority which adheres to men of their calling, but not one of the alleged facts has been proved and no evidence is cited in support of the allegations. The evidence adduced at and before the inquest does not bear out the account of the killing which the ministers have declared to be the true one."

At the grand jury hearing, every one of the facts presented in the ministers' resolution was substantiated.

V. BEFORE THE GRAND JURY

The case finally came to its climax before the Kane County grand jury. There it is not too much to say that the picture of a peaceful, law-abiding home, ruthlessly invaded by deputies riding roughshod over civil rights, and shooting down a defenseless mother as she tried to telephone for help, dissolved into thin air. There were numbers of witnesses who appeared to testify to buying liquor at the De King house over a long period of time. It was shown that De King went about armed; that his house was a veritable arsenal. It was shown that the deputies were merely attempting to do their duty; that De King resisted them with arms; fired; defied them to read their warrant or to arrest him. It was shown, both by the testimony of eyewitnesses, by that of the doctor who conducted the first post-mortem examination, and by X-ray photographs that Mrs. De King could not have been sitting at the telephone when shot; that she must have been either standing or stooping. It was shown that the boy's story had undergone a vital change between the night of the shooting and the inquest. It was shown that De King's story included events that happened when he was admittedly lying unconscious on the floor.

As a result, the jury not only refused to indict Deputy Smith, but it was generally reported that they would have indicted De King but for the personal advice of the State's attorney not to do so, on the ground that the death of his wife had overshadowed everything else. An indictment for perjury was returned against Fairchild. The case against him seems to hinge on the question as to whether liquor purchased through an agent can be sworn to as liquor personally purchased.

The treatment of the grand jury hearing by the Tribune was interesting from a journalistic standpoint. On the day before the hearing opened there appeared the editorial already mentioned, "Justice in Kane County." On the day the hearing opened the story was given the front-page banner "Urge dry killing true bills." But as the hearing proceeded and the trend of the testimony went more and more evidently against the interpretation which the paper had sought to establish, the story retreated to the inside pages. There on May 1, under a modest single-column head on page 3, the reader could, if he looked carefully enough, find the outcome of the whole thing: "Indict dry snooper in Aurora case; dry raiders O. K.—De King punished enough," Carbary says. On the next day the Tribune paid the case an editorial farewell: "Another shame for Illinois.—Kane County, by the conspiracy of its moralists and officials to prevent justice from having its day in court for the murder of a woman, takes on the color of Williamson in the map of Illinois." Curiously, this was precisely the observation credited to the Hon. Michael Igoe by the Herald-Examiner. Mr. Igoe is a member of the committee named by the wet speaker of the Illinois lower house to investigate the Aurora tragedy. (On April 3 the Ogle County Reporter quoted another member of the same investigating committee as holding that the citizens of Aurora would have been justified in hanging the deputies to the nearest light post.)

VI. OBSERVATIONS

As one travels about the region in which this tragedy occurred and sees how easily available all the materials were for a complete story of what happened, with its full background, it is impossible not to ask questions—questions such as these:

Why was so little made of the character of the neighborhood in which the tragedy occurred?

Why was the fact of De King's shooting on the first visit of the deputies so long in coming out?

Why was the fact of De King's previous convictions for bootlegging so long in coming out?

Why was the discrepancy between the boy's first story, given at the examination of March 25 and 26, and his story at the inquest not mentioned in the press?

Why was the serious, almost fatal, nature of the wound sustained by Deputy Smith not given prominence in the press?

Why was the resolution adopted by the ministers ignored?

Why were the facts in that resolution not used by the press?

And the list might be lengthened.

Again, a study of this case makes clear the disproportionate influence which newspapers first reporting a case have in fixing the public mind concerning that case. The De King shooting "broke" in the morning newspapers. Both the Chicago morning newspapers are wet. Both were able to give the story a certain slant—brutality by police officers leading up to an inexcusable shooting—which it retains in the public mind to this day. Had the story "broken" in the evening papers, it is safe to surmise that the armed resistance to officers, the De King threats and shooting, and the attempt of Mrs. De King to seize a revolver would have been given enough importance so that the public reaction would have been quite different. As it was, the idea of a mother, killed while seated at her telephone, was established. Although the testimony of the De King doctor, of the X-ray plates, and of most of the witnesses later disproved this story, the story was seized on early enough and emphasized loudly enough so that the dry evening newspapers of Chicago, which took up the case with evident reluctance, were finally forced to give it great prominence and make it a subject for editorial warnings against official lawlessness. So far as the raid itself was concerned, when the matter was presented to the grand jury, the slightest evidence of such official lawlessness vanished. This distorted frame, in which the whole picture was set, was largely owing to the fact of the first reports appearing in the wet morning papers without accompanying correction.

A little reflection will show the extent to which the dry evening newspapers of Chicago felt themselves at the mercy of the wet newspapers in which the original reports of the case had appeared. Those reports had seized upon the shooting of a mother as their emotional basis. According to them, it was not the wife of a man who was resisting arrest by force of arms, and who was herself reaching for a weapon, who had been killed; it was a mother. With this idea once established, no evening newspaper could have supported the deputies without laying itself open to the charge of condoning the murder of a mother. And that would have involved shouldering a popular onus which no newspaper would be willing lightly to incur.

Finally, it should be said that it is not the purpose of this study to detract in any way from the sense of profound shock and regret which the community has felt at the death of Mrs. De King. Whatever her connections with her husband's liquor operations—and they may have been very slight—no community wants to see its laws enforced at any such price in human life. It is the testimony of the deputy that he fired at Mrs. De King's hand, which he testified had already gripped a revolver, and which her son declared was within 6 inches of the gun. The grand jury of Kane County believed that the deputy was justified in thinking his life in danger, and in firing as he did. Whether others will reach that same conclusion can not be foreseen. It seems established beyond reasonable doubt that on the night of March 25, the deputies—

Tried to execute a regularly drawn warrant on Joseph De King;

Were threatened with death by him;

Were driven off with firearms;

Were shown that his firearms were in working order by seeing them fired;

Returned to complete their duty in the face of De King's threat;

Tried to overcome De King's resistance, and did, without resort to shooting;

Shot when one of their number considered his life in peril.

In view of all this, what has the intelligent newspaper-reading public to say as to the character of a journalism that is responsible for such a newspaper picture as was given of this tragedy?

And what does this example of journalism suggest as to the credibility of the wet press when dealing with any event in which the operation of a law it is bound to discredit is involved?

FARM RELIEF—STATEMENT OF PRESIDENT HOOVER ON SENATE VOTE

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD a statement of the President on the vote on the farm bill in the Senate yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TEXT OF PRESIDENT'S STATEMENT ON FARM RELIEF CRITICIZING SENATE FOR VOTE ON THE RELIEF MEASURE

WASHINGTON, June 11.—President Hoover's statement on to-day's vote in the Senate on the farm relief bill follows:

"The vote in the Senate to-day at best adds further delay to farm relief, and may gravely jeopardize the enactment of legislation. In rejecting the report of the Senate and House conferees, which report was agreed to by Members of both parties, the Senate has in effect rejected a bill which provides for the creation of the most important agency ever set up in the Government to assist an industry—the proposed Federal farm board, endowed with extraordinary authority to reorganize the marketing system in the interest of the farmer; to stabilize his industry and to carry out these arrangements in conjunction with farm cooperatives, with a capital of $500,000,000 as an earnest of the seriousness of the work. It is a proposal for steady upbuilding of agriculture onto firm foundations of equality with other industry and would remove the agricultural problem from politics and place it in the realm of business.

"The conferees' bill carried out the plan advanced in the campaign in every particular. Every other plan of agricultural relief was rejected in that campaign, and this plan was one of the most important issues in the principal agricultural States and was given as a mandate by an impressive majority in these States. Subsidies were condemned in the course of the campaign, and the so-called debenture plan—that is, the giving of subsidies on exports—was not raised by either party, nor by its proponents.

"No serious attempt has been made to meet the many practical objections I and leaders in Congress have advanced against this proposal. It was not accepted by the House of Representatives and has been overwhelmingly condemned by the press, and is opposed by many leading farm organizations. For no matter what the theory of the export subsidy may be, in the practical world we live in it will not bring equality, but will bring further disparity to agriculture. It will bring immediate profits to some speculators and disaster to the farmer.

"I earnestly hope that the Congress will enact the conferees' report and allow us to enter upon the building of a sound agricultural system rather than to longer deprive the farmer of the relief which he sorely needs."

KANAWHA RIVER BRIDGE, WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 1452) to authorize the State of West Virginia to acquire a bridge over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek, in said State, and to acquire the right to construct a bridge over said river at or near St. Albans, in said State, and I submit a report thereon (No. 31). The Senators from West Virginia consider this matter very urgent and important, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, after the word "bridge," to insert "being"; in line 6, after the word "at," to strike out "or near"; on page 2, line 1, after the name "Secretary of War," to strike out the word "on" and insert "under dates of"; in line 2, after the figures "1928," to insert "and April 23, 1928, respectively"; in line 8, after the word "at," to strike out "or near"; in line 15, after the name "Secretary of War," to strike out the word "on" and insert "under dates of"; in the same line, after the numerals "1928," to insert "and May 19, 1928, respectively"; in line 23, after the word "the," to insert "Chief of Engineers and the"; and in line 22, before the word "before," to strike out "and Chief of Engineers," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of West Virginia, by its State bridge commission, be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire, maintain, and operate the bridge being erected over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek and the approaches thereto in said State, and that said bridge shall be deemed a lawful structure if constructed in accordance with the plans and location approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War under dates of April 20, 1928, and April 23, 1928, respectively, and in accordance with an act approved May 1, 1928, authorizing the construction of said bridge by the Cabin Creek Kanawha Bridge Co., its successors and assigns.

SEC. 2. The State of West Virginia, by its State bridge commission, is authorized to acquire the right to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge over the Kanawha River at St. Albans in said State and the approaches thereto under an act approved May 1, 1928, authorizing the St. Albans Nitro Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate said bridge, and said bridge shall be a lawful structure if constructed in accordance with the plans and location approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War under dates of May 14, 1928, and May 19, 1928, respectively, and in accordance with the last-mentioned act.

SEC. 3. Both of said bridges shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, other than those requiring the approval of plans, specifications, and location by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of construction.

SEC. 4. The times for commencing and completing the construction of the said bridge at or near St. Albans are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 5. If tolls are charged for the use of said bridges, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridges under economical management and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid by the State for the bridge at or near Cabin Creek and the cost to the State of constructing the bridge at or near St. Albans, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion of the bridge at or near St. Albans. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, the two bridges shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridges and their approaches under economical management.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the State of West Virginia to acquire a bridge over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek in said State and to acquire the right to construct a bridge over said river at St. Albans in said State."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement and to ask unanimous consent to have an article printed in the RECORD.

It has been very gratifying to all those who are interested to note the rapid increase in the sentiment for world peace and disarmament. The way the great nations of the world have ratified the so-called Kellogg peace pact can not but prove the sentiment for world peace throughout the world.

The recent election in Great Britain, the campaign preceding which was waged largely on world peace and disarmament, can not but show how the sentiment in Great Britain is on world peace.

Our treaty for the renunciation of war has been adhered to by the nations. That treaty, like all treaties of whatever nature, whether they tend toward war or peace, is a scrap of paper unless it is backed by an intelligent public opinion. The peace treaty is a solemn pledge to renounce war for all purposes, but to give full legal sanction to the expression of sentiment back of this treaty we must amend the Constitution.

I have reintroduced Senate Joint Resolution 100 of the Sixty-ninth Congress and Senate Joint Resolution 1 of the Seventieth Congress. It is now Senate Joint Resolution 45, and provides for the outlawing of all war by the United States. It will bring our Constitution in line with the spirit of the solemn pledge we have given to other nations that we will not use war to settle our controversies.

It is a definite, uncompromising repudiation of war by the United States. It makes war an outlaw, depriving it, the enemy of law, of all legal sanction and privilege, of all the protection and support which our Constitution now gives.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD Senate Joint Resolution 45 and also a statement by the Women's Peace Union, of 39 Pearl Street, New York City, pertaining to this proposed amendment.

There being no objection, the joint resolution and the statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 45 (introduced in the Senate by Mr. FRAZIER, May 16, 1929)

Proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting war

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid, to all intents and purposes, as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. War for any purpose shall be illegal, and neither the United States nor any State, Territory, association, or persons subject to its jurisdiction shall prepare for, declare, engage in, or carry on war or other armed conflict, expedition, invasion, or undertaking within or without the United States, nor shall any funds be raised, appropriated, or expended for such purpose.

"SEC. 2. All provisions of the Constitution and of the articles in addition thereto and amendment thereof which are in conflict with or inconsistent with this article are hereby rendered null and void and of no effect.

"SEC. 3. The Congress shall have power to enact appropriate legislation to give effect to this article."

STATEMENT OF WOMEN'S PEACE UNION

Senate Joint Resolution 45 is an amendment intended as an immediate and complete repudiation of war by the United States. It would embody in our fundamental law our conviction that violence and bloodshed are always wrong in principle and disastrous in practice.

All understand that the Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to the Constitution. It is our contention that it is necessary now, without delay, for Congress to propose this amendment, for, so long as we give legal sanction to war and prepare for war, we are in constant danger of being committed to war, even without due process of law.

In the treaty for the renunciation of war we have made a solemn pledge never to use war. The treaty reads as follows:

"ARTICLE I

"The high contracting parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies, and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another.

"ARTICLE II

"The high contracting parties agree that the settlement or solution of all disputes or conflicts of whatever nature or of whatever origin they may be, which may arise among them, shall never be sought except by pacific means."

We say, then, that war must be prohibited. The Women's Peace Union is convinced that there can be no compromise with war; it can not be reformed or controlled; it can not be disciplined into decency or codified into common sense; for war is the slaughter of human beings, temporarily regarded as enemies, on as large a scale as possible.

William Lloyd Garrison, speaking of war, said:

"It is not an abstraction which admits of doubt or uncertainty, but as tangible as bombs, cannon, mangled corpses, smoldering ruins, desolated towns and villages, rivers of blood. It is substantially the same in all ages and can not change its moral features. To trace it in all its ramifications is not a difficult matter. In fact, nothing is more terribly distinct than its career; it leaves its impress on everything it touches, whether physical, mental, or moral. Why, then, not look it in the face? Why look anywhere else?"

All war involves killing and maiming, hating and lying, violent coercion of body and soul. From these evils war can not be freed. They are of its essence. This is true no matter what the causes of the war may be; no matter what results it produces; no matter what provocation any participant may have had. For no circumstances can alter the intrinsic nature of war, its deceit and treachery, its wanton cruelty, its shameful compulsion of mind and conscience, its ruthless betrayal of courage and loyalty, its savage mutilation of youth and strength. While war is, these things must be.

All those who participate in war or in any way support war must be willing to destroy the lives of others; must be willing, as a means to this end, to commit, or at least to sponsor and encourage, every atrocity dictated by military necessity.

As long as the unspeakable criminality of war is sanctioned and provided for by the Government, for which we are responsible and of which we are a part, we can not be decent people, nor can we become a civilized nation. To be decent we must be healthy and normal in mind and morals. To be civilized we must abandon the ways of savagery. Decency is not compatible with the will to kill or with the deliberate preparation for killing, nor is civilization possible where organized mass murder is at all times either occurring or being actively prepared for by important departments of the Government.

Now, we claim and we believe that the abolition of war does not call for the millennium in respect to intelligence, culture, and morals. It represents merely the minimum requirements of decency and civilization. We therefore have decided that we must prohibit war.

Our next point is that a constitutional amendment is necessary in order to prohibit war, because war is now sanctioned by the Constitution of the United States, which provides that the Congress shall have power to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy.

There is no limitation in the Constitution as to the purposes for which war may be declared. A war of conquest is legal, a war for any purpose whatever, or for no purpose, is legal if Congress declares the war. There is no restriction in the Constitution as to the methods of warfare. Tanks are legal, poison gas is legal, torpedoes are legal, and I suppose any modern atrocity of science will be legal if we find ourselves in another war.

Because of powers implied from the express powers of Congress we have found that the conscription act that makes men fight in violation of their conscience, in violation of their intelligence, is legal; the espionage act, which encourages neighbor to spy upon neighbor and friend upon friend, which punishes any criticism of war once war is declared, no matter how well merited or how intelligent that criticism may be, is legal. All this is part of the fundamental law of the Nation, a Nation which calls itself decent, civilized, and democratic.

I think perhaps I need go no farther in this discussion, having brought out these facts. The Constitution provides, however, that the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and that a well-regulated militia is guaranteed to the States. The war powers that are granted or secured by the Constitution must remain in the Government until the Constitution is amended. There is no legal process except amendment by which war can be made illegal. An act of Congress can not change the Constitution; therefore the Congress can not take from itself and from the President the war powers granted by the Constitution. There they were put in 1789, and there they will stay until we amend the Constitution, although none of us now alive had anything to do with giving war powers to the Government.

Treaties with other countries can not take from the Government its war powers. Treaties can not change the Constitution. Any treaty can be nullified by an act of Congress of subsequent date, in so far as the two are in conflict.

This means that our treaty for the renunciation of war, known as the Kellogg peace pact, could be rendered void by an act of Congress declaring war.

It is evident, then, that no superficial method of outlawing war can be effective. The seeds of war are embedded deep in our Constitution. They must be eradicated before we can take the legal sanction from war.

Our first point is that war should be prohibited.

Our second point is that a constitutional amendment is necessary in order to prohibit war.

Our third point is that the United States can not hope to induce other nations to repudiate war while its own fundamental law sanctions and provides for war.

Our position is that international law will change and international machinery to prevent war will become effective when the laws and customs of the nations change. The adoption of this amendment will change our fundamental law and put us in a position to urge other nations to follow our example. Until we have taken this clear-cut, definitive action, we can not expect to influence the people of other countries. For, so long as we maintain a Navy and an Army, manufacture poison gas, and appropriate millions for preparedness, we can not expect the people of other countries to believe that we have repudiated war, or even that we admit it to be an unpardonable folly, a vile outrage and crime against humanity. The Kellogg peace pact makes it a crime against international law.

We do not need a substitute for war any more than we need a substitute for smallpox or cannibalism. A substitute for war would be simply another method of imposing the will of one nation upon another without regard to logic, equity, or human welfare.

It may be irrelevant at this point, but I wish to make it very clear we do not see any logic in the argument that war can be abolished only when a guaranty of safety under all circumstances can be given to all citizens of the United States. We take the position in our society and in our law that stealing is wrong. We do not guarantee that anyone who refrains from stealing will always have plenty of money. On the contrary, we say that he must starve and let his children starve rather than steal. It seems to us logical to take the same position about killing. Killing is wrong. We do not have to guarantee that all those who refrain from killing are always going to be safe under all circumstances. And I do not wish, in presenting this parallel, to give the impression that we think our present militaristic order does guarantee any safety whatever.

Our military prophets have pointed out that in the next war our cities may be destroyed, our lands laid waste, by the bombs of the enemy, no matter how many bombing planes we may have. We wish to challenge the tradition that armed forces do actually protect our lives; that the United States has used and will use armed forces only when our lives are actually threatened. Our position is, however, that we are opposed to war, even if war could accomplish what it pretends to accomplish, because it is a wrong method, and we do not believe the end justifies the means.

Beyond question we do need a principle of this type on which to base our relations with all peoples and all countries. We need also a method, in harmony with that principle, by which we can achieve our just ends; make secure our lives and liberties. This amendment opens the way to both the principle and the method. The principle is that human life should be held sacred. The method is nonresistance or nonviolent resistance; that is, the rejection of force and violence in favor of the application of the powers of the mind and the will to do justice.

Every normal action rests on the assumption that life is valuable, that it should be held sacred. It is in the interest of life, its preservation, its intensification, and its beauty that we till the fields, make clothing, raise buildings and decorate them, rear children and educate them, equip hospitals, train nurses, spend devoted lives in laboratories, that we practice and encourage the arts of music, painting, and sculpture. Any premeditated destruction of life, any deliberate impairment of the physical and mental completeness of an individual, is an abnormal act.

A government which learns to respect life will be a sane government, realizing the folly and wickedness of permitting, much less forcing, its citizens to indulge in the abnormality of war. It will know that life, in itself valuable, can be made rich and beautiful. It will understand that its citizens can never reach the highest point of development unless they abandon such ugly practices as killing, and the violation of the personality of others, and concentrate rather on creative, constructive activities. That is the kind of government we want, and that is the kind that we women intend to have. We demand that the people of the United States shall have the right to say whether they wish the war powers now in the Government to remain there or whether they wish to try the experiment—and frankly it is an experiment—of a government resting on the consent of its own citizens, the good will and trust of the people of other countries. If we have confidence in our Government and our national principles, surely we can believe that they will stand on their own merits. This amendment is right in principle, and we believe that what is right in principle must be expedient in practice. Nevertheless, convinced as we are that war is wrong, we repeat that we are not willing to repudiate war only if and when it can be guaranteed to us that there is no risk in so doing. That to us seems contemptible.

For when has the United States put safety first? What is the use of our wealth and strength, the individual spirit we have always fostered, if we can not do what we all know in our hearts is the right thing to do?

War is a crime. We have condemned by international treaty recourse to war and given our word that we renounce war as an instrument of national policy.

Why should we continue in slavery to the idea that periodically we must commit that crime? In the last analysis no one can make us do this but ourselves, just as no one can free us from war but ourselves.

America was not discovered by a man who was afraid. The Pilgrims were not afraid. William Penn and the Quakers were not afraid. The men and women who went West in the prairie wagons were not afraid. They all took chances, surmounted difficulties, risked their all for the common cause. Surely, we can count on this same spirit to-day. It is our great national asset. We must not stifle it in fear, hate, and greed now that the time for the great adventure has come. For this is our hour. We must lead. Other nations will follow.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, in the discussion this morning of the subjects which might come before the Senate at the present session the matter of flood control was mentioned as one which might be considered. I do not desire to take the time of the Senate now to discuss that question, but I desire to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the Engineering News-Record of May 23, 1929, from which I read the following:

Certain facts of wide implication are pertinently connected with the subject of the Missouri flood way, to which part of the present issue of Engineering News-Record is devoted.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Engineering News-Record, May 23, 1929]

SERIOUS ASPECTS OF THE CAIRO FLOOD PROBLEM

Certain facts of wide implication are pertinently connected with the subject of the Missouri flood way, to which part of the present issue of Engineering News-Record is devoted. The guarded statements of the article which we publish may not appear to picture a grave situation, but careful reading will disclose the contrary. The construction of the flood way is to be immediate, bids having been called for May 22. Should any reader living far from Missouri think the flood way none of his concern, he might recall that every engineer is concerned to the extent of at least $50 (a minimum estimate of what every family in the Nation must contribute to carry out the Mississippi River flood control), and that the very soundness of engineering method along the Mississippi and of public works administration in general is intimately involved.

The Birds Point-New Madrid setback, or Missouri flood way, was devised to protect Cairo from floods. It is proper to ask whether it will do so. It gives Cairo's levees a 12-inch freeboard, and whoever has seen wind-blown waves lapping over a levee at even 3-foot freeboard may easily interpret this 1 foot in terms of safety. The flood way gives this qualified degree of safety only in case of a "probable" extreme flood, not the possible extreme; and we may properly bear in mind that the unpredicted difference between what is thought probable and what is possible has often brought disaster to the Mississippi Valley, most recently in the great flood of two years ago, which laughed to scorn all the successively higher levee grades established in the past. It seems, then, that Cairo's levees will not be made safe by the flood way.

Quite apart from levees, Cairo's main danger lies in the inflow of water through its low ground, threatening destructive sand boils. Even this spring's so far mild floods have produced dangerous boils. The flood way will give no protection whatever from this hazard. If ever the hazard is elliminated by filling the city area, the flood way will have outlived its main usefulness.

Thus, safety is not fully attained even if the flood way operates as planned, and, of course, still less if it fails to do so. There is real likelihood of the latter contingency. Operation is based on a guessed-at flow factor through the broken, wooded country of the flood way, and on the hoped-for sufficiently wide washing out of the lowered levees at the head of the flood way, the so-called fuse plugs. In other words, artificial crevasse formation is depended on to bring the water into and out of the flood way, and the indeterminate but very low velocity of flow through wooded bottom lands is depended on to divert a volume large enough to lower the water plane within an accuracy of 12 inches. Unless these two guessed-at factors work out, the Cairo levees are overtopped.

The Cairo problem is intricate. So difficult was it regarded by the Mississippi River Commission after the 1927 flood that, while outlining a full project for the protection of the valley, the commission would not make a recommendation for this reach of the river, but advised more thorough study, requiring much longer time. The Chief of Engineers, however, put two weeks of study upon it and decided upon the floodway. It appears, from what is pointed out above, that the commission's attitude was wise.

In the past year, it will be presumed, the project has been thoroughly restudied and the Chief of Engineers' decision confirmed. Also the Jadwin-Jackson-Sturtevant board of review may have scrutinized the problem and verified the correctness of the solution. Unfortunately, neither presumption is true. The board of review admitted that it had not studied the best plan for protecting the valley, as it was directed to do, but had merely compared the Jadwin plan with part of the commission's project, indorsing the Jadwin plan in each point. Such study as has been given to the Missouri flood way during the past year by the field forces is confined to routine detail; the sufficiency or merit of the plan itself has not been reviewed, for the plan was prescribed. This is no reflection on the ability or sincerity of the engineers on the ground, but merely means that they worked under orders—the orders of a rigid military bureaucracy which permitted no excursion beyond the boundaries laid down.

An issue fully as broad as that of the efficacy of the plan is its economic value. What does it cost, compared with what it is intended to save? This also has not been studied. An area as large as a great Federal reclamation project is to be laid waste by the flood way, and most of this area at present is fertile land; but the economic loss of destroying this land and evicting its population has not been placed in the reckoning against other forms of relief for Cairo. In fact, even the cost has not been determined, and such effort as has been made to obtain a valuation of the land takings has been based on methods locally denounced—and apparently with some reason—as something near to sharp practice.

Thus the entire situation with respect to the Missouri flood way is in the highest degree unsatisfactory and regrettable. It can not forward the solution of the Mississippi problem, but it bears the threat of bringing obloquy on those who have dealt with it, and by reflex on other national public works.

For all these reasons the haste in putting the flood way under contract is unseemly. Since it would not be illogical to begin at the mouth of the river and progress upstream in providing increased discharge capacity for floods, time for study of the Cairo problem can readily be obtained. We shall continue to hope that this study will yet be made. If the Army engineers themselves do not reconsider their action, Congress, or even the President, will be warranted in halting the present proceedings.

Mr. HAWES. There appeared in the St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat on Sunday morning, June 9, 1929, an article headed "Dissatisfaction with Army Flood Control Project Expressed by Civilian Engineers," from which I read as follows:

Aside from the immediate concern felt by inhabitants of the region and by those who have a general interest in flood relief, the projected Federal solution of the problem of relieving Cairo, Ill., of the danger of inundation such as has occurred in the past is much discussed by the engineering profession in general.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the St. Louis Daily Globe-Democrat, Sunday morning June 9, 1929]

DISSATISFACTION WITH ARMY FLOOD CONTROL PROJECT EXPRESSED BY CIVILIAN ENGINEERS—FEDERAL PLAN FOR RELIEF AT CAIRO, ILL., REGARDED BY VARIOUS SOCIETIES AND TECHNICAL PUBLICATIONS AS NEITHER FEASIBLE NOR PRACTICAL IN PRESENT FORM—ESPECIALLY APPOINTED BOARD OF REVIEW TO PASS ON BOTH GOVERNMENT AND CIVIL PROPOSALS TO ARRIVE AT BEST METHOD SUGGESTED

Aside from the immediate concern felt by inhabitants of the region and by those who have a general interest in flood relief, the projected Federal solution of the problem of relieving Cairo, Ill., of the danger of inundation such as has occurred in the past is much discussed by the engineering profession in general. And, according to reports made by the American Engineering Council, the superorganization of all the great engineering societies in the United States, and by articles appearing in technical magazines, the Federal plan as projected by United States Army engineers is not regarded as feasible or practical in its present form. An earnest endeavor is being made by various engineering societies to induce the Government to appoint a board of review which shall pass upon the plans submitted both by Army and civilian engineers with a view to arriving at, if possible, the best method by which Cairo may be spared in the future, the problem in that Illinois city being the first to attract the attention of the Flood Control Commission.

Although Cairo is in Illinois, lying in a fringe of levees thrown up against the Mississippi River at its confluence with the Ohio, the problem of flood protection will have to be worked out on the Missouri side of the river due to topographical conditions. Therefore Army engineers some time ago were commissioned to work out a plan of drainage, and under the direction of Chief of Engineers Jadwin the so-called Missouri flood way has been recommended.

SUPPLEMENTARY LEVEE

The plan, in simple words, calls for the building of a flood way from Birds Point, directly across the Mississippi from Cairo, to New Madrid, Mo., a distance by river of approximately 70 miles, but about 35 miles overland. This setback levee would, according to Army engineer plans, carry the bulk of the overflow, but supplementing it would be a fuse-plug levee virtually following the course of the Mississippi but joining the setback levee at New Madrid for final disposition into the Mississippi, the river below New Madrid being deemed able to accommodate the overflow without added threat to residents along its banks.

This is the plan, roughly speaking, and so serious have been the objections to it by the engineering world that the awarding of contracts for actual construction in the Missouri flood way has been temporarily deferred by the Secretary of War, pending a possible review of the situation. One of the chief reasons why action was halted was due to a report recently submitted to the Committee on Flood Control of the House of Representatives by the American Engineering Council. The report stated that it is the belief of the committee that "sufficient study of the engineering and economic phases of flood control on the Mississippi River has not been made to justify the Federal Government in adopting any plan therefor; consequently, it would be a grave mistake to permit the letting of contracts for the construction of the Missouri flood way or any other controversial elements until the engineering practicability and economical feasibility are adequately studied by a nonpartisan and competent board of engineers."

LACK OF CONFIDENCE IN PLAN

"There is in the engineering profession," continues the report, "a marked and general lack of confidence in the plan adopted. Therefore your committee urgently recommends the creation by the Federal Government of a board of review, composed of nonpartisan and competent civilian engineers, with authority to develop the best possible solution of the Mississippi flood-control problem."

Whether such a board will be appointed has not yet been indicated by the authorities at Washington, but meanwhile much light on the subject has been thrown by the Engineering News-Record, probably the most conservative engineering publication in the United States. In its current issue it devotes both editorial and news space to what it terms the "First of the Mississippi Flood Ways, a Safety Valve for Cairo," and in no uncertain terms criticizes the "entire situation with respect to the Missouri flood way as unsatisfactory and regrettable in the highest degree."

"It can not forward the solution of the Mississippi problem," says an editorial, "but it bears the threat of bringing obloquy on those who have dealt with it, and by reflex on other national public works."

Pointing out that the proposed flood way is of interest to all taxpayers and not alone to the inhabitants of the affected area, the editorial continues:

DANGEROUS SAND BOILS

"The Birds Point-New Madrid setback, or Missouri flood way, was devised to protect Cairo from floods. It is proper to ask whether it will do so. It gives Cairo's levees a 12-inch freeboard, and whoever has seen wind-blown waves lapping over a levee at even 3-foot freeboard may easily interpret this 1 foot in terms of safety. The flood way gives this qualifies degree of safety only in case of a 'probable' extreme flood, not the possible extreme; and we may properly bear in mind that the unpredicted difference between what is thought probable and what is possible has often brought disaster to the Mississippi Valley, most recently in the great flood of two years ago, which laughed to scorn all the successively higher levee grades established in the past. It seems, then, that Cairo's levees will not be made safe by the flood way.

"Quite apart from levees, Cairo's main danger lies in the inflow of water through its low ground, threatening destructive sand boils. Even this spring's so far mild floods have produced dangerous boils. The flood way will give no protection whatever from this hazard. If ever the hazard is eliminated by filling the city area, the flood way will have outlived its main usefulness.

"Thus, safety is not fully attained even if the flood way operates as planned, and, of course, still less if it fails to do so. There is real likelihood of the latter contingency. Operation is based on a guessed-at flow factor through the broken, wooded country of the flood way, and on the hoped-for sufficiently wide washing out of the lowered levees at the head of the flood way, the so-called fuse plugs. Unless these two guessed-at factors work out, the Cairo levees are overtopped.

PROBLEM INTRICATE

"The Cairo problem is intricate. This is no reflection on the ability or sincerity of the engineers on the ground, but merely means that they worked under orders—the orders of a rigid military bureaucracy which permitted no excursion beyond the boundaries laid down.

"An issue fully as broad as that of the efficacy of the plan is its economic value: What does it cost compared with what it is intended to save? This also has not been studied. An area as large as a great Federal reclamation project is to be laid waste by the flood way, and most of this area at present is fertile land; but the economic loss of destroying this land and evicting its population has not been placed in the reckoning against other forms of relief for Cairo. In fact, even the cost has not been determined, and such effort as has been made to obtain a valuation of the land takings has been based on methods locally denounced—and apparently with some reason—as something near to sharp practice.

"Thus the entire situation with respect to the Missouri flood way is in the highest degree unsatisfactory and regrettable. It can not forward the solution of the Mississippi problem, but it bears the threat of bringing obloquy on those who have dealt with it and by reflex on other national public works.

"For all these reasons the haste in putting the floodway under contract is unseemly. Since it would not be illogical to begin at the mouth of the river and progress upstream in providing increased discharge capacity for floods, time for study of the Cairo problem can readily be obtained. We shall continue to hope that this study will yet be made. If the Army engineers themselves do not reconsider their action, Congress, or even the President, will be warranted in halting the present proceedings."

The Engineering News-Record also contains an extended article on the Missouri floodway by W. W. De Berard, associate editor, who made an intensive study of the situation on the eve of its proposed construction. Although the article is technical in a sense, it gives a survey of the situation comprehensible even to those who are not engineers.

"At the head of the Mississippi River's alluvial valley lies the city of Cairo, Ill., almost ringed around by the Ohio and the Mississippi Rivers," writes De Berard. "Here centers one of the most difficult and most bitterly disputed elements of the valley's flood protection. The Jadwin plan aims to protect Cairo by a by-pass channel on the west bank. How was it planned and what are the local conditions?

"Basic data for the design of the by-pass, known as the New Madrid flood way, in Missouri were obtained by the engineers of the Mississippi River Commission in surveys of the flood-way area last fall. One of the most controversial features of the whole project, this flood way has engaged the attention of engineers as to its adequacy, of Congressmen and State officials as to its legality, and of politicians as to its expediency. Work on the project has been hurried and bids have been received, although land for the setback levee is still in course of acquirement and information on which to work out a payment basis for flowage rights is still being gathered. The imminent danger to Cairo is the stated reason for this hurry, yet Cairo has been dry for over 700 years and the city's danger is greatest from sand boils through a leaky 'floor.' Boils, as well as caving sewers, developed in the recent mild flood crest, which was 8½ feet below the top of the surrounding levees.

"The officially adopted project calls for a flood way approximately 5 miles wide, from Birds Point, opposite Cairo, to New Madrid, a river distance of 70 miles and a distance of 35 miles along the flood-way axis. It is to have a 'fuse-plug' inlet and outlet through sections of the present levee, which will be truncated to a level 5 feet below the top of the Cairo levees (which are at 60 feet on the Cairo gauge).

"Only meager data were obtainable when the general project was determined upon and aroused criticism. Even after the extensive surveys since made, the people (local residents and many engineers whom they have interested in the situation) are still of the opinion that an economic appraisal and a comprehensive review of the engineering solution are needed, and that these might reveal a far superior plan. Certain it is that no new economic survey was made by the flood-control board of engineers, and the hydraulic assumptions and recommendations seem essentially the same as those of the Chief of Engineer's original report to Congress.

THE PROBLEM

"Cairo lies within a ring of levees. In high-water periods the 16,000 people live in an empty reservoir surrounded by water 15 to 27 feet above its floor. For the future safety of Cairo against overtopping by possible floods of 2,250,000 to 2,400,000 second-feet three remedies are available, (1) raise the levees, (2) raise the entire city area, and (3) lower the flood plane. The last plan was adopted, probably for reasons not all of which can be called engineering. However, few projects are decided entirely from the engineering standpoint. At any rate a plan, this river bank, fuse-plug flood way plan is now considered beyond discussion in the offices of the Army engineers.

"The essential starting points of the detail calculations are: A maximum flood of 2,400,000 second-feet at Cairo and reduction of the flood plane at Cairo to at least 59 feet, or 1 foot below levee tops, and of the New Madrid flood plane to 51.5 feet on the Cairo gauge. Accordingly, the engineers had to figure backwater curves, beginning at New Madrid, and by cut-and-try procedure arrive at the stipulated Cairo height.

SURVEYS

"Ten miles of the flood-way length at its upper end are comparatively flat, and this is the critical section. Two minor ridges and a third major ridge (O'Bryans Ridge) cross the section almost at right angles. From the third ridge at the lower end of the section, the ground drops off some 15 feet, and thence downstream both ground slope and flood-way width increase sufficiently to eliminate the lower section at a controlling factor with respect to Cairo. Therefore in the upper stretch 1-foot contours were taken as far as the Missouri Pacific Railroad (Belmont division), while in the lower reaches only 5-foot contours were taken. In the upper stretch cross sections were plotted approximately a mile apart, across both flood way and river channel to the bluff or the levee on the Kentucky side. For the lower section similar cross sections were platted at 2-mile intervals.

"Not too much information exists as to the get-away of the water from these 1912 and 1913 crevasses. But there are definitely authenticated high-water marks on the road directly east from Charleston for a distance of approximately 12 miles above O'Bryans Ridge. Plotting the ground profile under this high-water stage gives a cross section of 305,000 square feet, which, flowing at a velocity of approximately 1 foot a second, would indicate a discharge of 305,000 sectional feet for the whole section. These rough figures are given because many engineers have felt that the restricted entrance provided for the adopted project is entirely too limited and the get-away too uncertain in the upper flat reaches, with the probability of increasing timber obstructions.

"Mainly, however, is the deduction as to a lowered gage at Cairo subjected to a question. The 1913 flood way lowered the Cairo gage 1.2 feet when discharging approximately the amount which it is now planned to by-pass. Will the adopted flood way produce any greater lowering? That is seriously questioned, and on this question hinges the whole justification of the Birds Point scheme!

"Certain it is that this phase of the matter should be studied more carefully than has been possible in the district offices under the restrictions of the adopted plan. What variants of the scheme are possible, and how might they improve the result? The cost of extra flowage rights, damage to the three railroads (some of which might be glad to be permitted to abandon unprofitable trackage), and the inconvenience to highway traffic from Cairo (which might as cheaply be safeguarded by better and higher levees in Illinois) all should be balanced against the necessity of surer operation of the flood way and the possibility of raising the fuse-plug levee grade. More protection would accrue to the farmers in the flood way if the period between fuse-plug operations were lengthened.

THE SETBACK LEVEE

"The setback levee which delimits the flood way on the west follows southwest along the Cotton Belt Railroad. At Wyatt it swings around the town, and at Samos it turns southerly to avoid the poor foundation disclosed by borings on the original line along the tracks. Below Samos the location depended on foundation and topography (e. g. to get on high ground around Four Mile Pond).

"Some question yet remains as to just how far to carry the lower end along St. John Bayou, since backwater at the high stages will have overtopped the main levee up to Hichman and backed up St. John Bayou nearly to the town of Sikeston along the Sikeston Ridge. Placing a floodgate 5 miles above New Madrid across St. John Bayou has been considered; it may be worth while later, when the land values to be protected become greater. Shortening the levee 4 miles would raise the backwater 3 feet and the Farrenburg levee would have to be raised, at a cost of $194,000, to prevent water crossing Sikeston Ridge into the St. Francis Basin. Although the shorter setback levee would be $720,000 cheaper, damage claims might offset this figure, and the shorter levee was not adopted.

"As to foundation, borings have been made at 1,000-foot intervals over the whole line. Under the superlayers is a fine sand with enough clay to make it extremely fluid but not enough to fill the voids. As this material under pressure flows badly, the levee has been located where a blanket of at least 7 feet overlies this sand.

"The right of way width chosen is 462 feet for the upper 17 miles and 660 feet for the remaining 18 miles. The crown grade of the setback levee is to be 1 foot above the flood plane (59 feet at Cairo and 51.5 feet at New Madrid). The crown width will be 10 feet; the slopes 3½ to 1 on the water side and enough on the back to inclose a 6½ to 1 seepage line.

DRAINAGE AND SILTING

"Much discussion has arisen over the decision of the engineers to build borrow pits on the land side of the setback levee from station 990 to 1640 (referring to stations on this engineer's map), the pits being used to care for intercepted drainage ditches. A main ditch 1 to 2 miles away from the levee would cost $300,000 more. This portion of the levee will lie almost entirely in backwater during the operation of the flood way to capacity, and as the head is not large the construction is not considered dangerous.

"There remains the fact that much money has been spent in this locality to fill up land-side borrow pits, which locally are considered hazardous due to horizontal seepage through a stratum of sand which underlies practically all of this area at elevations that will be reached by the depths to which the new drainage ditch will have to be carried to serve the existing ditches. Many of the latter have been filled in from 6 to 8 feet from these sand strata as well as from the side sloughing. Maintenance, cleaning them out, and restoring their depth is now overdue because of the uncertainties and straitened financial condition of the drainage districts. The landowners ask what agency will maintain the combined borrow pit and drainage ditch on Government property.

"Another maintenance question that appears to be of some moment is that of restoring the drainage ditches in the flood way following the operation of the fuse plug. A crevasse ordinarily fills miles of ditch with sand. Will the flow from the fuse plug be harmful? The original cost of the 100 miles of ditches in this area exceeded $1,000,000. Also there are 11 miles of 9-foot single lane and 6¼ miles of 16-foot double lane concrete road in the flood way (each with developed drainage), for which the State and county paid $440,000; no estimate of damage is available or has been set up.

"The Dorena crevasse, which occurred in the lower part of the flood-way region, opened into a timbered area, so that the sand flow was checked and deposited rapidly.

"However, it filled canals from local wash as far away as 5 miles. Last year I observed large drainage and roadside ditches more than 5 to 10 miles from the Mounds Landing crevasse bank full with sand and silt. From the standpoint of early deposition the timber barrier which flanks most of the 11½ miles of the fuse plug will be of decided help. But for the same reason it may reduce the water in flow and upset the whole flood-way calculation.

FUSE-PLUG LEVEES

"Entrance of water to the flood way is to be made by way of an 11½-mile section of existing levee cut down to Cairo stage 55, or 4 feet below the flow line of the 2,325,000 second-feet flood. It begins 1 mile below the approach of the new bridge, thus insuring no major disturbance from a crevasse nearer than that distance.

"Similarly, the outlet is by way of a 5-mile section of cut-down levee. This latter will have no effect on extreme flood stages at Cairo, since the lower end of the existing levee is below the computed flow line.

SUMMARY

"So much for the hydraulic and engineering features of the problem. After reviewing them, one can not escape the feeling that the project suffers from incomplete study and information. It is true that the detailed design work of the New Madrid flood way has been done very well; but no engineer is likely to be satisfied with the absence of basic data on flow coefficients.

"Certain human interest and economic problems crowd in on one's consciousness in traveling through the flood-way country.

"This region is extremely flat, with drainage toward the river for the few miles above O'Bryans Ridge, but below this point away from the river, as is typical of the great portion of the valley. Farms fairly well cared for are planted to wheat, alfalfa, corn, and cotton. Hogs and cattle are only fairly well represented. As classified by the Army engineers, the area includes nearly 53 per cent timber and cut-over lands and 45 per cent open lands. How these lands are to be valued equitably is a matter of some concern to both engineers and residents.

"Recently the engineers sent the land owners a card on which to note their own classification of their holdings and the assessed valuations. An airplane photographic survey is about to be made. From these sources, added to the field survey, the facts as to classification and total assessed valuations will be obtained; then damages will be estimated and settlement attempted, first by negotiation, and, if necessary, by court procedure.

"Actual values of lands in the flood way are extremely difficult to determine, since there is no market value and returns have been low in recent years. Actual investment deserves consideration. The owners of several of the best places stated that they had spent $100 to $150 per acre on clearing, tile drainage, and improvements, often exclusive of the original cost of the bare land.

"A large percentage of the farm land has been mortgaged, usually at $50 to $75 per acre. Loans coming due are being foreclosed unless part cash is put up. Large tracts are being taken over by insurance and loan companies and operated by farm managers. Two good crops at good prices will put many of these farms on their feet, but they will practically all be tenant operated, and the area will thus be lost to the home-making element.

"A Cairo banker when asked about these conditions, stated that all of southeast Missouri is in the same condition; few new loans are possible, and, indeed, the owners in the floodway are a better risk than those outside, since there is the prospect of actual cash forthcoming from claims. Others added that the claim moneys have long ago been encumbered by loans and the loan money spent beyond recall. The prospect that construction will bring in a lot of money is a poor reliance, and only the gas stations and personal-service merchants are likely to benefit materially, said an engineer. Thus does local opinion vary.

FARMING WILL DECREASE

"My own opinion is that the extent of future farming depends on many factors. At first the fuse-plug operator will not be controlling. The farmer will put in a crop, provided he has the money to do so. If bank money is tight and city credit stiff, the farmed acreage will shrink. Every adverse reaction due to a crevasse or to money stringency or crop failure will cause a further shrinkage in the next year's acreage.

"Federal land banks will not loan money in the flood way, and therefore individual farming will progressively go out. Insurance and loan company holdings will persist for many years, but the least profitable pieces and those affected by crevasse-filled ditches will be abandoned. No new cut-over lands are likely to be reclaimed. Owners of the present timberlands, such as the 20,000-acre tract owned by the Three-State Lumber Co. in the southern overflow area, west of the Dorena crevasse, will welcome any contribution from the Government, cut-off the timber, and then abandon the practically valueless land. All told, then, the salvage on the flood-way area will not be large.

"But besides this there are the near-by areas outside the flood way. Consequential damages to this territory will be considerable, and are most difficult to estimate. It is hard enough to estimate loss of trade territory and prospective business, but still harder to decide on compensation. The probable effect is illustrated by the present expectation that two typical towns, East Prairie (population 1,500) and Charleston (population 4,000), will lose one-third their population. The total business from the 2,500 people in the flood way may be estimated at from $500,000 to $750,000 per year. Shrinkage of town population will shrink values 25 to 50 per cent. Realignment of taxes and shifting from abandoned flood-way lands to lands outside will lay down another heavy burden on outside lands. Must not all these losses be set down in drawing up the economic balance sheet?

"The engineering investigations reveal a remarkable amount of excellent work by the engineers in the office of the Memphis engineer district of the Corps of Engineers. Col. F. B. Wilby is in charge of this district, but much of the hydraulic study has fallen to the lot of William Parkin, Blair Ross, and Henry Bloompot, civilian engineers in the general engineering division, of which Mr. Parkin is in charge. An area engineer, T. T. Knappen, has opened an office at Cairo with a large corps of office and field engineers, who have the field work and working drawings for the construction nearing the contract stage."

A vigorous protest against the final adoption of the Army flood-control plan has been set forth by the Missouri Flood Control Association and the Tensas Basin Flood Control Association through Lucius T. Berthe, their consulting engineer. A recent communication says:

"The awarding of contracts for actual construction in the Missouri flood way mentioned has been temporarily deferred by the Secretary of War pending a possible review of this situation. Almost equally doubtful are the effectiveness and economic advisability of the great flood ways proposed in the Boeuf and Atchafalaya areas. Senators and Congressmen from nine valley States recently joined in a request to the President for a review of these three controversial features of the plan prior to commencement of construction of same.

"The lack of confidence in either its effectiveness or equity as being carried out by the Army engineers appears widespread. This is especially true as related to the great engineering profession of the country and the flood-subject valley itself, with whom the present flood-control agency has gone bankrupt of public confidence.

"In the face of these facts, shall the present agency be permitted to rush the Nation blindfolded, so to speak, into an investment which will probably exceed a half billion dollars with such uncertainty of results? Should we not take at least one look before leaping into this abyss of certain failure? No private business would ever accept such hazard. Is there any reason why, regardless of Army ideals and discipline, the Nation should not exercise common prudence and business judgment in the expenditure of such a sum as is herein involved? Have we reached the point where the Chief of Engineers of the Army can discipline the Nation itself?"

RECESS

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement hitherto entered into, now take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 3 o'clock p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, June 13, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, June 12, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein.

For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place?

He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) entitled "An act to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries," further insists upon its amendment to said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asks a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. McNARY, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. RANSDELL to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE TARIFF BILL

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a chart and comments thereon prepared by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], touching the effect on Tennessee of the pending tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a chart and comments thereon by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks I submit the following compilation of data and comments thereon touching the effect of the pending tariff measure on agriculture and manufacturing in Tennessee, prepared by my distinguished colleague, Judge CORDELL HULL.

The statement is as follows:

TENNESSEE

[1925 figures unless otherwise stated]

Total population, 1920, 2,337,885.
Total farm population, 1920, 1,173,316.
Value of farm lands and buildings, 1920, $1,024,979,000.
Value of farm lands and buildings, 1925, $759,426,000.

	Acres
Land in farms	17,801,000
Total crop land, 1925	7,588,506
Crop land harvested, 1924	6,209,428
Crop land idle or failure, 1924	1,379,078
Number of farms	252,669

The following receive no tariff benefits:

Tennessee crops, 1925, $195,200,000

	Value	Acreage
Cotton and seed (517,000 bales)	$48,133,000	1,173,000
Corn	56,284,000	3,162,000
Wheat	7,616,000	367,000
Oats	3,112,000	221,000
Barley	557,000	22,000
Rye	286,000	20,000
Potatoes	4,040,000	37,000
Sweet potatoes	4,536,000	36,000
Tobacco	16,045,000	479,000
Tame hay (1927)	26,430,000	1,162,000
Sorghum (value of sirup alone)	2,149,000	63,000
Strawberries	3,012,000	24,628
Apples	4,169,000
Total	176,269,000	6,766,628
Crop land in 1925		7,588,506
Remainder for other crops (1925)		821,876

But several hundred thousand acres always lie idle and the crop fails on other thousands.

Such specialties as the following receive some tariff benefits:

	Value	Acreage
Peanuts (1928)	$677,000	21,903
Tomatoes (shipped)	1,285,000	13,888
Clover seed		2,000
Pecans (trees)		23,595
Soy beans	2,696,000	114,000
Onions		694

Tennessee produces a few millions dollars of other truck products and numerous fruits, but net tariff benefits in most instances are comparatively small or none at all. This is especially true when we consider the increased production and living costs due to general tariffs. At the most Tennessee only utilizes a few hundred thousand acres of the 7,588,506 acres planted to crops in the production of less than $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 of minor products that get any net tariff benefits. Peanuts, lettuce, tomatoes, clover seed, onions, soy beans, and a limited number of other minor products enjoy, at times at least, some tariff aid, which should be frankly recognized.

This small tariff help we have to compare with crops of $176,269,000 and more, raised on 6,766,628 acres and more that suffer enormous tariff penalties. More than 95 per cent of the State's acreage planted to crops and of their values experience no net tariff benefits but tariff injuries. In this 95 per cent of crop lands is where the farmer's capital is chiefly invested.

Value of all livestock	$83,473,000
Livestock and its products receiving no tariff benefits:
Lard and all hog products	9,138,528
Horses and mules	39,762,000
Total	48,900,528

As to cattle, the prices in the United States made no material increase after the tariffs of 1921 and 1922, but it was not until around 1927 that the price increase became really substantial. That tariffs were not a material factor in this price increase is testified to by the United States Secretary of Agriculture in his annual report for 1928, as follows:

"It was not until 1927 that market supplies of cattle were reduced sufficiently to cause a material rise in the general level of cattle prices. * * * From 1918 to 1928 the number of cattle was reduced by 15,500,000 head, and also 23,000,000 more American consumers were added by reason of increase of population."

This is high protective tariff authority. The cattle grower does recall that during the six years of these tariffs, from 1921 to 1927, he did not receive any satisfactory price increases. But even the small cattle raiser is taught high-tariff protection and taught to follow and support the manufacturers' embargo tariffs, which are effective in their benefits and which enable the manufacturer to eat up the farmers who receive small or theoretical tariff benefits on some of their products. Just here is room for a valuable mathematical calculation by the farmer. In order to secure moderate tariffs for certain agricultural products that are more or less benefited thereby, American agriculture is not called upon to stand for the existing structure of superprotection for a small segment of American manufacturers.

Value of cattle, 1925	$21,944,000
Value of sheep	1,940,000
Value of wool	399,562
Total	24,333,562
Total number of sheep in Tennessee	289,577
Number shorn	262,116
Wool derived—pounds	1,065,650

The wool averages less than 40 cents a pound and 4 pounds to the clip, compared with 9 or 10 pounds to the clip of the fine wool sheep mainly in the range and Western States. Our Tennessee wools are medium or coarse and sell for less than one-half the amount of the finer wools, which derive 90 per cent of the wool tariff benefits.

It is apparent that our small sheep owners, as in Tennessee, pay out more in tariff prices for woolen clothing for themselves and families than the small amount they derive from wool production. Theirs is a mutton and lamb proposition with wool as the incident. If the fine wool grower should have enough sheep to produce all the wool America needs, he would cause the market for mutton and lamb to be hopelessly glutted the year around.

If, however, we agree that the tendency of the cattle and sheep tariffs is to afford more or less benefits to the owners, especially during periods of scarcity or fluctuation of prices here and abroad, it is patent that such benefits are not comparable with those received by manufacturing industries. Just here is the point at which the farmer is often misled by the wholly false plea that tariffs benefit all alike.

Dairy products

Total value (1925)	$15,817,000
Butter made on Tennessee farms (1924)—pounds	32,461,000
Butter fat sold—do	5,209,000
Cream sold—gallons	698,000

For 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927 the dairyman in the eastern or competitive zone received an average tariff benefit on butter of slightly under 6 cents a pound, and also certain tariff benefits on milk and cream, especially in territory tributary to the Canadian border.

Tennessee in 1924 milked 350,578 dairy cows of a total in the United States of 16,511,235. To the extent that our local market for butter was influenced by the national central markets, the Tennessee dairyman derived tariff benefits from butter as above indicated. From these, however, he must deduct his general tariff losses. A serious problem just ahead is that of overproduction. This will measurably nullify tariff benefits.

Eggs

Total value of eggs	$11,067,000

The Nation produces near $500,000,000 of eggs, while imports and exports as well are near $7,000,000 a year. In this trade situation it is difficult to figure out any substantial tariff benefits for eggs.

The value of poultry (1925) was $9,665,000.

This is a by-product of farming, but a very valuable one to the extent it prevails. The imports of live poultry to-day are about $378,000, with exports of a little less than one-half this amount. The number of poultry for the Nation in 1924 was 240,000,000 and for Tennessee was 11,860,000, or less than 5 per cent of the Nation's total.

The imports of dressed poultry ranges from $800,000 to $1,467,000. The exports average near the same amount. The total production was 600,000,000 pounds in 1924. The imports and exports are 3,500,000 to 5,000,000 pounds each. The value of our national production is from $150,000,000 to $180,000,000. One can easily judge from these figures that the tariff benefits from poultry are not comparable with most of the manufacturers' tariffs, such as Mr. Mellon's 76 per cent on aluminum products, and scores of others that might be mentioned.

Value of mineral production, 1926

[No tariff benefits]

	Annual production
Total	$39,296,668
Coal and coke	12,208,000
Cement	8,352,000
Copper	2,604,000
Iron ore	312,109
Pig iron	2,544,825
Petroleum	100,000
Phosphate rock	1,980,613
Sand and gravel	1,751,336
Silver and gold	73,500
Stone	4,170,000
Sulphuric acid	(?)
Total	34,096,383

The following receive some tariff benefits:

	Value of annual production
Zinc	$1,814,000
Lead, bauxite, manganese, barite, clay products, slate, etc. (this is excessive)	7,105,000
Lime	1,319,000
Total	10,238,000

Lime production and that as to several miscellaneous items means little or nothing.

More than three-fourths of all minerals in Tennessee get no tariff protection and could not use it if they did. They suffer serious tariff burdens instead. Why not give them consideration?

If we make specially full allowance of tariff benefits to such manufactures as woolen, cotton, and other textiles, including knit goods, shirts, clothing, etc., tools, tinware, sporting and athletic goods, paper boxes, mirrors, perfumery, trunks and bags, awnings and tents, mattresses and bed springs, clay products, chemicals, caskets and coffins, certain paints and varnishes, marble work, advanced iron and steel manufactures, and furniture, it is apparent that from one-half to two-thirds of what is listed as manufacturing production does not enjoy any net tariff benefits. The chief portion of our cotton textile and hosiery production of $67,706,000, embracing medium and coarser yarns and their products, are on an export basis and would be perfectly content with moderate tariff rates instead of continuing as a party to the policy of superprotection. It is therefore apparent that agriculture as a whole, most all of the mineral industry, the larger portion of manufacturing, and the general public in Tennessee, suffer large net tariff losses. Their interest manifestly would be in harmony with moderate or competitive tariffs, so as to reduce production costs, living and transportation costs, and promote wider and better foreign markets for our increasing surpluses.

POINT OF NO QUORUM

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present. I withdraw the point, temporarily, Mr. Speaker.

EXPORT BOUNTIES

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask on what subject?

Mr. TEMPLE. To insert in the RECORD, after having made some comments thereon, certain laws of European countries with regard to their treatment of goods which have received an export bounty from the country from which they are sent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Speaker, all the Members of the House are familiar with the fact that on our own statute books there is a law which provides that when goods arrive in the United States, upon which a bounty has been paid in the country from which they are exported, we add to the ordinary tariff duties a sum equivalent to the whole amount of the bounty which they have received from the country from which they are exported.

It struck me, a few weeks ago, it would be worth while to inquire what foreign countries in Europe and in other parts of the world, to which we export agricultural commodities, have a similar law on their statute books. I wrote to Mr. Chalmers, the Chief of the Division of Foreign Tariffs in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, whose business it is to keep informed with regard to the tariff laws of foreign countries, and asked him if he could furnish me with these laws.

I have here extracts from the laws of Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, France, Portugal, Spain, Switzerland, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, and other countries. The French law is very brief, and for that reason I shall read it as a specimen of the provisions of such statutes. It is the law of March 29, 1910, and is still in force:

> The government * * * may apply to articles, dutiable or free, enjoying in their country of origin or production a direct or indirect export bounty, a countervailing duty equal to the export bounty.

Now, it struck me it would be of very little advantage to a man who exports wheat from the United States to receive 21 cents a bushel when he exports it and to pay into the treasury of the country to which he takes it 21 cents a bushel for the privilege of landing it there.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Do they not also have a retaliatory tariff just the same as they have retaliation because of the export-premium proposition?

Mr. TEMPLE. They have tariffs and sometimes they proceed to retaliate; yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will not the same objection, about which the gentleman is speaking, apply to a tariff?

Mr. TEMPLE. Perhaps so; but it is nevertheless a very decided objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. But we still have the tariff law in spite of those objections.

Mr. TEMPLE. All right; the gentleman has said his say; now let me proceed.

Whatever may be true about retaliatory tariffs of various sorts and countervailing duties which are for a purpose entirely different, I want to call specific attention to the purpose of the debenture.

It is intended that the man who exports goods will sell those goods abroad, let us say wheat, for example. He must sell for the world price in the world market—whatever price he can get abroad. Under the proposed debenture plan he would receive whatever the wheat would bring in the market in which he would sell it, and in addition would get 21 cents a bushel from the due bill or debenture issued and receivable by the United States Treasury for every bushel of wheat that he exported. It was intended that he should be able to pay over a considerable portion of the 21 cents a bushel to the American farmer from whom he buys the wheat, thus raising the American price by nearly 21 cents a bushel above the world price. Now, if he pays the 21 cents a bushel to the French treasury for the privilege of landing it in France, how much of the 21 cents can he give to the American farmer from whom he bought the wheat? And how would it benefit the American farmer if the exporter takes 21 cents out of the United States Treasury and pays it into the treasury of a foreign country?

This is all I have to say at present, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. How about Great Britain?

Mr. TEMPLE. There is no such law on the statute books of Great Britain, but it would not take very long to enact one there.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The board of trade in Great Britain has wide powers relative to all matters of tariffs and shipments——

Mr. TEMPLE. And dumping laws.

Mr. CHINDBLOM (continuing). And foreign commerce, and they can inaugurate practically a new system without much legislation, if any.

Mr. TEMPLE. That could be done in a single day.

Mr. COLE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes.

Mr. COLE. I have investigated this question, and, as a matter of fact, in Great Britain they would cover a situation like this by an order in council.

Mr. TEMPLE. Yes; it would not require an act of Parliament.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They do not have to take such matters to Parliament.

Mr. TEMPLE. No. [Applause.]

The matter referred to above follows:

THE UNITED STATES LAW

Tariff act of 1922, Title III, section 303. (U. S. Stat., vol. 42, pt. 1, p. 935)

That whenever any country, dependency, colony, province, or other political subdivision of government, person, partnership, association cartel, or corporation shall pay or bestow, directly or indirectly, any bounty or grant upon the manufacture, production, or export of any article or merchandise manufactured or produced in such country, dependency, colony, province, or other political subdivision of government, and such article or merchandise is dutiable under the provisions of this act, then upon the importation of any such article or merchandise into the United States, whether the same shall be imported directly from the country of production or otherwise, and whether such article or merchandise is imported in the same condition as when exported from the country of production or has been changed in condition by remanufacture or otherwise, there shall be levied and paid in all such cases, in addition to the duties otherwise imposed by this act, an additional duty equal to the net amount of such bounty or grant, however the same be paid or bestowed.

CHIEF OF THE DIVISION OF FOREIGN TARIFFS,
Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce,
Department of Commerce, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHALMERS: Goods upon which an export bounty has been paid in the country from which they are shipped are subject to an additional duty equal to the bounty when they are imported into the United States. (Act of September 21, 1922, Title III, section 303.) Will you please let me know what foreign countries have a similar provision of law imposing additional duties on imports on which export bounty is paid by the country of their origin?

Especially I should like to know what is the law of England, France, Italy, and Germany in this respect.

Very truly yours,

H. W. TEMPLE.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
Washington, May 31, 1929.

Hon. H. W. TEMPLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In reply to your letter of May 28, asking what foreign countries have a provision of law imposing additional duties on bounty-fed imports, I take pleasure in inclosing a memorandum listing the foreign countries which, to our knowledge, have such legislation, with extracts of the pertinent sections.

You will note that England, Italy, and Germany have no such legislation, although, of course, in the case of emergency, the necessary enactments could, undoubtedly, be put through in short order.

Cordially yours,

HENRY CHALMERS,
Chief, Division of Foreign Tariffs.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE,
DIVISION OF FOREIGN TARIFFS,
Washington, April 27, 1929.

FOREIGN COUNTERVAILING DUTIES ON BOUNTY-FED GOODS

(Extracts from laws)

Part I. Europe

AUSTRIA

Law of September 5, 1924

In regard to goods upon which a direct or indirect export bounty is granted in the country of export, the Federal Government may, by and with the advice of the principal committee of the national council, establish by ordinance a duty or surtax to the amount of the bounty as granted; it is, moreover, empowered to increase up to one-third of the rate provided in the tariff the duties on industrial products or countries which have not ratified the Washington convention of 1919, limiting the hours of work, and which in their present labor regulations are considerably below the provisions of the said convention.

BELGIUM

Law of January 30, 1893 (No. 2218)

ART. 2. The Government is authorized to establish on the importation of such goods as enjoy a direct or indirect bounty on export from the country whence proceeding or originating, a countervailing duty equal to said bounty.

Above is reaffirmed by article 8 of the law of October 10, 1900, and by article 5 of law of May 8, 1924.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Law of June 22, 1926 (effective July 14, 1926)

ART. 8. If goods imported into Czechoslovakia from any country menace the national production through unfair competition, resulting from special governmental dispositions of any kind, such as by the granting of favors upon exportation or otherwise, with the introduction of longer working hours, or other unfavorable social conditions of labor, and the like, or resulting from depreciated currency, measures shall be taken adequate for the indispensable protection of domestic production, and, in particular, by fixing a special duty or a surtax, or by limiting importation. For the observation of such phenomena, the Government shall appoint a board ("consulta") for which there shall be proposed two members by the Minister of Industry and Commerce, two by the Minister of Finance, and two by Minister for Agriculture.

FRANCE

Law of March 29, 1910

EX. ART. 3. The Government * * *

"May apply to articles, dutiable or free, enjoying in their country of origin or production a direct or indirect export bounty, a countervailing duty equal to the export bounty."

PORTUGAL

Law No. 8741 of 1921

ART. 7. When the Government is satisfied that any article, whether liable to import duty or not, enjoys in the country of origin or shipment any direct or indirect export premium, or is characterized by any other form of dumping, the customs shall levy, in addition to the ordinary duty, a charge equivalent to the premium enjoyed by such article.

SPAIN

Law of March 20, 1906 (embodied in the customs law of March 23, 1906, art. 3, and still in effect).

ART. 6. The Government is authorized to levy such surcharges as they see fit on goods which receive export bounties in the country of production.

SWITZERLAND

Customs law of October 10, 1902 (still in effect)

ART. 4. It shall be lawful for the Federal Council to increase at any time to such an extent as they may deem fit the rates of the general tariff. * * *

In cases where any measures adopted in a foreign country are likely to interfere with the trade of Switzerland, and also in cases where the application of the Swiss customs duties proves inoperative owing to export bounties or like grants, the Federal Council are empowered, in a general way, to take measures deemed fit to meet the circumstances.

Part II. Orient

JAPAN

Law No. 54, of April 14, 1910

ART. 5. In respect of articles on which an export bounty is granted in foreign countries, a customs duty of the same amount as the said bounty may be imposed by imperial ordinance in addition to the duty prescribed in the tariff.

AUSTRALIA

Preservation of industries act, 1921, freight subsidies or concessions

ART. 7. (1) If the minister is satisfied after inquiry and report by the tariff board that any goods exported to Australia of a class or kind produced or manufactured in Australia have been or are being carried (a) in subsidized ships at rates of freight lower than the rates of freight prevailing at the date of shipment; or (b) at ballast rates of freight, being rates lower than the rates of freight prevailing at the date of shipment; or (c) freight free; or that by reason of the granting of rebates, refunds, or other allowances the net amount of freight payable on goods exported to Australia of a class or kind produced or manufactured in Australia is lower than the rates of freight prevailing at the date of shipment, and that in any such case detriment may thereby result to an Australian industry, the minister may publish a notice in the Gazette specifying the goods as to which he is so satisfied.

(2) Upon the publication of the notice there shall be charged, collected, and paid to the use of the King, for the purposes of the Commonwealth, on those goods imported into Australia a special duty (in this section referred to as "the dumping freight duty").

(3) The rate of the dumping freight duty shall be 5 per cent of the fair market value of the goods at the time of shipment.

NEW ZEALAND

Customs amendment act, 1921

SEC. 11. (2):

(c) In the case of goods imported into New Zealand, or in the case of goods of a class or kind produced in some other part of the British Dominions and imported from a country not being part of the British Dominions, if the minister is satisfied that any special concession (whether by way of railway or shipping freight, subsidy, special bounty, rebate, or otherwise) has been or is to be allowed, taken, or granted, and if such concession will, in the opinion of the minister, have an effect prejudicial or injurious to any industry or business established or carred on in New Zealand or in such other part of the British Dominions as aforesaid. For the purposes of this section the determination by the minister of the amount of any such concession shall be final.

(3) The rate or amount of dumping duty levied under this section shall be determined, as follows. * * *

(c) In the case of goods to which paragraph (c) of the last preceding subsection applies, the dumping duty shall be an amount, to be determined by the minister, not exceeding the amount of the special concession referred to in the said paragraph.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

Countervailing duties on bounty-fed sugar were provided in 1903.

General countervailing duties were provided in the customs act of 1914 and also in the act of 1925.

The provision of 1925 is as follows:

"CH. 11, ART. 15. (1) Whenever, after investigation and report by the board of trade and industries, the minister is satisfied that goods which are of a class or kind produced or manufactured in the Union have been or are being exported to the Union."

* * * * * * *

(e) That a bounty has been or will be granted in respect of such goods in the country in which they were produced or manufactured or from which they were exported, by way of a bonus, rebate, subsidy, or otherwise, whether granted by a government or other authority or person.

Part III. Latin America

ARGENTINA

Law No. 8377, of 1912

ART. 2. On the importation of sugar entitled to direct or indirect bounties in country of origin there shall be a surtax equivalent to the full amount of the bounties granted, whatever be the form of the grant.

NOTE.—Proposed legislation in the interest of the sugar growing reembodies this provision in a new form. There is also a proposed general antidumping law which introduces a general provision for all imports similar to the present one in effect for sugar.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SUTHERLAND (at the request of Mr. DOWELL) for six days, on account of important business.

POINT OF NO QUORUM

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? I would like to have five minutes, and I would just as soon have it now.

Mr. DYER. There are a number of gentlemen who want to submit unanimous-consent requests, and I think we ought to have the point made now. It is important to know how many Members are absent from the House so we may know what we are up against.

Mr. TILSON. Let me say to the gentleman that there are only a few unanimous-consent requests to be made this morning, so far as I know, and there is no further business for to-day. Does not the gentleman think that we might omit the roll call to-day and have it to-morrow?

Mr. DYER. If the leader on this side makes the request, I should feel disposed not to make the point. My only purpose was to learn who are absent in order that the respective whips may know and notify them, because there is an important vote to be had to-morrow on a matter for which we were called here in special session. I think they ought to be here.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Missouri that I want five minutes, and the gentleman can make his point of order after I have concluded.

Mr. DYER. I would gladly yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, but a number of Members on this side have a similar request. I think we better have the roll call now.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on June 11, 1929, present to the President, for his approval, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3548. An act to continue during the fiscal year 1930 Federal aid in rehabilitating farm lands in the areas devastated by floods in 1927;

H. R. 3600. An act to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act authorizing Maynard D. Smith, his heirs, successors, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.," approved March 2, 1929, and being Public Act No. 923 of the Seventieth Congress;

H. R. 3663. An act making appropriations for the payment of certain judgments rendered against the Government by various United States courts;

H. J. Res. 73. Joint resolution to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris," approved January 30, 1913;

H. J. Res. 83. Joint resolution to make available funds for carrying into effect the public resolution of February 20, 1929, as amended, concerning the cessions of certain islands of the Samoan group to the United States;

H. J. Res. 86. Joint resolution making an appropriation for the International Red Cross and Prisoners of War Conference at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1929;

H. J. Res. 88. Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for the extension to the post-office building at Corinth, Miss.;

H. J. Res. 91. Joint resolution to provide for the payment of certain expenses of the United States Pulaski Sesquicentennial Commission; and

H. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution amending an appropriation for a consolidated school at Belcourt, within the Turtle Mountain Indian Reservation, N. Dak.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 13, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURTNESS: A bill (H. R. 3920) to provide for the aiding of farmers on wet lands in any State by the making of loans to drainage districts, levee districts, levee and drainage districts, counties, boards of supervisors, and/or other political subdivisions and legal entities, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. HOPE: A bill (H. R. 3921) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to establish grades and an inspection service for canned foods in order to facilitate commerce therein, and to enable the consumers to purchase canned foods on the basis of quality, thereby lending encouragement to the producers of quality farm products; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HUGHES: A bill (H. R. 3922) to provide for the purchase of sites and for the construction of post-office buildings in certain towns in the United States, and to provide for the issuance and sale of interest-bearing certificates for the creation of a fund for the purchase of such sites and the construction of such buildings; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mrs. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 3923) for the relief of dependents of innocent persons killed through attempts to enforce the prohibition law; to the Committee on Claims.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 3924) for the relief of Pierre E. Teets; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BOWMAN: A bill (H. R. 3925) granting an increase of pension to James K. Ferguson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ELLIS: A bill (H. R. 3926) granting a pension to Sarah C. Lane; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3927) granting an increase of pension to Helen E. Day; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3928) granting a pension to Katie Cummings; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HILL of Washington: A bill (H. R. 3929) granting an increase of pension to George Archambault; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES: A bill (H. R. 3930) granting a pension to Elizabeth Langery; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3931) granting an increase of pension to America V. Gordon; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 3932) for the relief of William W. Woodruff; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3933) granting an increase of pension to Ida Millman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PALMER: A bill (H. R. 3934) granting a pension to Allen R. Bybee; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRANK M. RAMEY: A bill (H. R. 3935) for the relief of Eugenia A. Helston; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 3936) granting an increase of pension to Anna M. Thompson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOODRUFF: A bill (H. R. 3937) for the relief of John K. Kelley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3938) for the relief of John Lourim; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3939) for the relief of Lucius Bell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3940) for the relief of George Pettit; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

653. By Mr. BURTNESS: Petition of 16 citizens of Pembina County, N. Dak., indicating opposition to the proposal of revising the present calendar; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE

THURSDAY, June 13, 1929

(Legislative day of Tuesday, June 4, 1929)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen	Frazier	La Follette	Smith
Ashurst	George	McKellar	Smoot
Barkley	Gillett	McNary	Steck

Dale	Howell	Robinson, Ark.	Warren
Deneen	Johnson	Sackett	Waterman
Dill	Jones	Schall	Watson
Edge	Kean	Sheppard	Wheeler
Fess	Keyes	Shortridge
Fletcher	King	Simmons

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] and request that the announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NORBECK. My colleague [Mr. MCMASTER] is unavoidably absent from the city.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is absent owing to illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. BURTON presented a memorial numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Ohio, remonstrating against the imposition of increased tariff duties on Sumatra tobacco, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BINGHAM presented a memorial of sundry laundry operators and persons engaged in the laundry-supply business in the State of Connecticut remonstrating against an increase in the tariff duties on soap-making oils and fats, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the League of Women Voters of the Territory of Hawaii, favoring the passage of legislation amending the organic act of the Territory, so as to enable women to serve as jurors in that Territory, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Charles L. Burdett Camp, No. 4, Department of Connecticut, United Spanish War Veterans, of Hartford, Conn., favoring the passage of the so-called Robinson bill, granting increased pensions to Spanish War Veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the National Society of New England Women, in favor of requiring teachers and pupils to subscribe to the oath of allegiance, and the passage of legislation designating The Star-Spangled Banner as the American national anthem, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Society of New England Women, favoring the retention of the national-origins clause in the immigration law, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Swiss Society, of Waterbury, Conn., protesting against further reduction of immigration quotas, especially pertaining to Switzerland, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the resolution (H. J. Res. 102) making an appropriation for expenses of participation by the United States in the meeting of the International Technical Consulting Committee on Radio Communications to be held at The Hague in September, 1929, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 32) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce without amendment a bill for the calendar. It is the bill (S. 153) granting consent to the city and county of San Francisco to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill to a point near the South Mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, in said State. I will state that the written report to accompany this bill is the report accompanying a similar bill in the last session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and placed on the calendar, and leave is given to file the report indicated by the Senator from California (Rept. No. 33).

MILK RIVER IRRIGATION PROJECT

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 3317) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes," and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. This is the measure alluded to yesterday by the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill to which he has alluded. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 1033, 70th Cong.), referring to the Milk River project, Montana, be amended to read as follows:

"Milk River project, Montana: For operation and maintenance, Chinook, Malta, and Glasgow divisions, $17,000; continuation of construction, $17,000; in all, $34,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) to provide for the observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas:

A bill (S. 1494) to establish the Ouachita National Park in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 1495) appropriating $1,000,000 for the enlargement of Veterans' Hospital No. 88, at Memphis, Tenn.; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 1496) for the relief of Edith Barber; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HASTINGS:

A bill (S. 1497) granting a pension to Kate B. Straughn (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1498) authorizing the Delaware & New Jersey Bridge Corporation, a corporation of the State of Delaware, domiciled at Wilmington, Del., its successors and assigns, George A. Casey, of Wilmington, Del.; Clifford R. Powell, of Mount Holly, N. J.; and Anthony J. Siracusa, of Atlantic City, N. J., their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River at or near Wilmington, Del.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 1499) granting a pension to Louisa Deen (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 1500) granting a pension to Leo R. Snow (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHIPPS, Mr. WATERMAN, Mr. CUTTING, Mr. BRATTON, Mr. SHEPPARD, and Mr. CONNALLY:

A bill (S. 1501) giving the consent and approval of Congress to the Rio Grande compact signed at Santa Fe, N. Mex., on February 12, 1929, authorizing the construction of a drainage channel in the closed basin of the San Luis Valley in Colorado, authorizing investigations of reservoir sites, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. GLASS:

A bill (S. 1502) to amend title 28, section 192, United States Code, in respect to the terms of court in the western judicial district of Virginia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 57) transferring to the Veterans' Bureau the management of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Johnson City, Tenn.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) creating a commission to study proposals for a national system of express motor ways, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

AMENDMENTS TO THE TARIFF BILL

CELLULOSE ACETATE, ETC.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2667, the tariff revision bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

CHROMITE OR CHROME ORE, METALLIC MANGANESE, LEAD-BEARING ORES, ETC.

Mr. WHEELER submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2667, the tariff revision bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

OIL LAND LEASES—PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico will state it.

Mr. CUTTING. In speaking in the Senate on June 11 in reference to the conference of governors on oil conservation, I read from an Associated Press dispatch quoting the president of the conference, Mr. Mark L. Requa, as follows:

> If and when the Government has made it possible for the industry to cooperate and conserve, and that cooperation and conservation is not forthcoming, then acting in behalf of national need, no one will be more insistent than myself in urging rigid Government coercive regulation.

I have just received a telegram from Mr. Mark L. Requa, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO., June 12, 1929.
> Senator BRONSON CUTTING,
> Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
> Acting on what I assume was misunderstanding of my statement you criticized me on the floor of the Senate June 11 for demanding coercive legislation. Permit me to quote paragraph in question from my speech. Might I ask as matter of simple justice that you read this paragraph into RECORD?—
> "There are two schools of thought concerning permissive and coercive procedure. Upon this subject President Coolidge in his letter appointing the Federal oil conservation board said:
> "'The oil industry itself might be permitted to determine its own future. That future might be left to the simple working of the law of supply and demand but for the patent fact that the oil industry's welfare is so intimately linked with the industrial prosperity and safety of the whole people that Government and business can well join forces to work out this problem of practical conservation.'"
> Personally I have always believed in trying the permissive theory before attempting the coercive. The voluntary control and self-government exercised by the industry during the World War under the supervision of the oil division of the United States Fuel Administration was a success. The lessons then learned should not now be forgotten. Of that control the Bureau of Planning and Statistics of the War Industries Board had this to say:
> "Reference to the curve of all commodities will show that petroleum products in 1918 were no more expensive relatively than they were during the period of depressed prices in 1915, and less expensive relatively than at any other time in 1913 to 1918, with the exception of a few months in 1916, when the crude market was recovering from the crushing depression.
> "To this extent and particularly in view of the paramount importance of petroleum as a war necessity, the control exercised by the fuel administration through the oil division and by the industry through the national petroleum war service committee may be considered as successful."
> It has been cynically pointed out upon many occasions since the armistice that the petroleum industry in peace time can not be judged by the petroleum industry in time of war, and that my ideas of industrial self-government are fantastic and Utopian day dreams. I shall be convinced only after actual proof has shown me that I am wrong, and I might add that if and when Government has made it possible for the industry to cooperate and conserve, and that cooperation and conservation is not forthcoming, then, acting in behalf of national need, no one will be more insistent than myself in urging rigid Government coercive regulation. Failure upon the part of industry to grasp its opportunity would merit just that alternative program.
> M. L. REQUA.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, anyone who will take the trouble to compare the statement there made by Mr. Requa with the Associated Press dispatch which I quoted the other day will find them verbally identical. I, therefore, do not feel that I have anything to retract.

What criticism of Mr. Requa may have been implied in what I said was based not only on the threat of coercion but on the fact that he, as chairman of the conference, declined to allow the discussion of a resolution backed by most of the Rocky Mountain States questioning the order made by the Secretary of the Interior last March.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In regard to the point to which the Senator has just referred, that is not covered in the telegram at all, is it?

Mr. CUTTING. No; Mr. Requa does not mention that.

I have information—I do not know whether it is correct or not—that on the second day of the conference Mr. Requa reversed his ruling of the first day, but my feeling is that the harm had already been done. As most Senators are aware, the conference collapsed yesterday without accomplishing any result whatever.

I am sure that the Senators from California and Arizona especially will realize the extreme difficulty of getting a conference of States to agree on any form of interstate compact even when promoted under the best possible auspices. My feeling is that to begin a conference of that sort with talk about coercion—even though it may be hypothetical coercion, to be employed in the remote future—and at the same time to rule out of order a phase of the question which is vital to about half of the States engaged in the conference is, to put it mildly, somewhat of a tactical error.

I want to say, however, that I agree with one statement made by Mr. Requa, namely, that—

> There are two schools of thought concerning permissive and coercive procedure.

Mr. President, in dealing with sovereign States I belong to the school of "permissive procedure," or, perhaps, it might still better be expressed as "persuasive procedure." I hope that, after the rather ignominious collapse of the Colorado Springs conference, Mr. Requa may become a convert to that school of thought.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. PURNELL, Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, Mr. ASWELL, and Mr. KINCHELOE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) to provide for the observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, and it was signed by the Vice President.

JEFFERSON DAVIS'S FLIGHT THROUGH SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Charlotte Observer of May 26, 1929, entitled "Jefferson Davis's Flight Through South Carolina."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Charlotte Observer, Sunday, May 26, 1929]

JEFFERSON DAVIS'S FLIGHT THROUGH SOUTH CAROLINA—PRESIDENT OF CONFEDERACY ENTERTAINED IN THREE HOMES IN PATRIOTIC UNION COUNTY—DINED IN TWO OF THEM AND SPENT NIGHT IN THIRD—CHINA OUT OF WHICH HE ATE AND DIVAN ON WHICH HE SAT STILL ARE PRESERVED—DOORS OPENED WIDE TO THIS PATHETIC FIGURE WHOSE STAR HAD REACHED ITS ZENITH AND WAS SINKING BEHIND THE CLOUDS OF ADVERSITY

By Allan Nicholson

One hundred years ago on June 3 one of America's most illustrious, and later in life most maligned, citizens attained his majority and was able to exercise for the first time his constitutional right and privilege of franchise. Jefferson Davis was the name of this great American soldier, scholar, statesman. He was the first and only president of the Confederate States of America.

ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH

As the one hundred and twenty-first anniversary of the birth of Jefferson Davis is at hand, there are many facts connected with his life and career that are of interest to all southerners, and particularly to the people of North Carolina and South Carolina, as for a brief time in his flight from Richmond, after the downfall of the Confederacy, he was the honored guest at three different homes in Union County, S. C., while his esteemed wife, who was traveling separately with another party, was refused shelter and hospitality in Charlotte until a Mr. Weil, taking pity on her, invited her to stay at his home until she could make other arrangements.

Before these incidents of the memorable trip south from Richmond are related, some of the outstanding facts regarding the life of Jefferson Davis will be both timely and worth recalling.

BORN IN KENTUCKY

It was on June 3, 1808, that Jefferson Davis was born in Christian County, now known as Todd County, in Kentucky. His father, Samuel Davis, moved, when Jefferson was an infant, to Mississippi, but later the son returned to Kentucky as a student at Transylvania College, from which he received an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y.

When 20 years of age Jefferson Davis completed his 4-year course after having made a splendid record for scholarship and for military training, and received a commission as second lieutenant.

Davis soon after went West and served with distinction in the Black Hawk Indian war. When the chief of the tribe was captured he was committed to the custody of Lieutenant Davis, and historians tell us that, because of the kindly consideration shown him by the American Army officer, the Indian chief came not only to respect but really to love his custodian. This spirit of wonderful consideration for the feelings of the captive was in striking contrast to that which Jefferson Davis later himself experienced when, as the former President of the Southern Confederacy, he was captured by Federal troops, taken to Fortress Monroe, and there put and kept in irons for a long period of his two years' confinement in the prison—an indignity and unnecessarily degrading oppression, the thought of which still causes the blood of every southerner to boil, and a sense of regret to fill the heart of every true American.

BLACK HAWK WAR

After the Black Hawk Indian war Lieutenant Davis resigned his commission that he might marry Miss Sarah Knox Taylor, daughter of Col. Zachary Taylor, who later became President of the United States. This marriage was solemnized in the home of the bride's aunt in Kentucky in 1835, but their marriage was of short duration, for it was not long before she died.

Following her death Jefferson Davis devoted a large portion of his time to study and deep thought, which made him one of the best-informed men of the South, and, combined with his oratorical ability, won for him such recognition at the hands of the people that he became a Member of the United States Senate and served for years, making a great record for himself by his stand on and advocacy of prominent public questions.

In 1845 he was married a second time, choosing as his helpmate Miss Varina Howell, of Mississippi, who was his dearly beloved companion and helper all the rest of his life, and who after his death on December 6, 1889, gave to the world his biography, which will make people the world over recognize him for all time to come as a great and honorable public man, and humble, sincere, Christian gentleman.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS

Jefferson Davis was elected a Member of Congress in 1845. After the United States entered into war with Mexico he resigned from Congress in 1846, and was elected colonel of a Mississippi regiment. Colonel Davis, with his Mississippi regiment, fought so valiantly at Buena Vista that with 5,000 men he won a victory over the Mexican, Santa Anna, with 20,000 men. In this battle he was severely wounded, but would not retire from the field until sure of victory. For his gallantry he was appointed brigadier general by the President, but this honor he declined, as he considered the President had no right to make such an appointment. In 1853 he was made Secretary of War in the cabinet of President Pierce. When his term of office expired he entered the Senate and did all in his power to preserve the Union.

How Union County, S. C., through its different citizens, touched and affected politically and socially the life and career of Jefferson Davis, with particular reference to the office of President of the Confederate States of America, is not so generally known, but that a recital here of the facts may be of special interest, as the birthday anniversary of the southern chieftain is at hand.

SECEDING CONVENTION

It was a son of Union County, S. C., William H. Gist, who, as governor of the Palmetto State, called the convention which resulted in South Carolina being the first State to secede from the Union, and to take the lead in the forming of the Southern Confederacy, of which on its organization Jefferson Davis became its president and continued as such until it ceased to exist.

It was another son of Union County, General States Rights Gist, who, as the cousin of Governor Gist, bore the confidential message from Governor Gist to the governor of each of the Southern States, which outlined a plan of action should Lincoln be elected President, and which later resulted in other States following the lead of South Carolina and seceding from the Union.

Still another Union County man was secretary of the convention when the Palmetto State drew up the ordinance of secession and withdrew from the American Union. Secretary Arthur was a prominent lawyer, and had served as private secretary to Governor Gist. Nearly three-quarters of a century later the grandson of Secretary Arthur, who had taken such a prominent part in helping to dissolve the Union, after distinguished services as an aviator overseas, met death while in the service of the reunited States.

CURIOUS COINCIDENCE

Another remarkable and interesting coincidence that has perhaps never before been pointed out in public prints is that the only son of Gen. W. H. Wallace, who was the first host in Union County when President Davis and his cabinet passed through that county on its flight from Richmond, many years afterwards married the daughter of Col. James Morris Morgan, who was with the party that was taking Mrs. Jefferson Davis and children from Richmond by a different route to Abbeville, S. C., where the Confederate cabinet later was finally dissolved.

It was on the morning of April 28, 1865, that a Confederate courier dashed into the town of Union from the east, and, halting at the home of Gen. W. H. Wallace, who had performed a distinguished service in the Confederate Army before the surrender of General Lee, delivered a message to the effect that President Davis and his cabinet expected to pass through Union that day, and if convenient and the hazard of entertaining the highest officials of the Confederate Government was not considered too great, that they would like to have dinner at General Wallace's home. Without a moment's hesitancy General Wallace told him that he would esteem it an honor to have President Davis and his party dine and remain at his home as long as was desired.

THE COMING OF DAVIS

Seeing the Confederate courier ride up, the news soon spread throughout the town that the distinguished guests would soon arrive. With the spirit of southern loyalty and southern hospitality all the neighbors speedily offered to lend every possible assistance to General and Mrs. Wallace in this emergency. From one home, that of Mr. William Hughes, the father of Mrs. John K. Young, who still resides in Union, and who has told the writer of the event, a splendid turkey was quickly killed and brought to grace the president's table. The old colored cook, realizing the importance of the occasion, excelled herself in her always wonderful cooking. Other neighbors brought in various delicacies, and from here and there sufficient "real" coffee, which was then almost unheard of, because of the war, was brought and given to Mrs. Wallace.

It was said of this coffee that it was so good that Secretary of State Judah P. Benjamin, who was in the party, after his first cup asked for a second, then after the second, asked for a third. The hostess sent back to the kitchen, but alas, all of the real coffee was gone! However, those who were helping there solved the problem by pouring hot water over the coffee grounds that remained, and Secretary Benjamin got his third cup, although it was greatly diluted.

HOME STILL STANDS

This Wallace home still stands on Main Street in Union to-day. It is now owned by a prominent lawyer, J. A. Sawyer. The building remains the same except that a broader piazza has been added. In the home of the only son of General Wallace, Capt. Daniel H. Wallace, who now resides in Greenville, is the sofa on which it is said that President Davis sat while a guest in his father's home! Speaking of the sofa to the writer Captain Wallace recently said, "And it is a mighty uncomfortable one, too!"

Among the members of President Davis's party was Secretary of War Breckinridge and Postmaster General Reagan, of Texas. While President Davis was at the Wallace home Mr. Reagan rode farther up the street and going to the home of Mr. Brandon asked if he might dine there as he feared that General Wallace's home was being overtaxed. This request was granted, and Mr. Reagan dined at the home, which was located where the Union Grammar School now stands, and two Union ladies, Mrs. A. H. Foster and Miss Emma Brandon still recall well the pleasure of his visit.

Late the same afternoon President Davis with his cabinet officers and escort left for the southern part of the county, where they had supper, spent the night, and had breakfast at the home of Mrs. J. R. R. Giles, whose husband had been killed during the war, and who afterwards married another Confederate officer, Capt. James T. Douglas. This divergency from the most direct route to Abbeville was probably to elude possible pursuers.

Mrs. Douglas before her death told how she was surprised when, during the afternoon, a soldier rode up and asked if President Davis and his party might spend the night at her home. Being a loyal southerner she promptly and gladly gave full consent. Immediately she summoned the servants who had remained with her and told them to go and dig up the family silver which had been buried at different places in near-by woods for fear of being stolen by soldiers of Sherman's. A sumptuous supper, at least sumptuous because it included everything that could be provided on a large plantation, was prepared. One of the delicacies was the first strawberries of the season, which Mrs. Douglas said she picked herself, and put in a special bowl for President Davis. The goblet and some of the other things used on the table when President Davis was a guest is now in the relic room of the Union Carnegie Library.

On April 29, just before the usual dinner hour, quite a party of gentlemen rode up to the Cross Key house, about 13 miles west of Union. This residence is a two-story building with basement, the brick, it is said, having been brought from England by ship and then 200 miles from Charleston by wagon. The spokesman of the party asked the owner of this famous country home, known as Cross Keys, and connected with which are so many associations of tragedy, romance, patriotism, and hospitality, if the party might dine there. The owner of the home, Mrs. Mary Davis, wife of Mr. Warren Davis, promptly invited all to make themselves at home, although to her the visitors were unknown. From smokehouse and pantry an abundance of good things were brought forth for the meal, which were evidently relished by the unexpected guests. The china platter on which the meat was served and the silver used have been in the family now for five generations, and are the property of Mrs. John D. Long, wife of the secretary of United States Senator COLE L. BLEASE.

MEETS HIS NAMESAKE

The day the visitors appeared at the door was very windy, and Mrs. Davis noticed that one wore a very long cape and had a muffler around his neck. This partly concealed his face, though used to protect himself from the wind, as he appeared to have a cold. As this evident leader bowed over the hand of his hostess when parting and expressing his appreciation of her courtesy and hospitality, he gave her the first definite information as to his identity, as he said:

"I believe that we have the same name. My name is Jefferson Davis."

In less than an hour after leaving the Cross Key house President Davis and his party passed out of Union County, a county which he had honored with visits in three homes, and a county whose people still hold him in highest esteem because of his exalted qualities as a soldier, student of men and affairs, and first and only president of the Southern Confederacy, which is sometimes spoken of as "The Lost Cause," but which, in the opinion of loyal southerners, was a very triumphant cause because love and loyalty and sacrifice carried on for more than four years against overwhelming odds its great fight for what it considered its rights.

ADDRESS BY ALEXANDER KONTA ON AMERICAN-HUNGARIANS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD an address delivered by a distinguished scholar of my State, Mr. Alexander Konta, on American-Hungarians.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

AMERICAN-HUNGARIANS—THEIR DUTIES AND RIGHTS AS CITIZENS AND THEIR PRIVILEGES IN RELATION TO THEIR MOTHERLAND

This is an important meeting, perhaps the most important ever held by the American-Hungarians in this country. In numbers it is impressive. In the character of its members it is outstanding. In the great and pressing problems which it has met to consider it is unique. No previous gathering of our colonies has been faced with matters of such urgency. And none has been in greater need of cool, calm judgment for the best results in the immediate and distant future of our peoples.

It is because of the importance of our convention and the attention it will draw from both public and press, here and abroad, that I propose to read this address. As is fitting, it has been written in the language of our adopted country and has been faithfully translated into our mother tongue. In both forms, I think, it is incapable of misconstruction. And right here at the very beginning I wish to state boldly and fearlessly that I stand by every word of it. There is not a sentence in it that could not have been written by a full-blooded American citizen. There is not a word in it which should offend the susceptibility of any American-Hungarian who cherishes the truest fidelity to the country of his adoption.

That word "fidelity" happily strikes a note peculiarly relevant to the occasion that has brought us all together. Briefly, it means faithfulness or careful observance of duty or obligations. It is one of the vital words in the oath which all aliens seeking American citizenship are required by statute to make before naturalization is granted. It is equally relevant to recall here the precise wording of that section of the statute covering naturalization proceedings in general and in particular the oath renouncing foreign allegiance:

"He shall before he is admitted to citizenship declare on oath in open court that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely and entirely renounces and abjures all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he was before a citizen or subject; that he will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States, against all enemies, foreign or domestic, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same."

In the so-called "declaration of intention," it may also be recalled, the alien is required to sign the following:

"* * * It is my bona fide intention to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly to ————, of which I am now a citizen (subject) * * * and it is my intention in good faith to become a citizen of the United States of America and to permanently reside therein."

It will be noticed how often those expressions "fidelity," "good faith," "bona fide" are used in these documents. They show the importance which our Government attaches to the alien's undertaking carefully to observe his duties and obligations to his adopted country. And I should be lacking in faith in my brother American-Hungarians did I not voice the feeling that when they promised true faith and allegiance to the United States they knew exactly what they promised. They exchanged something of value in their old lives for something of value in their new lives. They gave up a birthright for a new citizenship, with all the rights which that citizenship implies. They did this with free hand and open eyes, knowing that once their naturalization was completed they would have abandoned forever (or until they desired again to change their citizenship) all fealty to their native land. Henceforth there would be for them but one country, one Constitution, one flag, and one supreme duty—fidelity to country, Constitution, and flag.

If I have a reason for impressing these things upon you at the moment, it is owing to the existence of a seeming doubt in some minds as to the full meaning of that oath. To me it is crystal clear. But I have been told that some aliens make the oath with mental reservations. That they believe in the possibility of a double fealty. That although they swear to support the United States they can also serve Hungary, both in spirit and act. That, in short, the oath is but a form of words, its spirit being negligible.

I see before me to-day in this audience a number of American-Hungarians whose cloth proclaims them to be servants of Christ and their fellow men. They are our fellow citizens, and, like us, have taken the oath of allegiance to this country. They are by their training and vocation better able than we to decide on a matter of conscience. For, after all, the meaning of an oath is a matter of conscience. And I would ask them to tell me the meaning of the word "oath" and the expression "the sanctity of an oath." Can a man who makes an oath have mental reservations? Can one who promises allegiance to the United States in return for the citizenship conferred upon him show allegiance, either openly or secretly, to his motherland? Can he as an honorable man when he signs the papers which give him new and precious privileges feel in the silent chambers of his soul that he can perform a dual duty?

The asking of such questions is not to embarrass but to clarify. "The sanctity of an oath" is not a form of words. It means something that is fine and creditable. Its foundation is self-respect and honor. I go farther than that and say that any man who takes an oath of fidelity to the United States of America without meaning to live up to it in act and spirit is unworthy of confidence and unworthy of the citizenship which this country confers upon him. He is a Mr. Two-Face, a double-dealer, contemptible.

It is no defense to reply that oaths are violated every day, in our law courts and elsewhere. In the matter of an oath you are the keeper of your own conscience. You are not your brother's keeper.

But enough on that point. The question has been rising in your minds as to your attitude toward the motherland once you have become American citizens. And on this subject I crave your indulgence for spending a little time.

It is hardly necessary to state that the attitude of a naturalized citizen toward his native country depends on whether his adopted country is at war or not, and particularly with his native country. We all had that fact impressed upon us during the World War, and it stands to the undying credit of American-Hungarians that they acted throughout that period of horror with extraordinary self-control and propriety. They observed their oath of allegiance. Nothing more, indeed, need be said, except that when the United States entered the war and became a technical enemy of Hungary the Government respected the natural feeling of all American-Hungarians to sympathize with the unfortunate position in which Hungary was placed. It was a great moment for the display of tolerance, and all of us were grateful for the understanding of our position which the Government showed. All that was demanded of us—and rightly so—was that the Hungarian-born peoples of the United States should give no aid, openly or secretly, to the enemy of the United States. This was an observance of the sanctity of their oath.

In time of peace such restrictions vanish. The same freedom to think, speak, and act possessed by native-born citizens is possessed by naturalized citizens. There is no limit to that freedom so long as the thought, speech, and action are not subversive of the laws and a breach of the oath of allegiance. There is no barrier against affection for one's native country. Neither the Government nor the native-born citizenry of the United States prevents or would seek to prevent in time of peace any expression of such affection. The Frenchman can be a good American while he sighs for the poplars along the Seine or the hot suns of the Midi. The German may recall the fatherland without offense and manifest an open pride in its resumption of a splendid industrial position. The naturalized Briton may even assert his preference for the British form of government as against the American. And the naturalized Hungarian may point with pride to the artistic leadership of his motherland while he laments the economic distress from which it is slowly emerging. These are all matters of opinion and sentiment. They are natural throwbacks to a past that can not be eradicated by statute from men's lives and memories. I go so far as to say that if a French or German or British or Hungarian American were to forget that past—to cut himself wholly loose from a love of his native country, even while being fully conscious of his allegiance to his adopted country—he would be pitiable, if not despicable. When the poet wrote—

> "Breathes there a man with soul so dead
> Who never to himself hath said
> This is my own, my native land?"

he gave utterance to a universal thought, rich in its sentiment to all men of inborn patriotism. The fact that many men, for individual reasons, become voluntary expatriates from their native countries does not invalidate the sentiment.

So far I have been speaking of individual opinion. And, in so doing, I have been uttering thoughts on which, in the past, I have based many of my own actions. That is to say, during an experience of over 40 years as an American citizen, in fairly intimate touch with American thought and movement, I have never felt myself debarred from expressing admiration and devotion to my native land. I have rarely failed, when occasion arose, to point out with pride to my compatriots the claims of Hungary to the consideration of the world as a leader in the arts and sciences. I have tried on many occasions to interpret to America the ideals for which Hungary stood. I have impressed upon them times without number that wonderful historic past which has made Hungary almost a mother among nations. No one has ever told me that in voicing this kind of devotion to my native country I was trespassing upon others' feelings or uttering anything subversive to my oath of allegiance. Doubtless you also have said similar things, and have admired with me the spirit of tolerance which, in the happy times of peace, has been exhibited toward us by our brother citizens. This is one of the outstanding reasons why, throughout the years, there has existed between Americans and Hungarian-Americans such mutuality of respect.

But—I now approach my subject with more earnestness—there is an important difference between individual opinion and united opinion. There is a difference between affection for Hungary and action in behalf of Hungary. Concretely, the question now concerning us is, What shall we do and how far shall we go in aiding our native country from its present profound unhappiness? Shall we, the representatives of the American-Hungarians of the United States, in convention assembled, freely and openly, with full consciousness of our oath of allegiance, discuss this vexed problem? And shall we declare ourselves as a body in favor of united action toward such relief?

It is within the knowledge of all of us that this question has been agitating the American-Hungarian communities for several years. There is not a Hungarian family in this country that hasn't been stirred by the spectacle of suffering Hungary. There is not one which at some time or another has not felt the urgency of making some kind of sacrifice. The discussions have even threatened to split what unity has existed in our communities. At meetings, public and private, the matter has been threshed out, to no complete conclusion. We are still split. We are at loggerheads. There are groups among us who feel strongly that action should be taken. We must, they say, fight out the Hungarian problem here. In the praiseworthy hope of helping the motherland, we must abandon our domestic differences and express ourselves as one voice. There are other groups who feel that either the time is not ripe for such action or that cooperation in the mother country's interest is inadvisable in view of international problems and our major duties as American citizens. It is certainly a matter in which wise counsel should prevail. Otherwise—we know not what—some situation would develop to counteract all the good that concerted action might apparently promise.

It seems to me, when the problem is weighed carefully, that it resolves itself into a question of tact and taste. Also, if any pronouncement is to be made on that most important topic—the proposed revision of the treaty of Trianon—how that pronouncement should be made and how it should be followed up in action.

Now, apart from the question of propriety in discussing here our attitude toward revision, I may advance my opinion that this convention has every right to such discussion. There is nothing in the Constitution of the United States, to which we have sworn allegiance, that can or would prevent us. And, interpreting the American spirit of free discussion, I know that there can be no disapproval of it by our fellow citizens. If there were a possibility of this, I should counsel most careful preliminary examination of the reasons against such discussion. But there is really no ground for it. This is proved by the fact that the American press and public have themselves become aware of the importance of the question of revision and for several years now have been steadily expressing demand for the righting of an international injustice. If, therefore, it is correct for the American press and public to utter opinion on the propriety and justice of revision, it can not be wrong for us, American-Hungarians craving justice for their motherland, to express our attitude.

When I said it was really a matter of tact and taste I meant that, although we had a right to discuss revision, it was essential we should advance our opinion and define our attitude in the manner least calculated to offend any American susceptibilities or to arouse antagonisms. In one important aspect alone there is danger ahead if we blunder in our course. That danger lies in the existent feeling among some Americans that the war treaties are sacrosanct. My observation tells me that this feeling is decreasing; that the injustices or mistakes of the treaties are gradually manifesting themselves and weakening the faith in their sacrosanctity. But while that feeling lasts it is an opposition to be regarded, and we should not carelessly give offense.

Moreover, it must be remembered that there is a small but influential body of opinion among our fellow citizens that European troubles should not be "ironed out," as we say colloquially, on American soil. Personally I respect this opinion, though I do not agree with it. As I look back upon the history of the United States I see it not only as a memorable asylum for the progressive thinkers among foreign populations but also as a great forum for the presentation of problems affecting the well-being of European nations and peoples. This has been due to the character of the American Nation as foster mother to the immigrant and to the profound interest always taken by the people of the United States in their political and social relations with the outside world. In this attitude there is tolerance and sympathy and understanding. To these on innumerable occasions appeals have been made by foreigners. English, Irish, French, Italian, Germans, Japanese, Chinese—to mention a few peoples only—have on many occasions, through the naturalized citizens of those nations here, drawn attention to home troubles and have asked for open discussion. But I have noticed that, generally speaking, success has come to such appeals only when they were made with a certain deference and sobriety of utterance. There is nothing that so annoys the American people as unbridled agitation and intemperate political thought. They hate what are called paid agitators, and they resent particularly being in doubt as to the real allegiance of naturalized citizens who have taken oath to be good Americans.

We must proceed in our presentation of our problems with propriety. We must recognize the existence of sensitive spots in the political consciences of our fellow citizens. We must not give them the impression, by violence of utterance, that we are more interested in Hungarian welfare than in American welfare. We must not, by careless language or action, involve our adopted country in any awkward international situation. And—I stress this with profound emphasis—we must not permit our fellow citizens to think that our expression of sympathy for Hungary—our call for American sympathy and action in regard to the Trianon treaty—is the result of subsidization.

On this important point I need not remind you that in the past much money has been spent in America by foreign nations for the cultivation of American public opinion. In some cases large amounts have been paid to naturalized and alien leaders to fight against the Americanization of the children of immigrants. I mention this merely to impress on you the fact that many Americans, knowing this inspired use of foreign gold, are often skeptical of the bona fides of agitation. It is our duty, therefore, to remove by our speech and acts any possible doubt that our united interest, as American-Hungarians, in a revision of the treaty is "inspired" by home influence. We must put forth our plea on the supreme ground of justice. We must make our call in language of deep-seated conviction. To express it bluntly and in plainer words, no one should be permitted to feel—and no one should have reason to feel—that our arguments are inspired by Hungarian money rattling in our pockets.

If we are going forward—and if we have any among us who are rattling Hungarian money—let us repudiate them right now on the spot. Let us kick them out. Their presence is an insult. Their actions, if we do not repudiate these "inspired" agitators, will cause our failure. They will kill the movement.

Let us call the movement what other people may call it—propaganda. There is no shame in that word, however sinister its meaning may have become during recent years. What we are planning to embark upon is propaganda in behalf of a revision of the Trianon treaty. But, mark you, there are various ways of carrying on propaganda. One is by the use, as I have implied, of "inspired" argument. Another is by the utterance of sincere conviction. Sometimes it takes the form of aggressive and tactless speech. Sometimes it is couched in the language of honorable persuasion. In the former case it is provocative and often abortive. In the latter case it is educative and productive of good result. Our propaganda, therefore, to succeed must be educative. We must each of us be an earnest pleader for a cause that is right and just—a pleader fortified by incontrovertible facts and temperate in the presentation of them. "Thrice armed," says Shakespeare, "is he who hath his quarrel just." To make my point I would amend the bard by altering "quarrel" to "prayer" and by saying that impregnably armed is he who makes his prayer honestly, convincingly, and educatively.

This educative campaign need not be carried on within our own communities. There is no subject on which all of us are better informed than the wrong done to Hungary and the imperative demand for justice. The cruel blow which fell upon our native land crushed its spirit. The pain of it touched every Hungarian nerve throughout the world. Whether American citizens or not, we witnessed in agony the wolfish tearing up of our motherland, the tossing of bleeding flesh to greedy enemies. And ever since there has not been a Hungarian home in Europe or America in which the matter of revision has not been discussed. No, gentlemen, the Hungarian colonies of the United States require no arguments to convince them that revision is not only just but imperative.

It is to the native American public, with its inborn devotion to the principles of justice and equity, that we may rightly and successfully appeal. In this direction much may be accomplished. However much the United States may now be interested in domestic matters, the interest of its citizens in foreign affairs remains keen. Their industrial and financial well-being depend, to a considerable extent, upon a contented Europe. Their investments in Europe are immense. But while informed of the general condition abroad, they remain somewhat uninformed regarding specific reasons of unrest. Many of them know nothing of Hungary. They are ignorant of the provisions of the treaty of Trianon. The spectacle of the dissection of Hungary—or, as I might call it, the dance of the vultures—has not drawn their tears. They have been too far from the bloody scene to be shocked. If they ever felt a tremor, they have forgotten.

To these people, our fellow citizens, we may appropriately present our appeal for support. We shall find, no doubt, when our arguments are advanced, our story told, that some are not interested. "Let Hungary take care of herself," they may say. If this should happen, I implore you against anger. There exists in the United States an important body of public opinion which opposes on principle any political interference by their country in European matters. This attitude is understandable. We should not wittingly offend that opinion. We should only lose by it. But there is a much larger body of public opinion which is, so to speak, fluid and open to persuasion. This body may be approached with confidence. Success in that direction is certain if our cause be well presented. We well know the justice of the cause.

There is another aspect of this matter—a very important one. It must not be overlooked that the motherland has bitter enemies within the United States. These people are to be found in other foreign communities of America. They represent powerfully, in private capacities and in their press, the same venomous anti-Hungarian sentiment which existed long before the war, and has since increased. I shall not mention names, because you know them. But I will say that the joy of these people when the dance of vultures was performed was both irrepressible and ominous. As spectators at the spectacle, they took part in the dance. They gloated in the dismemberment of Hungary. They sucked their lips in anticipation of the feast. In the ecstacy of deglutition and digestion they have been blatant and arrogant, while we, Hungarian born, have been looking on, in an honorable humiliation, at the boisterous banqueting. It is, however, but a short and sad chapter in the history of our suffering. The time is coming soon when, God will, that chapter will be blackened from our book.

Meantime this anti-Hungarian sentiment shows no sign of slackening. There is every evidence that it is fomented by the anti-Hungarian press in America. Those nations abroad which profited by the treaty of Trianon to the disadvantage of Hungary are not disposed to sacrifice their profits through inactivity. Obviously, they are supporting their press here in agitation against any revision of the treaty. Cognizant of fundamental Hungarian right, disturbed by the cumulative growth of the demand for revision, and fearful of any interposition by the United States as a result of awakened public sentiment, they may be relied upon to increase their opposition to our progress. They will attempt to counteract us at every step of our way. They are rich and prosperous, and they will not give up their ill-deserved possessions without a bitter fight.

Knowledge of this internal antagonism is good. But there will be no good in fighting it aggressively. If we proceed with dignity along the line of sound argument and peaceable persuasion, we shall win. Any other course, it seems to me, will result in another spectacle, that of a deplorable and undignified racial quarrel between members of our foreign-born citizenry. We can not afford to engage in such a fight. Our American fellow citizens would sicken at the spectacle. In disgust they will deny us the justice for which we plead.

It is essential that we go forth unitedly. As to that, much will depend on the temper and judgment of this gathering. I have no doubt that the wisest counsels will prevail, and that once more the old truth will be demonstrated—that in unity lies strength. As to the presentation of our case, little need be said by me. There are certain outstanding facts which require no elaboration by argument, no glossing to make them convincing. They are:

In 1914 the thousand-year-old Hungary, ancient defender of Christianity against the unbelieving Turk, was populated by 25,000,000 on nearly 126,000 square miles of territory.

In 1920 this population was reduced by 59 per cent.

The territory of Hungary was reduced by 68 per cent.

On June 4 of that year Transylvania was ceded to Rumania, Croatia and Slavonia to Yugoslavia.

The Hungarians in these ceded countries were forced without their consent to become nationals of enemy nations. In other words, more than half the population of pre-war Hungary—Hungarian fathers, mothers, children—are now living under foreign yoke.

To dispose of such territory and peoples as a reward of war superiority in defiance of the principle of self-determination was a grievous wrong. It was a negation of high moral principle by the allied nations and, for this reason with others, a major political mistake.

The makers of the treaty of Trianon were and are responsible for this momentous blunder.

So much, gentlemen, is fairly well known to our fellow citizens. When they recall the facts they bow their heads in shame. They were among the high-minded progressives who thrilled to the idealism of the late President Wilson, and on the defeat of that idealism, sunk with him into the valley of despondence. With these friends we need not argue for aid. But there are innumerable Americans who do not know the facts. To these you need only to show a map of proud Hungary before the war. Then show them a map of dismembered Hungary—the work of the body carvers of Trianon.

* * * * * * *

If all this fails, there are final arguments which should touch the intelligence and conscience of all. The outstanding fact in connection with the history of the Trianon treaty is that in 1919 the separation from Hungary of vast tracts of territory was decided upon without plebiscite, before the Hungarian delegates were able to discuss the terms. It is also a fact that the treaty was rushed through, as one authority states, "in an atmosphere where 'give it to our friends if they want it' and 'after all, those were our enemies' took the place of even such considered judgments as the Allies exhibited through most of the discussions of the German treaty. The Balkan wolves were howling for blood—and territory—and the great powers were apparently willing to mangle the former empire of Francis Joseph to any extent necessary to pacify them."

The position could not have been stated better. And it will not quickly be forgotten by many Americans that one of their own representatives, an uncredited diplomatist possessing anomalous powers, aided in this feast for the wolves. The only possible defense for this inglorious confirmation in the treaty of the "deal" approved by this man is that the great powers could not reverse the decision without breaking faith with the smaller allies.

Had things been otherwise—had the people of the United States been aware of the promises made in their name—had they realized the enormities to be committed—and had they been in a position to enforce their will for justice, the punishment of Hungary for her part in the war would have been different. The old-time American respect and friendship of the United States for Hungary, dating back to the unforgettable visit of Louis Kossuth to America, would have manifested itself. The unquenchable American spirit of equity would have triumphed over the meannesses of greedy conquerors in war.

This memorable friendship, this unquenchable spirit, may be appealed to with confidence. With American opinion supporting us, we may look forward with confidence to revision. But the victory will not come in a single day or days. I would counsel you against any illusions. It is going to be a long, hard fight. It may take years. It may even happen that our children will be called upon to continue the work after our death. But death, the great victor of us all, can not conquer the undying spirit of Hungarian nationalism. It can not stifle our united determination to work with all our power, within our oath as American citizens, for the rehabilitation of our motherland.

Gentlemen, I have finished. I thank you for your patience. I just want to add one thought. It has come into my mind this moment. I have been recalling the picture of our beloved Budapest on June 4, 1920, when the treaty of Trianon was signed. The capital, as you may remember, was draped in mourning. It was a black city, a city of shattered hope, of dark despair. My recollection of that extraordinary day, when the protest of a great people was so profoundly voiced, has prompted another thought. That is, that we should here decide, until revision of the treaty of Trianon is effected, to have an annual day of mourning. If such can be arranged, opportunity will be open for every American-Hungarian, whether naturalized or not, to express his adherence to our cause. Meetings of sympathy with that cause should be held on that day. And American citizens should be invited to join with us in the presentation of our plea for justice to Hungary.

Call it a day of mourning, or a day of tears, or a day of undying hope. It matters not what you call it. By solemn observance of it the more quickly shall we reach our goal.

CENSUS AND APPORTIONMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 312) to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report, which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 312) to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 6.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "eight months from the beginning of the enumeration"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out by the House amendment insert the following: " : Provided further, That in making any appointments under this act to positions in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, preference shall be given to persons discharged under honorable conditions from the military or naval forces of the United States who served in such forces during time of war and were disabled in the line of duty, to their widows, and to their wives if the husband is not qualified to hold such positions"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "without regard to the civil service laws or the classification act of 1923, as amended, except that such special agents shall be appointed in accordance with the civil service laws"; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be stricken out and the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter proposed to be stricken out by the House amendment and in lieu thereof insert the following: "to unemployment" and a comma; and the House agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following: "April"; and the House agree to the same.

RALPH F. LOZIER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania will state it.

Mr. REED. This does not displace the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to make just a brief statement with reference to the conference report, covering practically the points in disagreement between the two Houses.

The three principal amendments in controversy in conference were as follows: One amendment related to the date of the beginning of the census. The Senate had fixed November 1 and the House May 1. The conferees have agreed upon April 1. That seemed to be a very satisfactory compromise, and it has been agreed upon.

The second was with reference to the civil-service amendment of the Senate putting the enumerators, supervisors, and special agents under civil service. We found the House conferees almost adamant against the amendment. The Senate conferees held out for the Senate amendment as long as they felt it was possible to accomplish anything, and we finally secured a compromise by which the special agents are to be under civil service.

The third amendment was the question of including radio sets in the enumeration. We took this up at the second meeting of the conferees and attempted to get the House to recede from its amendment striking out the Senate provision, but we were unable to do so, and so it was receded from by the Senate conferees.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. KING. There were two amendments which I offered the effect of which was to subject the employees who are brought into the activities under the bill to the same salaries and compensation that are now being paid employees of the Government for like or comparable service. May I ask the Senator what became of those provisions?

Mr. JONES. The Senate conferees were unable to hold those provisions in the bill. We sought to do so, but the House conferees, considering the condition with reference to those employees, and especially the fact that they will have a very short term of employment, in some cases two weeks and in others from three to five months, were not willing to accept the Senate provisions; so the Senate conferees receded.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Washington has stated, I think, clearly the subjects upon which the House conferees were "adamant." Now, will the Senator tell us upon what amendments the Senate conferees were "adamant"?

Mr. JONES. We held out for the Senate amendments just as long as we thought we were justified in doing so or had any hope of getting the House conferees to recede.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the junior Senator from New York?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. So far as a civil-service status is concerned, the compromise amendment does not in any way affect the employees under this proposed act who do the actual work of taking the census of population. Is not that a fact? That class of employees is still without the civil service law.

Mr. JONES. That is, the census enumerators and the census supervisors are without the civil service law.

Mr. WAGNER. And they are the officials who take the census of population. The special agents perform work of a different character.

Mr. JONES. The junior Senator from New York is thoroughly familiar with that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate very long, but I do want those who are genuine friends of the merit system to know the exact situation in relation to this conference report. I shall ask that the Senate reject the report, so that there may be a further conference upon the so-called civil-service amendment.

The compromise amendment reported by the conference committee provides for the selection by competitive examination of only one branch of the field service, namely, the special agents. The special agents have no contact with the taking of the census of population. Their work in no way influences the apportionment of Congress. The act of 1902 and subsequent census acts define the duties of the special agents and limit them to the collection and compilation of statistics concerning defective, dependent, and delinquent classes, social statistics of cities, facts as to public indebtedness, valuation, taxation, and expenditures, religious bodies, manufactures, special industries, and so forth. Their work is in no way related to the taking of a census of population.

I think all of those who voted in favor of the merit-system amendment to the census bill were interested primarily in securing the taking of the census of population in such a way as that it would be uninfluenced by politics; in other words, that those who are to take the census of population, upon which is based representation in Congress and the representation of the States in the electoral college, shall be selected solely with a view to their efficiency and to their ability to take the census accurately, impartially, honestly, and free from political direction. Within the bill as it is now framed has been retained the discredited, discarded spoils system, as against the more modern method which has become a real and integral part of our form of government, namely, the merit system.

Mr. President, it does seem strange to me that the leaders of the party in control should with such tenacity hold to the program of taking the census of population by purely political appointees, when in practically every other activity of the Government we are now without question employing the merit system.

Only the other day when we had the farm relief bill before us no one questioned the advantage of placing under the merit system the employees who were to engage in the governmental activity therein proposed to be created. When the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS]—I want to emphasize the fact that it was the senior Senator from Michigan—proposed an amendment to that bill to have appointments under the Federal farm board made according to the merit system, without any opposition in this body it was incorporated as one of the provisions of the bill. So in every other department of the Government the employees are appointed under the more modern and efficient and enlightened method of the merit system.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. In connection with what the Senator from New York is now saying to the effect that practically all the bureaus in the departments of the Government are under the civil service, let me say that one of the notable exceptions is the Library of Congress. In my judgment, no activity of the Government should be more promptly put under the civil service than the Library of Congress. I introduced a bill a day or two ago—and we will have a hearing on it probably next week—to put that agency of the Government under the merit system, where it ought to be and where all activities of the Government ought to be, in my judgment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I shall be delighted to support the Senator in that effort.

When the question of applying the merit system to appointees under the census bill was previously under consideration by the Senate those who rose in opposition to the amendment, while making great pretenses of being friends of the civil service or merit system—which I did not take very seriously—said, "But the difficulty here is the shortage of time. How can we in the few months available between the passage of the bill and the taking of the census hold the necessary examinations? The time is insufficient for the application of the merit principle. That is the sole reason for my opposition." I am anxious to hear from those gentlemen now. They must contrive another excuse unless they desire to remain in the class of those who advocate the spoils system, because the date of taking the census has now been postponed five months. The question of time is now entirely eliminated. Another excuse will have to be offered by those who still withhold their support from the civil-service amendment.

I desire to ask the gentlemen of the party in power and in control of this legislation—I think the country is entitled to know—"Why do you so tenaciously cling to the appointees who are to do this work, the accuracy and honesty of which is of such vital concern to our Government?" The American people want an impartial and an efficient census taking. They object to political control. I do not want to recite again the sad tales of bygone days, the numerous abuses which have occurred in the taking of the census under the spoils system. We remember 1890. We remember 1900. In my own State we had a census only a short time ago under this very spoils system. As expected, it was accompanied by extravagance and demoralization and followed by the sorry aftermath of indictments and convictions. Let me say to the Senate that every official who has ever had anything to do with the taking of the census under the spoils system has testified to the same effect—that it leads not only to partiality and inefficiency but to extravagance and demoralization. And that, Mr. President, is the system that we are asked to perpetuate in this permanent legislation.

I should like again to recall the message of President Roosevelt. He decided that it was more important to have the merit system incorporated in the taking of the census than to have a census at all. And I was very much gratified to hear that great progressive in this body, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], say, in supporting the merit-system amendment, that one is justified in voting against this whole legislation if the old, discredited, spoils system is to be incorporated in it.

How ridiculous this whole proposal is! Under this bill the Assistant Directors of the Census, who are officers superior to the supervisors who direct the census and the enumerators, are to be appointed according to the civil service law. In other words, they must pass a competitive examination before they can secure their appointment. They are selected from a list of eligibles composed of those who successfully stand a competitive examination. But inferior officers, the supervisors, are to be appointed by the political leaders; and if rumor can be trusted, they have already been appointed. To my mind that is the real difficulty in this situation. We have to abide with this discredited spoils system because, forsooth, the appointments by the political leaders have already been agreed to!

I recognize, Mr. President, that all legislation concerning which there is a conflict between the two Houses is a subject for compromise. I am quite willing to recede to this position—although I am not giving any ground in my convictions upon this question—that the supervisors who direct the census within their respective districts, who appoint the enumerators, shall be put under the competitive system, and their selection shall not be dictated by the political leaders.

There must be a reason that has not yet been disclosed why the census taking is to be controlled by the political party in power. I shall confine my appeal to those who favor the merit system above partisan politics, who are in harmony with the sentiment of the American people, who want an impartial census, uninfluenced by political control, to vote to reject this report, so that we may have another conference and seek a compromise, at least, which will to some extent eliminate the carnival of patronage which will follow if this conference report is accepted.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the conferees have agreed to strike out the amendment for the census of radio sets. I am informed that it was not thought that that subject was of such importance as to justify its being placed in legislation of this kind.

I desire to take just a few minutes to call attention to the importance of radio in the lives of the American people and its importance for the future.

Within a period of six years, since I became a Member of this body, radio has developed from a theory and a fad into a great industry. The sales of radio sets for use in the homes are mounting to somewhere between seven and eight hundred million dollars annually. The broadcasting stations of this country to-day employ nearly 10,000 people, and they spend anywhere from twenty-five to thirty million dollars annually on programs broadcast for the pleasure and instruction of the people of this country. It is said that there is invested in the radio-manufacturing plants more than $200,000,000, and that more than 100,000 persons are on the pay rolls of organizations that are making radio sets.

Of course, compared to other businesses in the amounts of money I have mentioned, radio is not so important; but when it is remembered that this art, this industry, is yet in its infancy, that it has only begun, and when the importance of it in the future of civilization not only of this country but of the world is considered, it seems to me it would justify including in a census the information as to who have radio sets, and where they are, and what sections of the country are most entitled to consideration by the governmental authorities that are regulating this subject.

I have spoken briefly, too, of the industry as we think of it in connection with our daily life as a source of entertainment and as a method of instruction; but the biggest field of radio is not in that line. It is in the commercial and the industrial line, the high frequencies, the short wave lengths, so called. In that field we have only begun, but we have learned enough to know that no man can even prophesy what will be done. These short wave lengths that are being granted for use for commercial purposes are simply invaluable. They can not be valued; and the whole field of radio operation centers around these allocations of wave lengths both in the commercial and in the broadcasting field.

It is true we are spending only about $500,000 per year on the Radio Commission for the work it is now doing; but that work is laying the foundation of the future of radio. The allocations which it is making in giving these licenses to certain corporations and certain individuals will influence the development of radio even beyond what we imagine.

We have tried to write into the law provisions that will make it impossible for anybody to own a wave length in radio; but every man who knows anything at all about the law and the decisions of the courts knows that those who secure these licenses are getting a preference that can be taken away from them only by a showing of superior service by another applicant. It is true they will not own these wave lengths; but they will have a grip there that can not be taken away except by a showing that the other applicant is in a position to give better service to the people than those who have already been granted these rights. That is inherent in the very nature of the situation; and no law we can write will take that away from them.

So, I say, the commission in performing its duties should know where the radio sets of this country are, what percentage of them are in the country districts, and in what sections of the country; what percentage are in the cities, and in what cities; so that when they come to allocate power to an applicant for a radio station, to allocate time on which he will operate, to give him a location on the dial, they will have the information as to the needs of the country. At present that depends entirely upon estimates and theories.

The provision inserted in the bill by the Senate would not have required any elaborate work on the part of the enumerators. Two or three questions, at most, would have been sufficient—whether or not a man had a radio set, and whether it was a tube set or a crystal set. If it were a tube set, then we would know that he could get distant reception. If it were a crystal set, he would depend almost entirely upon the reception within 25 miles of where he was located.

The commission has been granting what are known as cleared channels in radio. By that I mean they have allowed to certain applicants the right to use a certain channel, and no other applicant is permitted to have a radio station operating on that channel. They have set apart 40 of the 89 or 90 available channels for 40 stations, calling them cleared channels. They have done that on the theory that the country people, the farming population, the people in the more distant communities from the great cities, were entitled to have good radio service without interference, which could not be given them unless they had this station on a single cleared channel with high power. Then, taking advantage of that situation, the great broadcasting chain systems have proceeded to hook up these cleared-channel stations. I am informed that 38 of the 40 cleared channels are being used by the broadcasting chains, so that you can tune into the cleared channels in the country districts and get the same program on every station except two—from one or the other of these chains.

It may possibly be that there are so many radio sets in the country districts that such a policy is justified. I do not think so. It may be that the information to be derived through the census would show that this is a wise policy, but I think not. I am not here to argue it now. My point is that we should have accurate and definite information about an industry that is so vital to the future of this country as radio broadcasting is.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I add the point there, if it is any addition, that the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate now has imposed upon it the duty of ascertaining all the information which may be obtained with regard to this art and industry, and that it is practically impossible to ascertain the number of sets that are being used in this country by any other means than by direct inquiry, because a great many of the receiving sets are manufactured by the individuals who use them, and there is no commercial record of such sets. If it is desirable to ascertain these facts, as it is other valuable statistics which are taken care of under the measure, then the most economical way to ascertain the facts would be through the enumerators to be selected, by the few questions which may be asked, because they are supposed to see our entire population. If the Senate or any other branch of the Government were required to ascertain the same facts, it would require a special organization for it, would take four or five times as long, and cost many times as much.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for that suggestion. I may add that while the conference report does not include radio sets, the Census Bureau may still, under its special schedules, secure this information, and I have some hope that possibly something I may say will serve to impress upon the officials of the Census Bureau the great importance of having this information, and that we may be able to induce them to secure it under their special schedules, even though it is not in the conference report.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator if he knows why the proposal he made was rejected? What objection was there to it? Was the question raised that we might just as well ask how many stoves and chairs and tables there are, and was there presented to the conferees the point the Senator brought out so ably, the necessity of this information in order that wise legislation might be had with reference to a growing art? What does the Senator know about that?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, of course I was not a member of the conference committee but I am informed that the House conferees thought that it was not of sufficient importance to justify putting it in, and that the Census Bureau was opposed to it. I do not know that it was said in conference, but I know it was said in other places, that we might just as well get a census of refrigerators, or phonographs, or something of that kind, showing on the part of whoever made such a statement an absolute lack of understanding of what the radio art means to the future of America.

Senators, we talk about public opinion. There has not been created since the invention of printing anything that can be so influential as radio in building a great public opinion among a people such as ours.

It has been said that printing is the greatest boon that has come to humanity in the history of civilization, particularly to the ignorant, and the poor, and those in slavery. But a man, in order to enjoy printing, must have an education, and he must have money enough to be able to buy books. The art of printing for many, many generations was greatly limited. But radio does not require an education; it does not require money, even, because there is a radio to be heard almost everywhere. One need only to be able to hear, and even if he can not hear other sounds very well, he can hear the radio. One of the peculiar things about it is that those who are deaf to ordinary tones of voice, to ordinary sound, can hear radio. It holds more tremendous possibilities for influencing public opinion in the future than anything that has developed in our civilization.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I suggest, in this connection, that the radio is in itself an educational force, that it may become one of the most powerful agencies for public education?

Mr. DILL. I thank the Senator. The art of radio is just beginning to be used in the schools. A conference of educators was held only recently looking to the building up of programs which could be used by the public schools of the country. The opportunity to teach history, the opportunity to teach geography, the opportunity to teach almost any subject, and, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] suggests to me, to teach health, is afforded by radio as in no other way.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Was an estimate made of the additional cost that would be incurred if the amendment had been agreed to?

Mr. DILL. I am told that it was said in the hearings that the addition of any subject for enumeration in the bill would mean the expenditure of $1,000,000. I can not believe it would cost a million dollars to add the two or three questions necessary, but even if it did, that is indeed a very, very small expenditure of money in comparison with the importance of this subject in the future of this country.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It will probably be necessary to gather the statistics contemplated by the Senator's amendment some time in the early future, will it not?

Mr. DILL. I think it will be, and I say that I am hoping that the Census Bureau may be induced to ask these questions, even under a special schedule.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. How much has the Interstate Commerce Commission spent in investigations in order to determine railroad rates, and function as it has in other respects?

Mr. DILL. I am unable to say, but it runs into millions of dollars.

Mr. COPELAND. Many millions?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. And the Senator says that at the outset the expense of securing this information would be a million, according to the statement made. I have no question at all that the Interstate Commerce Commission spends ten, fifteen, twenty million dollars, perhaps more; so that, as the Senator has suggested, even though this might cost a million dollars, it would mean a saving ultimately to the country, and certainly make it possible to carry on a program of proper legislation in connection with the radio art.

Mr. DILL. I thank the Senator. I do not want to delay the Senate. I only wanted, if I might, by a few remarks, to impress upon those officials of the Government who are to have charge of this matter the great need of this information, the importance of this information in the future.

I do want to call attention to one other phase before I sit down; and that is the international phase of this question. In the hearing which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] mentioned a while ago, we have been developing some remarkable facts about the value to a corporation of having a monopoly of an art of this kind. We have discovered that the Radio Corporation of America, which has built up the most gigantic monopoly in the history of America in anything of this kind, with resources back of it of about three or four billion dollars, has not only monopolized the patent field to such an extent that practically every manufacturer of radio sets is paying a license but that they have gone into foreign countries and secured exclusive contracts for radio service, and that to-day they sit down with the cabinets of the nations of Europe on an equal footing with those national officials, because they have secured those exclusive contracts.

Mr. Behn, the president of the International Telephone & Telegraph Co., who appeared before the committee and asked us to repeal section 17 of the radio act, which prohibits the merger of the cable and wireless systems, stated that in estimating the value of the Radio Corporation's property, for which they were to give $40,000,000 in stock, that stock having a value of $100,000,000 on the markets of this country, they fixed $25,000,000 as the actual investment of the Radio Corporation in the plants and equipment which they would buy, and then $15,000,000 for the contractual rights which the Radio Corporation had acquired in England, France, and Germany.

When he mentioned contractual rights he explained that the Radio Corporation had made contracts with the British Marconi, of England, with the French Nationale, of France, and the Telefunken Co., of Germany, under which no other American company could secure the right to build wireless stations in those countries. Thus the exclusive contracts which the Radio Corporation had secured were valued at $15,000,000 by this great International Telephone & Telegraph Co.

I questioned Mr. Behn closely, and the only other value he could give was that they would be able to use the patents of the Radio Corporation in this international telephone work, but he had just gotten through telling us that they had been able to build their wireless stations in South America and to use whatever patents it was necessary to use there without any great difficulty. So that in reality $75,000,000 of value is to be placed upon the contractual rights, namely, the monopoly rights, of the Radio Corporation in those foreign countries.

I am not criticizing the Radio Corporation for what they are doing with foreign governments, but I do say that it indicates the tremendous value of a monopoly in this great art and indicates also that great care which the Congress of the United States should use, and especially the Radio Commission, which is its creature, in the granting of privileges to use wave lengths in international as well as national communications.

I am not going to take any more time, other than to say that radio is the first one-way mass communication in the history of civilization. Always in the past every kind of communication has been single, private, secret—the telephone, the telegraph, the letter, whatever method we may use—but now we have this great art, a one-way mass communication, by which a human voice can be heard instantaneously and simultaneously around the earth by millions, and eventually will be heard by hundreds of millions of people. There has been nothing like it in the history of the human race.

Stop for a moment and think of the vast audience which the listeners of radio compose. It binds together not only the great masses of the people in the centers of population, but the rancher out on the plains, the miner in the hills, the invalid on his sick bed, the pilot in the clouds, the mariner on the sea—all are one great, vast audience of radio. Yet we are asked to leave out provision for securing, in the taking of the census, information of this tremendous importance on the theory that radio is not important enough to justify a place in this great undertaking.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as I expect to vote against this conference report, I desire to make a brief statement, so that my reasons will not be misunderstood.

I am not against a reapportionment of the House of Representatives and I am in no way responsible for the delay which has occurred in the passage of the necessary legislation to reapportion the House based on the 1920 census. Inasmuch as the matter has been delayed until this time, I feel that a reapportionment ought to be made by Congress based upon the census after it is taken and not a reapportionment projected into the future, based upon a census not yet taken, with authority conferred upon an executive branch of the Government to make an apportionment based upon that census.

For that reason I shall vote against this conference report; but I do not want my vote to be interpreted as indicating that I oppose reapportionment or that I indorse the delay which has already occurred in making it. I vote against it for the reasons which I have indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want to defeat the census bill, and I do not believe that the defeat of the conference report as we now have it before the Senate would mean the defeat of the legislation. In no sense do I want to be understood as offering any criticism of the Senate conferees. I think they have conscientiously performed their duty as they saw it. It may be that it would be a physical impossibility for us to get anything more in the bill than is now in the conference report. I realize in all matters of legislation that in order to be practical we ought to be willing to make all reasonable compromises. I realize that as individuals or as a body we must sometimes surrender our convictions to the views of the House in order to obtain legislation. But in all those cases on questions of importance each House ought to go on record, and when it does then it becomes often the duty of the other House, especially when faced with an overwhelming vote in the other body, to recede from what it believes ought to be a part of the legislation then under consideration.

The House of Representatives has never had a record vote on the provisions relating to civil-service appointment of officials provided for in the bill. If I am in error about that, I would be glad to be corrected by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who is doing me the honor of listening.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I assume the Senator differentiates between a record vote and a viva voce vote?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I mean a roll-call vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct. There was a viva voce vote, and it was so overwhelming that apparently those who share the views of the Senator from Nebraska thought it perfectly futile to attempt to have a record vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the object of a record vote is to put the Representatives of the people on record on matters of legislation. If the House of Representatives by an overwhelming vote should vote down the amendment and go on record before the people of the United States, I would feel it my duty to recede. If they had done that, I would not be opposing the conference report. But the Constitution of the United States provides that whenever one-fifth of the Members present in either branch of Congress demand a record vote, a record vote shall be had. So important was it that our forefathers who framed the Constitution made a provision that just one-fifth of the Members present could compel every Member of the body to go on record upon a disputed question.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I take it we have the right to infer, because one-fifth did not demand a roll call or support the demand for a roll call, that not one-fifth of the Members of the House were in favor of the existing amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not agree with the Senator that we have a right to infer that. The Senator from Michigan said, and no doubt he gives the information accurately, that the vote was so overwhelming that it was probably considered useless by those who were in favor of the civil-service provision to demand a roll call; in other words, they considered that if they secured a roll call they would still be defeated, and they probably would have been. I am not contesting that point.

What I am contesting is that the country ought to know how its servants in the National Legislature vote. We ought to be willing, and everyone ought to be willing, to go on record. It is sometimes embarrassing for all of us to do that, and yet that is one of the responsibilities which we assume; that is one of the responsibilities that every man in Congress in either branch thereof ought to be willing to assume, or else to resign and go home. It does not mean that a man may be wrong on a proposition because he votes this way or that way. I am not contending that, but I am contending that on matters of importance like this question the country ought to know how its representatives vote. I take it that until they do know on matters of importance, they do not know how to judge the record of their public servants.

Mr. President, I admit this question has two sides. To my mind it is very lopsided. Civil service in all civilized government is an essential to good government. But I am willing to concede to the man who said that "to the victors belong the spoils" his right to take that position, and when he has the courage of his convictions and takes it I have respect for him not only as an individual but I respect his opinion likewise, however I may disagree with him.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. I do not believe that the omission of the application of civil service in a matter of this kind is an exhibition of opposition to the principle of a law which has for many years been in effect, but is an evidence of deliberate conclusion on the part of the conferees that the application of the civil-service system in the selection of the enumerators is not practicable. It has been omitted from practically every census bill ever passed, and so it must have been the view that the civil-service principle is not practical as applied to such a situation.

Mr. NORRIS. The civil service in this country for practical purposes at least is younger than I am. I saw it come into being. I have seen it struggle from infancy, and in a very weak way I have been a part of the struggle. I have seen the contest from the beginning, a contest which is still in existence. If we should say that our forefathers did not have the civil service and therefore we should not have it, if that were to be the doctrine, then civil service is wrong. If that is the theory upon which we are going to proceed, then every improvement that has ever been made in science or in government is wrong. If we had adhered to that doctrine our farmers would be cutting wheat with a sickle, as was done in the fields of Boaz, which Ruth gleaned in the country of Abraham. If that doctrine were adhered to our Government would not have succeeded. Change is the order of civilization. Progress and advancement mark the history of civilization, and no more so in any other line of human endeavor than in government.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. Is not the Senator aware that under the terms of this bill the principle of civil service is recognized and closely adhered to in regard to all the permanent employees located in the city of Washington who really do the important work, and also in the matter of the special agents, so that the committee which has worked on the bill can by no means be regarded as an enemy of civil service?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not charge the committee with being an enemy of civil service. I am not claiming, of course, that there is no civil service in respect to any of the appointments under the bill. But I do believe that we ought not to put 100,000 Federal positions upon the political pie counter, and the bill does that, to be dealt out for political services or for political advancement. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] stated only a few moments ago that many of the appointments are already made or already decided upon by political bosses and political machines, and if we keep this provision in the bill it would interfere with the program and the work of those political bosses and political machines. Most of the appointments are temporary in character, it is true, but why should they be made according to politics? Why should the employees not be appointed according to the work and their fitness for the work they are called upon to perform? Why should I be allowed to name the enumerators or the inspectors or any of the other officials in my State?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think the Senator will be.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope not. I do not want the job. There is no danger, as the Senator from Arkansas says, of it being tendered to me. But why should the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] do that? Why should he be given the right to name 40 or 50 or 100 men for two or three weeks' work at the expense of the Government? I am not saying that if that were done he would choose inefficient men. Members of the House and Senators would be as careful as any civil-service commission, but when we spread it out over the United States such cases would be exceptional.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Inasmuch as the Senator has made a personal reference, I simply want to interrupt him with an observation. The junior Senator from Michigan has had nothing whatever to do and will have nothing whatever to do with the appointments of supervisors in Michigan. He has been in close conference, however, with the Members of the House from Michigan anticipating the probability that the census machinery will fall necessarily within their ultimate recommendation at some key points.

This is the thought I wanted to submit to my able friend from Nebraska. In such fashion as those designations have been tentatively discussed, I say to him with all the sincerity at my command that, in my judgment, the designations which will be made in Michigan will be of an infinitely higher grade and will be infinitely more responsible and dependable and representative than they possibly could be under civil service, because the type of men we are seeking, not for political purposes but for efficiency purposes, are the type of men who would not think of pursuing an assignment of this nature under the processes of civil service.

That is testimony from the State of Michigan. I speak only for myself, but I could not sit silent in the face of the Senator's general indictment that if a position is not under civil service, then, ipso facto, it must be under the spoils system and be related solely to political patronage. That is not my alternative point of view.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in almost the last sentence I uttered before the Senator from Michigan interrupted me I stated I had no doubt that many of the census appointees would be selected, even if selected by Senators or Members of the House, with the utmost care, solely according to their efficiency for the work they had to perform; so that I have not made a general indictment. I make an indictment against no man. It is the spoils system that I indict. If it be true that those who are going to make the appointments, the politicians—I will not say "politicians," but Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from Michigan and other States—are going to make them on the basis of efficiency only, why should they object to somebody else making the appointments on that basis? To make census appointments is not a part of their official duty when they are elected to the Senate and to the House and take the oath of office. Their official duty has nothing whatever to do with the appointment of a census enumerator or a postmaster or any official of that kind.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am going to interrupt the Senator only for a moment to ask him a question. It appears to me there are many instances when the most ardent civil-service advocates would not accept it. I do not presume there is a Senator on this floor who has engaged a clerk in his office pursuant to a civil-service examination. Such employees are personally selected. I do not presume there is a Senator who conducts a business who selects his employees by a civil-service examination system. If that system be so infallible in securing competent and efficient men and women, why should it not be extended? Why should not our clerks and all other employees be appointed under the civil-service system?

Mr. NORRIS. The question of the Senator from Arkansas, as well as the question of the Senator from Michigan, in my judgment, is an argument against the civil-service system.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why is it——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me go on.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me go on; I have the floor and I will yield to the Senator from Arkansas later. I will answer one question at a time.

There is not any doubt that the civil service has its imperfections, and in many instances they are great. I have felt for some time that the present Civil Service Commission did not have the backbone that it ought to have, and that it has not always carried out the civil-service law in good faith. I know that there are many deficiencies in the system. It is only a question of the difference in systems; that is all. When the Senator asks, If we are to select census enumerators by civil service, and take their positions off the political pie counter, then why should we not select our clerks in the same way. That is an argument against the entire principle of the civil service. So far as I know, no one claims that the civil service ought to apply to every position in the world; no one wants to compel the Senator from Arkansas to take his employees from a civil-service list; but that is different from the appointment of a postmaster or a United States marshal or a census enumerator. The appointment of those employees is provided for under the law, and the authority which can make the appointment is designated.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; but who made the law?

Mr. NORRIS. We made the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I thought.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish. If we believe that Members of Congress ought to appoint census enumerators, why not have the courage to say so in the law, as we do about the clerks whom we employ? Why not put into the statute a provision that the enumerators shall be appointed by Members of the Congress or by Senators? Why not put in the statute what we are going to do in principle, that the enumerators shall in Republican congressional districts be selected by the Members of the House of Representatives, that in the case of Democratic districts they shall be selected by the Senators from that State, if they are Republicans, and, if not Republicans, then that they shall be selected by the Republican committee of that State? That is what is going to happen under this proposed law; that is what is coming; that will be the effect of the pending legislation. Why not say so in so many words? That would be worth while. I had rather have it in that way. If we are going to impose a duty upon certain officials, then say in the law that they will be the appointing power and let them take the responsibility.

Everybody knows what the political pie counter means; everybody knows that if we had no such thing as civil service we would have almost demoralization in the National Government. There is not any reason why a man elected to the Senate, with certain qualifications and certain duties provided by law, should be given the authority to build up a political machine for himself by appointing at Government expense hundreds and thousands of employees to perform duties that have nothing whatever to do with his official action.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the Senator's idea that no one, simply because he is a Member of Congress, can be honest and can be trusted?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I have not said anything of that kind, and I have not said anything from which any reasonable man can draw such a conclusion as that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, what does the Senator mean when he says——

Mr. NORRIS. That is the argument which has been made from the beginning of the civil service.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, it is not.

Mr. NORRIS. The argument which the Senator from Arkansas is making now is the one which has always been made against the civil service.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, I know that happens not to be true; it is not an argument against civil service. I am just asking the Senator a question.

Mr. NORRIS. That question is an argument against civil service.

Mr. CARAWAY. It is no argument against civil service.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator ought not to make it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not making it. I am only asking a question.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator is not making an argument against civil service, then do not ask it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator——

Mr. NORRIS. Can not the Senator wait until I answer one question before he propounds another?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not think I will live long enough for that.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps the Senator will not; he need not wait that long.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not have to wait.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not make any difference to me. If the Senator does not want to wait, that is his business.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator thinks he owns the Senate——

Mr. NORRIS. No; I do not think I own the Senate. That is another statement the Senator is absolutely unjustified in making. Have I not a right here to oppose a provision in the bill because I think it is wrong?

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. What is there about it that the Senator should become so angry, when I was merely trying to ask him a question?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Arkansas——

Mr. CARAWAY. Now——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator allow me to answer that question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I suppose I will stop for the rest of the afternoon.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps the Senator will; it might be well if he would stop here and wait and listen a little while. It might be well for him. He might get some information perhaps that would be valuable for him.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have listened for a good while, and have not obtained any information as yet.

Mr. NORRIS. The trouble is the Senator does not listen.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, yes; I do.

Mr. NORRIS. He gets into the debate when there is no call for it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have been listening for eight years.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, let us get to the Senator's question. He has interrupted me so many times since the question was asked that I have forgotten what it was.

Mr. CARAWAY. I knew the Senator had, and I tried to set him right.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does the Senator say I get so angry about it?

Mr. CARAWAY. Because——

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I remember what the question was. Let the Senator keep still while I answer it. Let me answer it. The Senator has asked it of me.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know, but I do not expect any candid answer.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will keep still, I will answer it; I am going to answer it. The truth is that the Senator is entirely wrong when he assumes that I am angry.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator does not make that kind of a face when he is in a good humor, does he? [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has looked at so many bad faces, that he does not know a good one when he sees it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARAWAY. I will not admit that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if there is one thing I can not do after my long association here, it is to get angry with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, do not look at me in that tone of voice.

Mr. NORRIS. I have, however, seen him go wrong occasionally——

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; when following the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. And I can not follow him when he goes wrong.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is where I differ with the Senator. I follow him when he goes wrong; I could not follow him otherwise.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would do better if he would follow me when I am right.

Mr. CARAWAY. I have never found the Senator to be that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DALE in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. Senators desiring to interrupt must address the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator ought to get some information so as to be able to judge what is right and what is wrong. If the Senator has not found me right at any time, then he has gone wrong a good many times himself.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yesterday, or the day before, the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Arkansas both voted with me on the debenture plan. They were both right then.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if there is anything of value in the civil-service system, it seems to me it ought to be applied in this bill. If the system is wrong, and we think it is wrong, then we ought not to apply it. If there is any reason why the civil service should be applied in other branches of the Government, and not in the taking of the census, I am unable to discover the reason. If there is any reason why civil service should not be utilized in the appointment of census enumerators and the other officials provided for in this bill, then it seems to me that the same reason would apply to every other department of the Government where we do apply the civil-service rule.

I think everybody concedes, Mr. President, that if we assume, to begin with, that if the one exercising the unlimited power is wise and honest and conscientious, then the best form of government is an unlimited monarchy. If we can assume that the ruler is a model man, interested only in human justice, then he can cut all the red tape and set up a government, a bureau, or a department that will be as nearly perfect as human ingenuity can make it. But we all know, when such power is given to human beings, that, from the very weakness of human nature, it is abused. The first ruler may be wise and just, although there are not many such people in the world, but his followers will go a little bit further and will abuse the power, and eventually corruption creeps in.

The civil service law was passed with the idea of improving government. It does not insure a perfect administration of government; it has all the imperfections of human nature; it has all the imperfections of anything human, and always must be imperfect; and those who administer the civil service law make many mistakes and commit many errors; but I had thought that in this day and age we believed that the civil-service system was an improvement over the "pie-counter" system; and that is what we have to contend with here.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I am not fixing to take issue with my friend from Nebraska, although he said I asked him a lot of questions which he did not answer. I presume, in theory, civil service is all right; but if the "pie counter" against which the Senator so loudly proclaims is the evil that he says it is—and I am willing to concede it—it is not eliminated under the so-called civil-service rules.

Everybody who knows anything about civil service knows that it is in politics. The appointments are made in politics. Take the selection of postmasters: There is a species of civil service that is applied to that. It is the most cowardly thing there is. Men and women are induced to make applications and to stand examinations, and unless they have the political favor of the powers that be they have not a ghost of a chance to get the job.

Even in the case of rural letter carriers in my own State, ever since I have been a Member of the Senate I have seen examinations called and qualified lists submitted out of which Republicans always get the job, not because they are the best people or because they have the best qualifications, but the very law itself that permits selection from a list is a dishonest law, and people who laud it and praise it and know the methods by which the results are obtained are not always candid.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, yes; I will not get mad with the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator permit me to say that I agree with every word he says; and I have not defended that system.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the only system you have.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not what will be applied under this bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what you would get out of it.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now, this is what I would a great deal rather have: I want power and responsibility to go hand in hand.

Mr. NORRIS. So do I.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to be able to put my hand on a man and say, "If you put a bad man in office I shall hold you responsible for it." Under the present system, however, they name people to office that nobody would be responsible for if you could make them stand up in the open and do it. I voted—and I would do it again—to make recommendations for political appointments public, so that when a judge on the bench is selected the people may know what influences put him there. I want the people to know, and I want the responsibility fixed.

Talk about the Senator from Michigan wanting a political machine! I think he ought to do something for somebody. I really felt that way when I watched him vote. I have not been hopeful, so I do not very much object to his naming a census supervisor so that somebody can say, "I have a right to be grateful"; but what I started to say is this:

I venture the assertion that here in the District of Columbia—and I am not overly critical—less service is rendered per man for the amount of money received than anywhere else on earth. The system lends itself to that. There is hardly a day but that somebody comes to the office of nearly every Senator in this body with a complaint, and says that there is a ring down here in the department; certain people are being promoted and certain people are being held back because they will not lick the boots of the bureau chief; and it is obviously true if you will look at the make-up of it.

You have some kind of a law on the statute books that says that the civil-service employees shall be apportioned among the States, and yet the District of Columbia and Virginia and Maryland and Pennsylvania have 90 per cent of them. Is that a civil service law that is working fairly all the way around?

There have been parts of three Republican administrations since I have been in the Senate. I have seen examinations for rural carriers and postmasters in my own State, and if no Republican was qualified they called another examination. Under a system of that kind the man who gets the job knows he was not selected because he was the best man of those that took the examination, but he was selected because of his political affiliations; and yet, having a lifetime job, he says, "I will not be grateful even to my friends."

I am not an enemy of civil service, though I am not a worshiper at its shrine by any means.

When I was a Member of the House at one time I had some patronage. I exercised it with the very best judgment that I had. I realize that if good men that I recommended were appointed, I would have friends. If I recommended bad men, I would necessarily incur the hostility of good men and women. We took a census under that sort of an arrangement. I was consulted about the appointments; and I never heard a complaint from anybody, except somebody who wanted a job, that the men selected were not entirely satisfactory.

All I started to say was this: I have heard and heard over and over again about the "political pie counter," as if men in public office were a lot of people who were perfectly willing to sell their honor and their self-respect, and the only object they had in life was to perpetuate themselves in office and to select tools who would abandon any idea of public service, and go out and serve the person who appointed them to office. I do not think that is quite fair. I do not have to defend the Republican administration, because they have paid agents to do that, and they work day and night; but still and still and still, aside from their politics, with the possible exception of about 49 Members of the Senate who sit on the Republican side, I should say it was an entirely respectable and trustworthy body; and I should expect them to claim that they were.

But, seriously speaking, when I interrupted the Senator I was not opposing civil service. I am trying to find out where the line ought to be drawn. I know that I should be very unwilling to select the folks who work for me by that process.

If I am to be responsible for somebody, I want to be able to exercise my best judgment in getting the man who is best fitted to fill the place. In other words, I do not want to assume responsibility and have somebody else exercise the power; and I think that is all it would be.

If you had this civil-service provision in the census bill, you would not take away from a single Senator sitting on the other side of the aisle the right to name a single man to office. His friends would be named, but he would not have to assume responsibility for them. If they are going to have a crooked census, as I have heard it intimated, I want to be able to lay hands on them and say, "You are responsible for it." I do not want them to dodge behind some pretense of having selected the employees, enumerators, and so on, by civil service.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the last suggestion of the Senator really goes to the meat of the thing, because if these people are all put under the civil service, the bureau would not have the authority over them that they would have if they were not in the civil service. If, for instance, they should make a mistake in selecting an enumerator, and find that he was not attending to his business, that there was something wrong with him, the bureau now could dismiss him; but if he were under the civil service law, they might find themselves very greatly hampered in that respect.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Florida a question. If the enumerator were appointed by a Senator, let us say, do you suppose they would remove him as quickly as though they had appointed him themselves, in case they found him doing something wrong? Would they not say, "We will see this Senator"? Would not the man take it up with his Senator?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. And would they not have to get the Senator's consent, and would not that be worse than the other way?

Mr. FLETCHER. I scarcely think so. I believe that the bureau would have more control over these employees, enumerators, and supervisors if they were not under civil service than they would have if they were under civil service.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] apparently thought that census taking was some peculiar sort of work which required appointment by political leaders—that is the implication of his statement—rather than as a result of a competitive examination. In answer to the Senator, I desire to say that the argument that character can be ascertained only by the appointing power and not by a civil-service examination is neither novel nor true. It was made when the prohibition law was first enacted. Congress was unfortunately persuaded by that reasoning and permitted the appointment of prohibition agents by political leaders rather than as a result of a competitive examination. What was the result? What class of men, what character of men, were submitted by these political leaders?

We all know what happened. I quote the testimony of a Mr. Mills, who had charge of prohibition enforcement in the State of New York during a period of over a year. He told, in a story written for Collier's, to what political pressure he was exposed in making appointments of prohibition agents. Names were submitted by the political leaders of the several counties in New York State, with their recommendations; and in a number of instances men that were afterwards discovered to have had criminal records were appointed, and several of these men were convicted of corruption. The appointments were so unsatisfactory, the corruption was so extensive, that the advocates of the merit system bestirred themselves, and the law was changed so as to provide that these agents should be appointed in accordance with the principles of the merit system. I made inquiry as to the appointees under the merit system, and I have been informed, and the Treasury Department will similarly tell the Senator, if he inquires, that they are far superior in every way to those who were appointed by way of the spoils system.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. As a matter of information, it was brought out by the Reed investigating committee which inquired into the subject of prohibition at the instance of the Senate that some 872 of these prohibition agents, appointed in the manner that the Senator from New York has just explained, were discharged for discovered corruption.

Mr. WAGNER. I thank the Senator.

Addressing myself to the other suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio that census taking was a character of work concerning which there had been general agreement that it should be free from any competitive system, I need only advert to the struggle that has been so well pictured by the Senator from Nebraska, to incorporate the merit system into the taking of the census. The merit system has been advocated for use in the census just as earnestly, just as zealously as it has been in connection with governmental functions generally. Prior to 1909 we had the spoils system throughout the Census Bureau. In 1909 an act was again passed by Congress providing for the appointment of those having charge of the taking of the census by the political leaders without any competitive examination. President Roosevelt, because of the testimony before him of the experiences under the spoils system, vetoed the bill and said it was essential to good government to have an honest census, free from political influence. Rather than have a census conducted under the discredited spoils system he preferred to have no census at all.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. Is not the Senator from New York aware of the fact that the veto of President Roosevelt was not based upon the selection of supervisors or enumerators at all, but only those employed in the bureau here at Washington, and those employed in the bureau here at Washington are now under civil service in this bill?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes. Under that act the President had the power to appoint the supervisors, so that he had control of that matter himself, and I think the country was ready to trust him.

Mr. BURTON. The bill presented by the conference committee goes a little farther in the demands for civil-service requirements than did the bill which was passed in conformity with President Roosevelt's objection.

Mr. WAGNER. President Roosevelt vetoed the bill.

Mr. BURTON. But another bill was passed thereafter.

Mr. WAGNER. In the administration of President Taft. The original bill provided for the spoils system, and if what I have read in one of the books by Commissioner Foulke is true, President Taft sent word that unless the merit system was incorporated in the bill he, too, would veto the bill. That is how the first step was taken, and the merit system was applied to the Washington office. But let me tell the Senator that, although it was supposed that that door was closed forever to the spoils system, it has nevertheless crept into the Washington office. As I pointed out in my remarks several days ago, the bill designates all the Washington force by the term "temporary employees," and under the civil-service rules temporary appointments may be made by the head of a department without any examination.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield further——

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BURTON. I can but repeat that the high-water mark in the observance of civil-service rules is embodied in this bill. It goes not only to the extent of including all appointees here in Washington but special agents in the field.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator tell me what the special agents have to do with the taking of the census of population?

Mr. BURTON. They have a great deal to do with the taking of a census of manufactures.

Mr. WAGNER. I have asked the Senator a very frank and direct question.

Mr. BURTON. Special services in connection with the making up of census statistics.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator tell us what the special agents have to do with the taking of the census of population?

Mr. BURTON. They have no immediate connection.

Mr. WAGNER. They have nothing to do with that at all.

Mr. BURTON. They make a great many reports as to matters of health, and matters of industrial growth, and have occasional assignments of other duties by the bureau.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator, I take it, agrees with me that the special agents—and I may express my gratification that they were put under the merit system—have nothing to do with the taking of the census of population, which is the very enumeration the American people want taken in an impartial way, free from the abuses of the past.

Let me say to the Senator, who suggests that the merit system should not apply to the taking of the census of population, that all of the abuses in the past that were disclosed in 1890, in 1900, and so on, were the result of political direction; that is, the enumerators and the supervisors were directed by the political leaders to influence the census, either to increase or decrease population, depending on how it would serve the particular party which had the power of appointing the enumerators.

Mr. BURTON. I can not agree with the Senator in that.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator then refuses to recognize history. Let me repeat to him that in 1900 there was an investigation by a Federal grand jury in the State of Maryland. I think he will agree that it was an impartial investigation. In that investigation were summoned the political leaders, the enumerators, and the supervisors, and the enumerators confessed that they were directed by the political leaders to increase the population of their particular communities or localities, because they wanted to increase their representation in the State legislature. The apportionment in that State for representatives in the State legislature was made according to the Federal census. Of course, as the number increased, the representation in the Federal Congress was increased.

It was disclosed that the graveyards were explored, and the names upon the tombstones were included in the enumeration; that the country hotels were explored, and tourists remaining there one, two, or three days were put upon the list as inhabitants of the particular localities. The grand jury in its presentment stated that those abuses would continue so long as the appointments were made according to the spoils system.

We are not removing the political influence from the taking of the census one iota, and we have not taken a step forward in that regard in this legislation, because the appointments of all those who have to do with the taking of the census of population are still to be named under the old system.

I am not impugning anybody's motives, but let us be candid in discussing the question of these appointments. How are the appointments to be made? How does the Congressman recommend the appointments in his locality? From the political club, the hangers-on without jobs——

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am bound flatly to deny the Senator's statement. He may be describing the political methods which obtain in New York. He is not necessarily describing the methods which obtain in the country at large, and he certainly is not describing those which obtain in the State of Michigan.

Mr. WAGNER. All right; I enjoy the Senator's indignation. This I have to say in conclusion: That wherever the party in power has a choice in taking a census of population, between taking it under the merit system and under the spoils system, and it chooses the spoils system, the whole census is discredited from the very beginning. If irregularities are thereafter disclosed, no matter how they might have occurred, they will be ascribed to political influences.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I would like to say a few words in reference to the spoils system. As chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I have been investigating the spoils system in the Southern States, and I will briefly describe how it is working in the State of Texas.

There is a referee down there, whose name is Creager, and he selects the appointees. In 1921 he collected notes for subscriptions to his campaign committee and organization in the sum of $66,000. While it fell off in 1922 and 1923, in 1925 the amount collected was back up to $38,000. The newspapers now report that in 1929 he is holding meetings and is collecting $100,000.

Here is the apparent situation: There was no campaign in 1921. There was no campaign in 1925. There is no campaign now in 1929. But this man, who has the referee's power to make appointments, according to the spoils-system rule, goes out and holds meetings, and puts on a campaign of coercion upon the Government employees not only in the Post Office Department but in all of the departments. In that situation they are practically warned that they must sign those notes or make those contributions, or they get no offices under the system. That warning is given by making exactly the opposite declaration. They say, "You are not compelled to contribute," and all that sort of thing, but it is all staged up for the purpose of coercion and compulsion.

Those facts, with the exception of the newspaper reports to which I have referred, have been conceded before the committee up to date. I will not go into the discussion of the many other facts which are controverted, but those are conceded, and the newspaper reports tell of the meetings which are now being held to collect this $100,000 contribution at this time.

I do not know how many census enumerators there will be, probably a thousand or fifteen hundred in the State of Texas, appointed by this man under this system, and it means another scheme of political coercion, and I think the worst kind of political influence and corruption.

Therefore I want to see the census taken under the civil-service rules in good faith, and I voted for the amendment so providing.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, there are not a few on this side of the Chamber—I do not know how it may be on the other side—who heretofore have voted for this bill with many misgivings, being averse on principle to reposing in an executive or administrative officer the duty of making the apportionment, even though under a rule prescribed by the Congress.

Speaking for myself, I have supported the bill thus far only because of the long delay, practically the failure of the Congress to make the apportionment contemplated, as I think, by the Constitution of the United States. It is a matter of no very great consequence whether the obligation is imposed expressly or impliedly in the Constitution or not, it clearly was the duty of the Congress promptly after the taking of the census in 1920 to make a reapportionment. It is of the fundamentals of our Government that the country should be represented in the House of Representatives in proportion to population.

Mr. President, I shall vote against this conference report, however, and I shall vote against it because of the excision of the very salutary provision which was incorporated in the bill in this body providing for the selection of the enumerators pursuant to the principles of the civil service law. The opportunities for political corruption in the distribution of 100,000 offices by the political bosses are simply staggering.

I take it that this is a matter of even more concern to the other branch of Congress than it is to this body, and I hesitate to believe that that branch of the Congress will imperil this much-needed legislation merely for the purpose of retaining in the hands of the party in power this enormous patronage, and the continuation of the spoils system as it relates to the taking of the decennial census.

For the reasons indicated, I shall vote against the conference report, and I beg to assure the Senators in charge of the bill, and who have manifested such keen interest in it, that the position taken by me is supported somewhat numerously on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I shall vote against the conference report, civil service or no civil service, for the same reason for which I voted against the bill. I do not think that the neglect of a constitutional function by Congress, whether express or implied, may be cured by an unconstitutional transference of power or delegation of power to the executive branch of the Government. In my conception as a layman, if there ever was an unconstitutional measure considered by Congress, it is this bill, and for that reason I am going to vote against the conference report.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Virginia had a prominent part in the framing of the Federal reserve act, had he not?

Mr. GLASS. Some people say so and others deny it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURTON. Is he not aware that a motion made in the Senate to place under civil service the numerous subordinate employees of the Federal reserve system was voted down by a very considerable majority?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; and I voted against it myself. I am not discussing the civil-service aspects of the bill. I say I think the bill itself is an unconstitutional delegation of power regardless of its civil-service features or lack of civil-service features. I do not think that the indefensible neglect by Congress of a constitutional mandate may be cured by an unconstitutional delegation of power. Congress itself, I think, ought to apportion representation and not commit that important constitutional duty to administrative officers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen	Frazier	La Follette	Smith
Ashurst	George	McKellar	Steck
Barkley	Gillett	McNary	Steiwer
Bingham	Glass	Metcalf	Swanson
Blease	Glenn	Moses	Thomas, Idaho
Borah	Goff	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
Bratton	Goldsborough	Norris	Townsend
Brookhart	Greene	Nye	Trammell
Broussard	Harris	Oddie	Tydings
Burton	Harrison	Overman	Tyson
Capper	Hastings	Patterson	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hatfield	Phipps	Wagner
Connally	Hawes	Pine	Walcott
Copeland	Hayden	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Hebert	Ransdell	Walsh, Mont.
Cutting	Heflin	Reed	Warren
Dale	Howell	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Deneen	Johnson	Sackett	Watson
Dill	Jones	Schall	Wheeler
Edge	Kean	Sheppard
Fess	Keyes	Shortridge
Fletcher	King	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when Mr. STEPHENS's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] is unavoidably absent on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. If present and permitted to vote, my colleague would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana] is unavoidably absent from the city. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FESS. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK].

I also desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] has a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. BLACK] is absent on account of illness. If he were present and not paired, he would vote "nay" on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. NORBECK. If my colleague [Mr. MCMASTER] were present and not paired, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—48

Allen	Fess	Jones	Sheppard
Ashurst	Fletcher	Kean	Shortridge
Bingham	Gillett	Keyes	Simmons
Borah	Glenn	McNary	Steiwer
Bratton	Goff	Metcalf	Thomas, Idaho
Burton	Goldsborough	Moses	Townsend
Capper	Hastings	Oddie	Trammell
Couzens	Hatfield	Patterson	Vandenberg
Cutting	Hayden	Phipps	Walcott
Deneen	Hebert	Pine	Warren
Dill	Howell	Reed	Waterman
Edge	Johnson	Sackett	Watson

NAYS—37

Barkley	Glass	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Blease	Greene	Nye	Tydings
Brookhart	Harris	Overman	Tyson
Broussard	Harrison	Pittman	Wagner
Caraway	Hawes	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Connally	Heflin	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh, Mont.
Copeland	King	Schall	Wheeler
Dale	La Follette	Smith
Frazier	McKellar	Steck
George	Norbeck	Swanson

NOT VOTING—10

Black	Hale	Robinson, Ind.	Stephens
Blaine	Kendrick	Shipstead
Gould	McMaster	Smoot

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not think it is inappropriate to call attention to the fact that the conference report just agreed to sends to the President the first bill mentioned in his message calling Congress in extra session that will go to him.

I also want to say that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are entitled to special credit for the very efficient and effective work they have done in connection with the consideration and passage of the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 1452) to authorize the State of West Virginia to acquire a bridge over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek, in said State, and to acquire the right to construct a bridge over said river at St. Albans, in said State.

NATIONAL-ORIGINS PROVISIONS OF IMMIGRATION ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the resolution (S. Res. 37) submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] to discharge the Committee on Immigration from the further consideration of the bill (S. 151) to repeal the national-origins provisions of the immigration act of 1924. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is unable to take part in this discussion. He has given much thought and attention to this matter. He is unusually well informed on the subject. He has been deeply concerned about the class of immigrants that come to our shores; but illness has kept the Senator away from the Senate during this session.

Before the war our immigration from Europe had been rapidly increasing and had reached an annual total far exceeding a million persons. After the war interruption, there were indications of a further increasing number. Some of these migrated from countries that sent us their worst people instead of their best. Restrictive steps were first taken in 1920. A more drastic measure was passed in 1924, which practically limited the immigration from European countries and dependencies to 150,000 annually, or one-eighth of the previous number. The immigration question was really settled, for the European countries were assigned such small quotas that the new arrivals were hardly noticed. I will later refer to the different quotas in detail.

The restricted immigration law does not apply to South America. They may be Spanish or Portuguese, Indians or African blacks. Nothing has been done toward restricting the large immigration from Mexico, from whence more than one-third of the immigrants arrive in this country. They are really invited, whereas the north Europeans are told to keep away lest they contaminate our national strain.

There is no limit to the immigrants that come from Canada, though this is of less importance, as the larger population of the Dominion is of north European stock. The 1920 census showed there were 18,291 negroes in Canada.

Mr. President, the question before the Senate now is not whether a larger number of immigrants shall come from the quota countries. It is a question what country shall be given preference. If the national-origins theory, so ably and enthusiastically championed, in season and out of season by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] should prevail, the principal effects would be to reduce the German and Scandinavian quotas.

It would reduce the German quota by about one-half, from 51,227 to 25,957;

It would reduce the quota from Sweden from 9,561 to 3,314;

It would reduce the quota from Norway from 6,453 to 2,377; and

It would reduce the quota from Denmark from 2,789 to 1,181.

It would greatly increase the British quota and reduce the Irish. The British quota applies not only to England and Scotland, but it applies to all of the British possessions in the West Indies and some in Africa.

In other words, Mr. President, there is no further restriction proposed except as to European countries, and that operates mainly against Germany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Ireland.

If the national-origins plan should prevail, there would be a slight increase in the quota from Greece and there would be an increase of about 2,000 in the quota from Italy. Italian immigration comes mostly from southern Italy, which is racially and culturally different than the rest of the country. The dictator, Mussolini, is cleaning house. He will get rid of the most undesirable element. Shall we open the gates wider so as to let them in here? We will, if we accept the national-origins theory and base our quota on same.

Mr. President, I have a table as to immigration data and comparative quotas under the two different plans. This table was prepared by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Table showing immigration from certain countries during first 70 years of immigration statistics, 1820–1890, and comparison with existing and national-origins quotas

Mr. NORBECK. Apparently there is a difference as to the total number being considered under the two plans, but I call your attention to the fact that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] has already announced his intention to offer an amendment that will give the same totals under either plan. Therefore, I repeat, Mr. President, the question of reducing the number of immigrants is not involved. It is simply a question of from which country they are to come.

Mr. President, this question comes up before the Senate in rather an unusual form. We are about to vote on the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] to discharge the Committee on Immigration from the further consideration of Senate bill 151, to put into effect the quota based upon the 1890 census. The immigrants admitted under the proposed change in law would, therefore, be slightly less than 2 per cent of the foreign-born nationals living in this country at the time the 1890 census was taken. Unless favorable action is taken on this resolution, the national-origins plan goes into effect July 1.

BRITISH QUOTA

It is well to keep in mind that Great Britain and England are not one and the same thing. Our early immigrants came from England and Scotland. It is conceded that they were the most desirable.

The British quota at the present time is 34,007. It is proposed to increase it to 65,721. By British quota we include the British citizens of the following countries:

First. England, Scotland, Wales, and North of Ireland.

Second. The British possessions in the West Indies, comprising about a million and a half population, of whom fully 90 per cent are African blacks.

Third. It also includes certain British possessions in Africa.

Mr. President, I have a table here showing the number that may be admitted from each country, both under the 1890 basis and under the national-origins basis. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

Table showing immigration quotas under the 1890 basis, now operating, and the national-origins basis which will become operative unless repealed

	1890 basis, now operating	National-origins basis
Armenia	124	100
Austria	785	1,413
Belgium	512	1,304
Czechoslovakia	3,073	2,874
Danzig, Free City of	228	100
Denmark	2,789	1,181

Germany	51,227	25,957
Great Britain and North Ireland	34,007	65,721
Australia	121	100
The following countries are British mandates or possessions, and under both the 1890 and the national-origins basis of immigration are entitled to 100 each: Arabian Peninsula, British Cameroon, Nauru, New Guinea, Samoa, Southwest Africa, British Tagoland, Bhutan, India, New Zealand, Palestine, South Africa, Tanganyika (13 countries, at 100 immigrants each)	1,300	1,300
Greece	100	307
Hungary	473	869
Irish Free State	28,567	17,853
Italy	3,845	5,802

Russia	2,248	2,784
Spain	131	252
Sweden	9,561	3,314
Switzerland	2,081	1,707
Syria and the Lebanon	100	123
Turkey	100	226
Yugoslavia	671	845
All of the following countries are entitled to a quota of 100 immigrants each under both the 1890 and national-origins basis of immigration: Afghanistan, Andorra, French Cameroon, Egypt, Iceland, Japan, Liechtenstein, Monaco, Morocco, Persia, San Marino, French Togoland, Albania, Bulgaria, China, Ethiopia, Iraq (Mesopotamia), Liberia, Luxemburg, Muscat, Nepal, Ruanda, Siam, Yap (24 countries, at 100 immigrants each)	2,400	2,400
Total	164,667	153,714

Mr. NORBECK. This table is fairly accurate, except that it must be kept in mind that under the proposed plan there will be no difference in the total number to be admitted. Therefore there should be very slight variations in the quota.

The argument made for national origins is that our immigrants should be exactly like the present stock. The mixture is assumed to have developed a better and more perfect race. There should be the same percentage of English, of Germans, Italians, Scandinavians, and so forth. This is the avowed ideal that is sought by the champions of this plan. But I submit, Mr. President, that it is rash to assume that the British quota stands for the same type of Englishman as came to this country on the Mayflower. We overlook the fact that England is not a national entity. History tells us there are seven or eight races involved. I have a profound admiration for the controlling element of the population in the British Isles, but we might argue and disagree as to whether it is due to the very large percentage of German and Scandinavian blood, or whether the Celtic race should have credit for the best qualities, or whether it is the old Romans to whom should be given the credit for the best foundation stock. Many Englishmen insist that the Normans gave them new stability and new energy, but the fact of the matter is, if we get an immigrant from a certain part of England he is one kind, and from another part he is another kind. No one will claim, for instance, that the Welsh and Anglo-Saxon are alike.

Congress does not desire to arbitrarily fix the number of each country; on the other hand, Congress believes it necessary to establish a rule that can be applied quite generally. With the adoption of the 1924 immigration law, a sincere effort was made to see if a plan could be worked out by which our immigration quota could be based upon the national-origins theory. A committee was created, consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor, who endeavored to work out a quota based upon this theory, which would also harmonize with the prescribed limitation in the immigration act. Several reports were made. I will refer to only one. This was transmitted to Congress by President Coolidge in January, 1927, and is as follows:

JANUARY 3, 1927.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Pursuant to the provisions of sections 11 and 12 of the immigration act of 1924, we have the honor to transmit herewith the preliminary report of the subcommittee appointed by us.

The report of the subcommittee is self-explanatory and is stated to be a preliminary report, yet in the judgment of that committee further investigation will not substantially alter this presentation.

Although this is the best information we have been able to secure, we wish to call attention to the reservations made by the committee and to state that in our opinion the statistical and historical information available raises grave doubts as to the whole value of these computations as a basis for the purposes intended. We therefore can not assume responsibility for such conclusions under the circumstances.

Yours faithfully,

FRANK B. KELLOGG,
Secretary of State, Department of State.
HERBERT HOOVER,
Secretary of Commerce, Department of Commerce.
JAMES J. DAVIS,
Secretary of Labor, Department of Labor.

Later reports were submitted, but in no case did the members of the committee change their viewpoint. They merely submitted data and called attention to the difficulties.

NEGRO IMMIGRANTS FROM THE BRITISH EMPIRE

The British quota is not limited to any particular strain of Englishmen. Nothing is said about Anglo-Saxon or Norman stock. It is not even limited to white citizens, for it includes British subjects born in British possessions—both white and black. The negroes from Jamaica, the Bahama Islands, and other British possessions are slowly but surely learning about the better wages and living conditions in the United States.

No preference is given the whites. The rule of the British Government has been one of dealing alike with all of its citizens. Those who first apply for visas are given preference. The Anglo-Saxon in England who desires to migrate to the United States is given no preference over the negro from Jamaica. They have adopted the rule, "First come, first served."

The national-origins theory will get a violent test, for no one will maintain that the negro from the West Indies is the same kind of Englishman that comes from Northumberland, though he is classed the same.

I know there are those who will argue there is not likely to be much of an increase in the number of our negro immigrants, but they have forgotten that only a few years ago we of the North were of the firm opinion that our own negroes would remain in the South for climatic and other reasons. They have rapidly moved North as they have learned about better wages and other advantages. The negro from the British possessions will be attracted by the same reports. They are likewise availing themselves of the opportunity.

The British quota is also available for negroes in Africa though very few of these have so far reached us. I also want to bring to mind that we are getting a number of British negroes from Canada.

We have a large number of the colored race in this country, whose ancestors were brought here against their will. We have a responsibility toward these people, but I think we have as large a number of them as we can accommodate at the present time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know that the net increase of alien negroes coming here for permanent residence last year from all countries of the whole globe was 167 persons?

Mr. NORBECK. Does the Senator know that about five or six hundred came from the British Islands last year?

Mr. REED. There could not be 500 out of 167.

Mr. NORBECK. I understood the Senator to say the increase was 167.

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. NORBECK. I am speaking of the total.

Mr. REED. The total number of arrivals was 956 and of departures, 789.

Mr. NORBECK. The number of negro immigrants in 1924 reached the total of 12,000. Under the 2 per cent provision of the 1890 basis system they are restricted. The number who could come under the British quota was limited. If we double the British quota of immigrants, it will facilitate an increase in the number of negro immigrants from the British possessions.

Mr. President, the larger part of our negro immigration in 1924 came from the British possessions. The larger part of our negro immigration now comes from the British possessions. It is true that the departures last year were large, but this was to a considerable degree due to the fact there was a large deportation of negroes that came into this country in violation of the law, presumably because they could not all get on the British quota quickly. Those who have their applications ready will find it easy to come here after the 1st of July.

The difference between the people of northern Europe and southern Europe is well recognized. I am not going to cast any aspersions on the Mediterranean people. Civilization started on the Mediterranean. Art reached its highest development on the Mediterranean. Our philosophy and even our religion came from the Mediterranean.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. FESS. The Senator's suggestion that the Mediterranean countries are the home of art, and so forth, reminds me of a very startling statement I read recently—that between 1250 and 1500 there were more poets, sculptors, and artists produced in the city of Florence than in all of the time of the existence of the city of London up to the present time.

Mr. NORBECK. But there is one marked difference, I say, and that is the art of self-government is an art that has never been mastered by the Mediterranean peoples.

Mr. FESS. That is true.

Mr. NORBECK. It is an art in which the people of northern Europe excel and have excelled for centuries; and if we are to be a self-governing Republic, we find them to be a stabilizing influence in our development.

Mr. FESS. I agree with the Senator that the art of self-government is far superior to all that I have mentioned. I have only wondered what is the cause of the decadence of those countries from that day.

Mr. NORBECK. It is not proposed to adopt a radical reduction in the immigration quotas in relation to any country, except the Scandinavian countries. The only charge that has been lodged against these people is that they did not arrive in this country as early as some other nationality. I can not see the importance of this; but even at that, we are ignoring historical facts. The Scandinavian people discovered and made permanent settlement on an island off the American coast 500 years before Columbus discovered America. The settlement continued for three or four centuries. The island of Greenland was not true to its name, for it was cold and barren. It is admitted that the settlers must have obtained their timber from the mainland of the American Continent. Commerce and intercourse continued with the mother country until the black plague nearly depopulated northern Europe. The isolation or climatic changes seem to have brought on hardships from which they perished.

There is at least one Scandinavian signer of the Declaration of Independence, and he cast the deciding vote in favor of freedom. In his native language the name would have been John Mortensen, but being Anglicized it appears as John Morton. No doubt, his descendants are classed as of English origin and the British quota gets the benefit of same.

At the head of our Government in 1781 was John Hanson, President of the Continental Congress. The State of Maryland has greatly honored this so-called hyphenated citizen by placing his statue in the Nation's Hall of Fame.

During the closing days of the Wilson administration a plan was started, and later carried out, to build a monument on the Potomac to a Swedish immigrant. He was the inventor of the Monitor, whose timely arrival at Hampton Roads is thought by many historians to have saved the Capital City from falling into the hands of the Confederate armies. He was a loyal unionist, though apparently he did not become a citizen of this country. The Monitor marked a new style of naval architecture followed by every nation in the world. His most useful invention was, no doubt, the propellor, developed by him some 75 years ago. It has become the most noted device for the propulsion of every boat and every ship, large or small, on the inland lakes and streams as well as on the seven seas. Not only that, it has come into general use on our aircraft. When John Ericsson departed this life, a grateful Republic dispatched a man of war to take his remains across the Atlantic that they might be buried in his native land.

The high state of culture in the Scandinavian countries is recognized the world over. I know of no other nation that proposes to put them on the black list. Norway is in her golden age of literature, and the translations of the works of her authors often appear in every language used by civilized man.

Nor will anyone claim that Sweden is behind any country in the world in the matter of culture and progress.

Denmark is a little nation long trained in the art of self-government. They are a simple living and straight thinking people who excel in many lines. It is the place where farm tenantry is unknown and where poverty has been almost abolished. It is a place where the government protects its people from unfairness to the benefit of all, but still we propose to cut their quota down to one-third. Are we afraid the contact will be injurious to the people of this country? Do we really prefer a Jamaican negro just because he comes here under the union jack?

When Theodore Roosevelt was asked whom he considered the ideal citizen, he named an immigrant from Denmark, Jacob Riis, then doing welfare work in the New York tenement districts.

But the question is, Do we as a nation feel that we have too many of the immigrants from Denmark, and propose to cut down their quota from 3,000 to about 1,000 annually, at the same time as we welcome 57,000 Mexican immigrants annually, and leave the gates open for a still larger number in the future?

THE GERMAN QUOTA

The main question is, Shall we reduce the German quota from 51,000 to 25,000, or shall we double the British quota, bring it from about 34,000 up to 65,000? It is true, we had a war with Germany. Perhaps we are resentful; maybe we can not help that. But I call attention to the fact that we have had two wars with England.

The census records, on which the champions of national origins are trying to work out a plausible quota, were destroyed by the British Army when they invaded Washington and burnt our Capitol in 1814. I would not hold a grudge about this. We must forget and forgive. Let us treat Germany as fairly as we treat England. Germany made her mistakes during the World War; so did we, though in a different way.

We admire the English and the Scotch, but we must also admit that the Germans are not a backward people. They are thrifty, honest, and industrious, and they have stability. Germany leads the world in many of the sciences. It was the home of famous authors and artists, especially composers. Much has been said about the great patriotism of the people of English extraction, but if I read my history correctly, they have to divide honors with the Germans of the Revolutionary period.

Mr. President, there stands in front of the White House, in Lafayette Square, a statue of a German that was undisturbed even during our war with Germany. It was undisturbed because of the service he had rendered to this country. It was undisturbed because of the inscription that it bore. It reads as follows:

Erected by the Congress of the United States to Frederick William Augustus Henry Ferdinand Baron von Steuben in grateful recognition of his services to the American people in their struggle for liberty.

Born in Prussia November 15, 1730
Died in New York November 28, 1794

After serving as aide-de-camp to Frederick the Great of Prussia he offered his sword to the American Colonies and was appointed major general and inspector general in the Continental Army. He gave military training and discipline to the citizen soldiers who achieved the independence of the United States.

Steuben had declared his willingness to come to America and give his life, if need be, in our war for freedom. The very first man to whom he had to expose his aims was a loyalist tavern keeper in one of the New England States, who thought more of King George III than he did of the cause for which Steuben had come to fight. I have nowhere read about German Tories during our war of freedom. Certainly they were neither famous nor numerous. Nor was there any mass migration to Canada at the close of the war, when the English-speaking Tories took their departure.

The great American ace does not have an Anglicized name. We justly pay homage to Rickenbacker, and I presume some of the Senators feel a little humiliation during this debate when they speak of hyphenated Americans. This term seems to apply to several white persons on this continent, except those whose ancestors are native Indian stock, or who came from the British Empire.

The family by the name of Muhlenberg is known throughout the Union to adults and school children alike. It is a German name that did not happen to be Anglicized. General Muhlenberg, a Revolutionary hero, contributed most to the fame of the family. He was so near to the hearts of the people of his native State, Pennsylvania, that they have honored him with a statue in the Nation's Capital. Another Muhlenberg was the first Speaker of the House of Representatives.

People of German extraction are found in every State in the Union. They are industrious, law-abiding, and well-respected in the community in which they live.

And are we going to officially declare that the people of the same nationality as Wagner, Beethoven, Goethe, Steuben, Muhlenberg, and Rickenbacker are too numerous in this land?

IMMIGRATION RESTRICTION LEAGUE

The printed hearings show that before the Committee on Immigration there appeared a Mr. Francis H. Kinnicutt, as a representative of the Immigration Restriction League, organized in 1908. His first statement was as follows:

I represent the Immigration Restriction League (Inc.), organized in 1908, and also the Allied Patriotic Societies of New York, which comprise about 40 patriotic societies. I ask permission to insert in the record the resolution from each in opposition to the Nye resolution.

He did file protests from a large number of organizations, including the American Legion and allied societies. He claimed they all indorsed the national-origins theory. One naturally wonders whether they were any better informed on the object to be accomplished than was Mr. Kinnicutt himself, who from his own remarks was evidently opposed to the very thing he was advocating, for he spoke of the immigrant from southern and eastern Europe as presenting greater difficulties of assimilation. He also spoke of the Anglo-Saxon as superior stock—in other words, the German element, which is such a large element of the population of England. He filed indorsement of the plan that would in practice reduce the number of immigrants from Germany and increase those from southern Italy.

It is evident that most of these 40 organizations must have acted very hastily. It is true, however, that the American Legion in their national convention went on record in favor of the national-origins plan; but I also believe that the average Legion member shares the views of Mr. Kinnicutt, and if so, he is misrepresented by the indorsements on file here, of which so much capital has been made in behalf of the national-origins plan. Somebody has been misled. This shows how little reliance may be placed upon indorsements filed here by so-called representatives of different organizations.

The fact that these organizations all claim to be patriotic had much weight with Members of Congress, anxious to comply with the wishes of those who had the best interests of our country at heart.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. NYE. That is quite in keeping with a great deal of misunderstanding that has developed in more recent weeks. People who have written in to this Senator or that Senator in support of national origins, upon discovering what national origins would really accomplish in the way of quotas, have responded, apologizing for ever having asked the Senator to do anything other than oppose the national-origins basis of quotas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield, briefly.

Mr. REED. I have a large file full of such recantations and reformations; but it did not seem to me that it would add to the information of the Senate to produce them.

Mr. NORBECK. The only point I can see in it is that the country is uninformed or misinformed as to what we are doing and that we are compelled to act upon our own responsibility.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The reflection that I received in my correspondence on this subject indicates that the proponents of the national-origins plan think that those of us who do not think it is workable are not in favor of restricted immigration, and they charge us with being loose in our thinking on that line. Some of us have been here for nearly 20 years and have voted "aye" upon every measure for the restriction of immigration, and we do not take very kindly insinuations of that sort.

Mr. NORBECK. I am not sure that I understand what the Senator from Ohio refers to.

Mr. FESS. I refer to these patriotic associations writing in and saying, "You are not patriotic," or "You are not in favor of restricted immigration."

Mr. NORBECK. Yes; our attitude has been misrepresented, but we are learning to be suspicious of those who boast of their virtues. The people of the United States have demonstrated their patriotism over and over again, but I have noticed that those who claim the least often do the most.

In reading the testimony I must admit that I felt rather humble when I read that the selective draft law did not go into effect in Hawaii, one of our large Territories, because there were sufficient volunteers to fill all demands; and the volunteers were largely Japanese, both citizens and noncitizens, who thought so well of their adopted country that they rushed to the support of our flag.

Mr. SACKETT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. SACKETT. I desire to state that there is a county of that kind in the State of Kentucky where they had no draft; but they were all natives.

Mr. NORBECK. This was true of an occasional county in several States, but I have reference to the fact that the record of Hawaii was rather unusual.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORBECK. I do.

Mr. BROOKHART. Upon that proposition I want to say that I think practically every county in the United States, if given a chance, would have done the same as Hawaii; but the General Staff of the United States Army wanted to establish a drafting system and kill off volunteer Americanism in this country, and they prepared a scheme to prevent volunteers; but the Japanese got ahead of them in Hawaii.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, it is also proposed to reduce the number of Irish immigrants. I see no occasion for this. In pioneer days they built our railroads. In peace time they run our cities. In war time they fight our battles. I want to second the motion of J. Adam Bede, that we acquire Ireland and raise our own policemen. But, talking seriously, Mr. President, we find the Irish holding high and important places in our American life. They have made not only great records in the Army and the Navy but also in civil life. We are also aware of the fact to-day that they are an important and helpful element in both the British Government and the British Army, notwithstanding some differences of opinion that we have read about. Some of the most talented and able sons of the Empire came from Ireland.

To sum the matter up, the national-origin theory is being promoted in connection with the statement that it will accomplish two things.

First. Reduce the number of immigrants coming to this country.

Second. Provide us a better class of immigrants.

The first statement is, of course, without foundation, as I have previously shown. An analysis of the situation will show the second one to be very presumptuous. It is, in fact, indefensible. No one can successfully defend it when all of the facts bearing on the issue are known.

The advocates of the national-origins plan propose to base a quota on records that do not exist. They propose to guess at the national origin of our people whose ancestors arrived here during the period of colonization and settlement.

They propose to reduce the German immigration quota to one-half; at the same time they argue that the English race is superior on account of its Anglo-Saxon blood.

In support of their argument they claim that undesirable immigrants are now reaching our shores. They do not go into detail unless pressed to do so, and then they fall back on the Mexicans for an excuse, at the same time as they leave those gates wide open for an increased number to come. They will admit that the art of self-government has developed in northern Europe and not southern Europe. They are compelled to admit that there are no dictators in northern Europe, for they are self-governing countries, and still they persist in changing the quota so as to exclude what they admit to be the most desirable.

Those who most persistently insist on the superiority of the white race are supporting measures here that will exclude Nordic immigrants; at the same time as we continue to admit unlimited numbers of blacks, reds, and mixed colors.

In the last campaign our Republican speakers warned us that if we voted the Democratic ticket we would get the national-origins plan. We voted the Republican ticket and now Republican leaders of the Senate are trying to hand us the Democratic plan.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen	Frazier	La Follette	Smith
Ashurst	George	McKellar	Steck
Barkley	Gillett	McNary	Steiwer
Bingham	Glass	Metcalf	Swanson
Blease	Glenn	Moses	Thomas, Idaho
Borah	Goff	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.

Dale	Howell	Robinson, Ark.	Waterman
Deneen	Johnson	Sackett	Watson
Dill	Jones	Schall	Wheeler
Edge	Kean	Sheppard
Fess	Keyes	Shortridge
Fletcher	King	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the Senate that if the pending resolution shall be disposed of this afternoon I expect to move to take up Senate Resolution 19, the resolution with reference to the amendment of the rules relating to executive sessions.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the controversy now engaging the attention of the Senate is between two immigration quota formulas of which one is the national origins quota basis and the other is 2 per cent of the foreign-born population of 1890. It should be definitely understood that there is not involved here any controversy as to whether we shall have more immigrants or fewer immigrants. The sole question is which of these formulas will become the permanent basis for determining how many immigrants from each European country may enter the United States each year?

Many false issues have been raised here. Even the formula called national origins has been used, I fear, designedly, to give a more or less patriotic preferential coloring to one of these formulas. National origins is merely an immigration formula which results in favoring certain present-day European races by reducing the present quota from other races.

Anti-alien sentiment, religious prejudice, and a recently developed American superiority complex has been injected into this issue in an unblushing manner. This is a most unhealthy condition. I foresee grave consequences both abroad and at home through this constant, year after year, agitation against the European immigrants and their children and these repeated votes of distrust, discrimination, and disdain. You will learn that the poverty-stricken, war-depleted nations of Europe will not allow your contemptuous attitude toward them and your repeated affronts to their racial values to pass forever without challenge. Racial and religious animosities have inevitably reaped the most cruel and destructive consequences.

Let us keep in view the real issue here. America having the right to make selections from those who may seek to immigrate to this country, let us consider which of these formulas is best for America. That at once brings us to the question of analyzing races, distasteful and unpleasant as it may be; but it is here. In the last analysis the only practical question is, Shall we by our action bring to America more English and Scotch and Irish and less Germans and Scandinavians? We can not bring here the descendents of those who fought in the Revolution. Their descendents are already here. We are dealing with present European racial stock. We are dealing with the English and Scotch and Irish and Germans and Scandinavians who are now knocking at our doors, and I put to you this question: Man for man and woman for woman, which will bring the most to America? Which will contribute most to the social, to the industrial, and to the political welfare of our country?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is that the real test that is before us? Is it not a fact that when the original provision for national origins was included in the immigration law nobody could tell which nationality it would affect? The question, it seems to me, is not whether we are going to vote for the admission of more who incidentally may be permitted to come from one country than from another, but which is a fair basis representing the nationalities of the United States regardless of the effect it may have on the immigrants from any one country.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator does not disagree with the assertion, I am sure, that if we are going to select immigrants we ought to select the best. If these formulas show one race getting less and another race getting more, with America willing to receive a limited number, we ought to determine which group will be best for the future of America in the absence of a scientific method of selection.

Mr. BARKLEY. I probably do not disagree with the Senator as to that; but if that suggestion is carried to its logical conclusion we might be justified in excluding all those from some particular countries and permitting others from another country to come in because of the superiority of the latter race. We might limit or restrict immigration entirely from certain countries and permit a greater immigration from other countries because of the superiority or our belief in the superiority in the latter's people.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We have the right to do that, and we have already done it in some cases. When we changed the quota based upon the census of 1920 to the census of 1890 we did it deliberately and reduced the quotas from southern Europe on the claim and theory that they would not make as good Americans as peoples coming from northern Europe.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the percentage applied to all countries alike. It was not a discrimination against any particular country except as the percentage itself might bear on the population of that particular country in the United States. It was not a direct discrimination.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am trying to treat the question practically. There are many theories and much pseudo-patriotism here. Some people have the notion that in some mysterious way the grandchildren of the writers of the Constitution and the Revolutionary fathers are going, through the national-origins plan, to be admitted to America. The practical question here is, What type of immigration is coming in the future to this country from Germany and the Scandinavian countries, and from England, Scotland, and Ireland, and is there any basis upon which we can determine which of these races will contribute most to America and make the best citizens?

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's position; but I do not like to be put in the attitude, and I do not think the Senate ought to be put in the attitude, of selecting between English and Germans, because if it were left to me I might prefer immigrants from both of those countries as compared to some other country, because I do not think that there has been a better citizenship created in the United States than by the immigrants who have come from both England and Germany. I do not like to regard it as discriminating in favor of one of those countries and against the other under any circumstances.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. With great respect for the Senator's opinion, I do not see how you can escape it, because that is the direct result. We are choosing between two formulas—one prefers certain races to other races. We must make a choice between a formula that provides for the present number of immigrants from Germany, Southern Ireland, and the Scandinavian countries and the present number from England, Ireland, and Scotland, or the national-origins formula, which reduces the number from Germany and the Scandinavian countries and gives a substantial increase to certain parts of the British Islands.

Mr. BARKLEY. That may be the incidental result, but I do not think it is the primary object.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, it is far from an incidental matter. It is the result rather than a theory I am going to discuss, and I intend that the real issue here be known to the country. But even if one is unable to reach a decision as to which of these racial groups is to be preferred, then it seems to me an unprejudiced mind should, as President Hoover undoubtedly has, consider the fictitious and speculative character of one of the formulas and base his opposition on that ground.

Mr. President, I repeat, no one can question the right of the American people to select whatever class of immigrants they choose. To my mind, therefore, the issue resolves itself to this—which formula is best for America? Which formula is likely to bring to America the best type for its future citizenry?

The fact that one of these formulas is more difficult to set up with exact justice is entitled to at least incidental consideration. To many it should be a controlling factor.

In my opinion, quoting President Hoover, the infinite complexities of intermarriage during a century and a half leave "grave doubts as to the whole value of these computations for the purposes intended for the national-origins formula."

Let us turn back for a moment to consider some of the issues and pronouncements upon this phase of the question during the past five years.

On January 3, 1927, the commission of Cabinet officers who reported to the President on the subject—as they were required to do under the law—in a letter which the President subsequently transmitted to the Senate, wrote:

> The report of the subcommittee is self-explanatory and stated to be a preliminary report, yet in the judgment of that committee further investigation will not substantially alter this presentation. Although this is the best information we have been able to secure, we wish to call attention to the reservations made by the committee, and to state that in our opinion the statistical and historical information available raised grave doubts as to the whole matter of these computations as a basis for the purposes intended, and we therefore can assume no responsibility for such conclusions under these circumstances.

It is true that there was another letter on the same subject, of the same date, sent to the Senate from which the proponents of national origins are fond of quoting. It put the proposition in a somewhat more favorable light. But the fact is that the President advised us that the other letter was erroneous and unauthorized. It was, in fact, so far as it purported to express the views of the purported signers, spurious. It ought not to be offered now as evidence of anything except blundering, not to use a harsher term, upon the part of some one connected with the preparation and transmission of the true document.

Even Doctor Hill, of the Census Bureau, whom so many of the proponents of the national-origins scheme are fond of quoting, refers to what he called "elements of error" in the calculation and "arbitrary methods" which must be resorted to to determine national-origins percentages in the absence of actual statistics.

Now, let us note what Commissioner General Hull said in his annual report of 1926. He wrote:

> The bureau feels that the present method of ascertaining the quotas is far more satisfactory than the proposed determination by national origins, that it has the advantage of simplicity and of certainty. It is of the opinion that the proposed change will lead to great confusion and result in complexities, and accordingly it is recommended that the pertinent portions of Section I, providing for the revision of quotas as they now stand, be rescinded.

Again in February of 1928, the Senator from California, chairman of the Immigration Committee, in presenting from his committee a resolution providing for postponing for one year the effective date of the national-origins scheme, said:

> I violate no confidence in saying that the majority of the Immigration Committee desired to repeal the national origins law, but there being a minority in favor of it and our time being so limited we felt that we could not at this time have definite action.

When the House Immigration Committee last reported the resolution for postponement for one year the effective date of the national-origins plan they stated:

> The committee is of the opinion that the same uncertainty as to the results of regulating immigration by means of the national origins will continue to exist; that it seems far better to have immigration quotas for the purpose of restriction fixed in such a manner as to be easily explained and easily understood by all; that the United States, having started on a policy of numerical restriction, the principle of which is well understood, that little will be gained by changing the method.

Twice in the Senate and as late as March 3, 1929, the House of Representatives for the third time, by a vote of 192 to 152, voted to postpone the operation of the national-origins clause.

The above facts, it seems to me, support the opinion of President Hoover and others that the national-origins plan is at best speculative.

But let me return to the phase of this controversy which I consider controlling. Which formula will in actual operation be best for America? Which will give to America in the future a citizenry that will contribute most to its social, industrial, and political progress?

To answer this inquiry we must turn to the changes that these two formulas make in the present-day racial groups of immigrants that may be allowed to emigrate to this country. I divide these groups, for the sake of my argument, into English-speaking European immigrants and non-English-speaking European immigrants, as they may be affected by these two formulas. The changes in the smaller countries of southern Europe are inconsequential.

The national-origins plan, briefly stated, will reduce the number of non-English-speaking immigrants from Germany, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark nearly one-half, namely, about 33,000, and increase the English-speaking immigrants from England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, and the Irish Free State from 62,574 to 83,574.

If one is of the opinion that the Almighty has given to the present generation of English-speaking immigrants of the British Isles greater physical, moral, intellectual, and political ideals than the recent immigrants who have come here from Germany, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, then his duty in this controversy is clear. But is this true? I can only speak from my own observations. I will omit reference to the Irish who have come here from Ireland and whose loyalty and valuable contributions to this country is nowhere denied by those who are free from religious and racial prejudice.

The whole idea of relative race values is offensive, but it is the only issue here and I am ready to meet it.

Without in any way disparaging the type of immigrant that has more recently come to the United States from the British Isles, including those that have come from England, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, and the Irish Free State, I do not hesitate to state that by and large, judging by the spirit of industry, thrift, law-abiding habits, noncriminal tendencies, family solidarity, personal cleanliness, physical prowess, intellectual astuteness, and moral standards—in fact, including all those qualities of heart, mind, and body which generally constitute the sinews of a strong nation—the immigrants from Germany, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark are not excelled. In making this statement may I be permitted to remark that these racial groups which I am here extolling are numerically small in my own constituency. I mention this that it may not be claimed that I am influenced by political consideration.

The abandoned farms of New England have been reclaimed and the barren and unproductive soil of its hills have been regenerated not by the English, Scotch, or Irish immigrants, but by the non-English-speaking immigrants, many of them from Norway and Sweden. The great tobacco plantations of the Connecticut Valley, the onion and dairy farms, and even the cranberry bogs are to-day successfully and profitably operated by the so-called foreigner, following their voluntary abandonment by the old American stock. The extent to which the German, the Swede, the Norwegian, and the Dane have taken advantage of the economic and social opportunities of American life, their conscientious devotion to the duties of citizenship, justifies the claim that they and their children are equal, if not the superior, of any other group of immigrants. I, for one, am not unmindful at this hour of the great devotion the immigrants from these countries have shown in the past and the sacrifices they have made to save America, but particularly do I want to emphasize the remarkable loyalty that was displayed by the German immigrants and their children in the trying days of the World War, when their hearts must have been pierced with the most poignant of griefs and their souls harassed and tried with a Gethsemane that no other group in America ever before experienced.

Mr. President, I know only one fault, if it can be called such, of the immigrants from the countries that are losers by the shift from the present formula. It is that they are nearly all Republicans. Forgiving them their political blindness, which Republican Members of this body will not consider unpatriotic, I do not hesitate to say that, taking all things into consideration, the formula in operation for the last five years, rather than the national-origins formula, is the best for our country—for its prosperity, its institutions, and its ideals.

I do not share the alarm voiced by the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] a few days ago. It seems to me he magnifies and exaggerates tremendously the issue. He would give the impression that the future of America, its preservation and its prosperity, depends upon the adoption of the national-origins amendment. Note his words:

> It is infinitely more important than all the tariff and farm bills that any Congress could ever enact, and yet it is disposed of with one quick line in the concluding paragraph of the President's message. When pages are given to the bread and butter question that precedes it, this question, which goes to the heart of America, is given one line, and we are supposed to follow a representation unsupported by argument, unsupported by any kind of proof, merely a staccato assertion that it is unworkable, when every expert says it is not. America in the days to come will depend upon the decision of the Senate now.

In other words, the momentous question of the hour is whether we will save America, not by increasing or lowering our immigration and not by bettering the general immigration admission requirements, but by keeping out of America approximately 33,000 Germans, Swedes, and Danes and of substituting for them about 21,000 immigrants of English, Scotch, and Irish stock. Mark you, the question of saving America is not going to depend upon whether we keep out 60,000 or more Mexicans who are yearly flocking into our country. Mark you, America is not going to be lost by the tens of thousands of aliens who are smuggled into our country annually; but, forsooth, unless we substitute an English-speaking stock for a limited number of Germans, Swedes, and Danes the future of America is in jeopardy.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the national-origins plan because it is speculative and unpracticable and, whether intended or not, actually is discriminatory against the German, Scandinavian, and southern Irish, and, further, leaving aside theories and biased sentiment and considering this question in a practical manner, I am convinced the formula of the past five years is the safest, wisest, and most beneficial for our country.

Mr. President, a trip through the Northwest reveals what the immigrants of Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and Germany have done for this country. They have contributed hard work, high intelligence, wholesome living, and one thing that the country needs more than it needs money—a truly democratic spirit. I venture to say that in proportion to their numbers the records of the criminal and divorce courts discloses fewer litigants of these immigrants and their children than of any other foreign stock.

On November 11, 1927, there was dedicated in Kansas City, Mo., a very unique memorial—a memorial to the pioneer mothers. Who can think of the pioneer mothers of the great Middle West without thinking of the mothers of the German and Scandinavian races? I quote the inscription from that memorial, and I respectfully ask if any tribute to the pioneer mother can be disassociated from a tribute to the women of the German and Scandinavian races, who enriched by their labors the great agricultural fields of America? Here is the inscription:

> She conquered the primeval wilderness with a fortitude unparalleled in the annals of sublime womanhood.
> She gave counsel and comfort to the sturdy, heroic men who became the founders of great cities.
> She directed her children along the trail that leads to the very summit of useful, patriotic citizenship.
> She braved the perils of plain and forest—of mountain and river—of wild beast and lawless man to build a home in the freedom of the open spaces on the western frontier.
> She had no thought of direction, except that it was God's will to guide her footsteps into a land rich in opportunity for herself and loved ones.
> It is to her we give praise for a vision greater than our own, for she broke all the ties of ancestry and kindred and set her face fearlessly into the golden glow of the setting sun.

Mr. President, among these pioneer women there may have been English, Scotch, and Irish immigrants as well as old-fashioned American mothers, but above all others and outstanding were the German and Scandinavian women. Mr. President, I am going to translate my affection and tribute to them by voting against a measure which they have good reason to believe is discriminatory.

—LIMITATION OF TARIFF REVISION TO AGRICULTURAL SCHEDULE

Mr. ALLEN obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kansas yield to me so that I may offer a resolution?

Mr. ALLEN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. I offer a resolution and ask that it may be read and then that it may lie over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 91) was read, as follows:

> Whereas it is the sense of the Senate that any amendment to the existing tariff law should be confined to agriculture and directly related products: Now, therefore, be it
> Resolved, That the Committee on Finance is hereby instructed to limit its hearings, deliberations, recommendations, and report upon H. R. 2667 (the tariff bill) to the agricultural and directly related schedules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

NATIONAL-ORIGINS CLAUSE OF IMMIGRATION ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 37) to discharge the Committee on Immigration from the further consideration of the bill (S. 151) to repeal the national-origins provisions of the immigration act of 1924.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The Senator from Kansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, when I look at the chart upon the wall of the Senate Chamber I find that we have spent all of this time and aroused all of this propaganda and expended all of this argument for an issue which involves 11,000 immigrants a year. I am going to vote for the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], but only for one reason, which is that we may have the parliamentary privilege of passing upon an amendment to the repealer act designed to suspend for one year the further consideration of this subject, and through the appointment and deliberations of a joint legislative commission have a scientific study presented to the next session of Congress as a basis for dealing with the great problem of immigration in a scientific fashion.

I have never heard so many men proclaim their patriotism and their love of country, nor have I seen less of patriotism or love of country manifested in any argument. What I should like to do would be to see this great Congress some day, if it is possible, begin the discussion of an American problem and hold to that discussion under the merits of the situation, and not bring the sinister and hostile reactions of the Members in here for the purpose of casting bitter and fruitless reflections upon racial groups. It is utter nonsense to talk about the desirability of the German and the Swedish Americans as compared to the desirability of those who were here originally. I think it is as foolish to talk about that as it would be for me to rise and oppose the national-origins plan on the ground that certain British Tories, whose descendants are still here, sniped the soldiers of Washington at Bunker Hill, or that some of the descendants of the Hessians are still in this country providing a basis upon which immigration may come.

What I would like to see done, if we are going into this problem in earnest and for the good of the country, is the establishment of a scientific basis for selective immigration. It is not a new thing. In 1909 the Dominion Royal Commission of Great Britain established a bureau to make a study exactly similar to that which I am proposing this afternoon; and in 1922, as the result of that study, the English Parliament passed the Empire settlement act.

The Empire settlement act provided not for selective immigration but selective emigration, because Great Britain was desiring to people her colonies with the choice of those at home. In furtherance of that plan, Great Britain has made appropriations—this year the appropriation is $15,000,000—and those appropriations are used for the purpose of cooperating, under similar appropriations in the Dominions, with the authorities in the Dominions, so that all of the emigration out of England is directed in intelligent channels for the purpose of securing to Australia, to New Zealand, to Canada, and to such British colonies as are fed from the homeland with the choice of British tradesmen, British laborers, British agriculturists, and British miners.

The other day I asked the able Senator from Pennsylvania if it would not be a good plan to delay this matter, in order that we might have a year for a deliberate study of this proposal for scientific selectivity, and he said, as I understood him, that the committee on quotas had insisted that the question had been gone into as thoroughly as it possibly could be done. He led me to believe that that committee and this body had exhausted the last word of wisdom upon this subject. I do not think we ever have exhausted or ever will exhaust the last word of wisdom upon any subject that is ever brought before us. But that is neither here nor there. I read the present immigration law to-day in a vain effort to discover one intelligent idea that protects this country along the line of selective immigration.

When Canada four years ago wanted 30,000 miners, all she needed to do was to say to England, "Send us 30,000 selected miners," and she got 30,000 miners. If, to-morrow, we should ask our Immigration Bureau to send us 30,000 miners, we would not know whether we were getting miners or farmers or bootleggers or chimney-sweeps or bootblacks. We would merely know that they have not blind staggers, and that there is no evidence in their personal history or through the examination of the board that they are insane; that is about the limit that we seek to place in the way of protection upon the type of immigration that comes into this country.

I do not care particularly what the basis of the past has been. What I am concerned for is the future of citizenship in this great country; and we may protect that future if we will build up a system of priorities through which we may govern the immigration into this country.

I have a statement from the Secretary of the Department of Labor, given to me verbally a few days ago, in which he said, "There would be no difficulty whatsoever in giving you at any time a list of the needs which exist in this country for additional people in the various employments and trades and professions"; and the Secretary of Labor for many years has said that we should have applied this system of scientific selectivity to the immigration into this country.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am going to vote for the Nye resolution in the hope that I may substitute the resolution I have introduced for the repealer bill of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in the hope that we may delay this for a year; in the further hope that by this delay there may be brought into this Congress the beginning of a sensible and intelligent and well-balanced system of immigration.

Mr. President, there may be a further limitation of immigration. I see no reason why we should guess that we want 153,000 more, or that we want 164,000 more. I should be satisfied if we might establish as the maximum of our quota 100,000, and then let that 100,000 be chosen according to the needs of the moment when we choose them.

I have just received two messages that I want to read, and then I shall not detain the Senate longer.

Here is a telegram that came to me this morning:

> The Board of the Pittsburgh International Institute of the Young Women's Christian Association took action to-day to indorse your resolution to defer national origins for a year and set up joint congressional committee instructed to make a survey looking to scientific selection of immigrants in harmony with the needs of the country. The committee regards both 1890 quotas and national origins as inaccurate and unfair. We hope you will have chance to press and pass your resolution.

That is signed by Catherine L. Lawless, the general secretary of the International Institute of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Here is another authority, also from Pittsburgh, Pa., in the person of Francis D. Tyson, professor of economics in the University of Pittsburgh. Said he:

> MY DEAR SENATOR: May I give hearty indorsement to your proposed resolution to defer application of the national-origins provision of the immigration law for one year, and to set up a joint congressional committee instructed to make a survey of the problem of giving priority to immigrants on the basis of individual occupation? Such a scientific selection of immigrants is much more in harmony with the needs of the country than either of the 1890 quotas or the new national-origins arrangement.
> I have been interested in the economic regulation of immigration for more than a decade and have written several articles on the regulation of immigration with reference to "the real demand for labor." Practical difficulties are, of course, considerable, and I believe that the committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce has recently issued a report on the question. Passage of the bill to provide a nation-wide system of employment offices and improved unemployment statistics are essential.
> Both the 1890 quotas and national origins are open to the charge of inaccuracy and unfairness. An unfortunate phase of the current discussion is the stirring up of group antagonisms that have nothing to do with the issues of American life.
> Some of the best students in the country, like Profs. Paul H. Douglas and William Ogburn in economics and sociology at the University of Chicago, and Prof. A. B. Wolfe, of Ohio State, oppose the restriction of immigration on racial grounds. In fact, very few social scientists share the emotional attitude of the "eugenic" group, whose indorsement of national origins was quoted by Senator REED.
> Two representative organizations here, the International Institute and the Conference on Immigration Policy, will, I think, indorse your stand. I hope that if Mr. NYE'S resolution has a chance of passing, you will be able to present your proposal as a substitute for Senator WALSH'S repealer of national origins.

There are two authorities, both of whom have been actively connected with immigration, who are in touch with this subject, not because of its political value but because of the interest they have in the contribution which is being made in this country by our mighty melting pot.

Mr. President, I hope that those who favor the beginning in this country of a scientific program of immigration will vote for the Nye resolution in order that we may follow it by the resolution to postpone for scientific study this problem for another year.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. CARAWAY and Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not yield for the present. I desire to reply to the Senator from Kansas, and then let the other Senators take the floor in their own time. I prefer that that course be pursued.

Mr. President, it is utterly impossible to write an immigration law that will be satisfactory to the various countries of the earth. In preparing an immigration measure I have sought, during my service in the House and in the Senate, to safeguard the interests of the United States. I never have been in favor of permitting the various countries of the earth to tell us who should come here, and in what number their people should come.

I reminded the Senate once before that on one occasion the King of Denmark pardoned 700 criminals with the understanding that they would go to the United States. Congressman Burnett, of my State, returning from Sicily, said that he had asked the people there what had become of all the bandits who had given them so much trouble in the past; and they said, "They are all in America."

Mr. President, this question has become a serious one with us. We are now trying to provide by law to keep out the cheap products of foreign labor. We say that the coming of those cheap products hurts labor in the United States and reduces the wage scale so that the American wage earner can not make a living; and in order to protect American labor we are putting up a tariff wall between the business of the Government of the United States and these people in foreign lands. But I tell you, Senators, the most important thing to guard against is the coming of the unfit foreigner to the United States. We have bandits of every character, racketeers, kidnapers, blackhanders, and assassins congregated in every great city of the land, until to-day they terrorize the law-abiding citizens of this Nation.

I have seen that influence grow in the United States and become so strong that the alien can not be eliminated from the basis of representation for the House over yonder. To-day, on the 7,000,000 aliens that live in this country, 35 Members of Congress sit at the other end of the Capitol. I have seen that influence grow and become so strong that a bill can not be gotten through Congress even to take a census of them, to know who they are, and where they are, and how many of them there are in the United States.

I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. We must not open the gate on the immigration law that we have. We must keep it closed tight. We have a good law. Let us try it out, and not permit anybody to make a dent in this wall. Let us stand by what we have. Surely there are enough Democrats and Republicans here who will fling aside their partisanship and strike hands about a common center in this body for the good of our Government. Let us think of the people who are already here and think of the children yet to come up to be men and women here, and let us preserve America for Americans.

Mr. President, I shall vote against this resolution.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an article which I ask to have read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of Thursday, June 13, 1929]

WIFE OF REPRESENTATIVE DE PRIEST IS WHITE HOUSE GUEST

Washington society is enjoying a little excitement over the fact that Mrs. Hoover yesterday afternoon entertained Mrs. Oscar De Priest at tea. Mrs. De Priest is wife of the colored Congressman from Illinois. Society is still mindful of the storm of discussion that resulted from President Roosevelt's action in entertaining Booker T. Washington, the great colored educator, at dinner. That similar teapot tempest will follow Mrs. Hoover's course is regarded as altogether unlikely, but the incident appears to have provided a subject of absorbing conversation to-day.

Others at the small tea party included Mrs. James Good, wife of the Secretary of War; Mrs. William D. Mitchell, wife of the Attorney General; Mrs. Arthur M. Free, wife of the California Congressman; Mrs. Clyde Kelly, wife of the Pennsylvania Congressman; and Miss Grace Burton, niece of the Ohio Senator.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay this vote in any degree at all; but a statement was made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] in his argument upon the national-origins matter a few days ago that I think ought to be clarified for the sake of the record.

At page 2419 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he said:

Under the 1890 basis, to-day 31 per cent of all the immigration into the United States comes from Germany. By their own figures they have never claimed over 17 per cent of the white population of continental United States.

I desire to ask the Senator if he was referring to the author Faust as his authority?

Mr. REED. I was.

Mr. NYE. I find at page 27 of volume 2 of the book entitled "The German Element In the United States," by Albert Bernhardt Faust, this language:

The three leading elements, therefore, if the above methods of calculation be correct, compare as follows:

German element	18,500,000
English element	20,400,000
Irish and Scotch elements	13,900,000
Total	52,700,000

Leaving for other national stocks—Scandinavians, French and other Latin stocks, Slavic races, Hebrews, and others—14,290,000.

Out of a total white population in 1900 of 66,990,000.

The German is but two millions behind the largest, the English stock. By adding its large contribution, between eighteen and nineteen millions (or about 27 per cent of the entire white population of the United States) to the twenty millions or more from England, it has made the American people a Germanic nation.

Therefore instead of 17 per cent, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has insisted, this authority, a great German authority, maintains 27 per cent of the population to have been from Germany.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, of course, the answer to that obviously is that Mr. Faust includes in that particular statement all the people of Germanic stock who came from Austria, all who came from Switzerland, all who came from Alsace and Lorraine, all who came from the low countries, all who came from what is now Poland, and making proper allowances for those elements, the balance is about 17 per cent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, from the discussion which has gone on in this body, as well as the articles which have been printed in the newspapers and the propaganda sent about the country, it is very apparent that the popular idea of the national-origins measure is that it places a restriction upon immigration. I think that is what the average citizen believes the bill means, that when the national origins law shall be put into effect, there will be a material restriction in immigration to this country.

I have a letter in my hand from a very distinguished citizen of my State, formerly in the diplomatic service, a minister of our country, who writes me saying:

We think alike on George Washington, the American Constitution, and other matters, therefore I look for your support in the matter of supporting the bill of Senator REED, of Pennsylvania, dealing with aliens flooding our home-grown population.

The popular idea is that under the present law aliens are flooding our country, and that under the national origins act there will be a restriction of immigration. Of course, that is not true. There will be some restriction of immigration, about 11,000, as I recall it, 11,000 fewer persons than under the present law.

Think of it; during the first year after the war, I believe it was, nearly a million immigrants came to this country. Under the present law we restrict the number to 164,000, and under the national-origins provision, supported by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the number will be 153,000. So instead of having a million, as we had immediately after the war, instead of having 164,000, as we have now, if the national-origins clause shall take effect, there will be only 11,000 fewer persons coming in than at present. So the national-origins plan is not a measure to restrict immigration.

Why do not the men who are interested in restriction bring in a bill changing the percentage? Instead of the 2 per cent basis under the census of 1890 why should not those who are seeking restriction propose 1½ per cent based on the 1890 census, or 1 per cent based on that census?

But, as a matter of fact, restriction of immigration is not the question at issue. The question before us is a proposal to change the fundamental immigration law, to change the proportion of nationals, which in effect will cut out 50 per cent of the Germans and Irish who now come in and limit the number of Scandinavians. The number of British will be so increased as to replace practically all the northern Europeans excluded.

I listened to a speech just now from one of my colleagues on this side which was a plain intimation that the Black Hand people and the bandits and the thugs come from the Germans and Scandinavians. There could be no other thought than that back of his remarks. The national-origins measure would permit all the other countries except the German nation and the Scandinavian nations to bring in just as many as they do under the present law.

If, therefore, our friend stands for a change of the law because there will be fewer Black Hand artists and fewer thugs and bandits and criminals, it must be that in the back of his head is the idea that the Germans and the Scandinavians will contribute that sort of a population. Every person here, and every fair-minded person in the country knows that that is not the case. There are no finer citizens in any State of the Union than those who come to us from Germany, from Norway, from Ireland, and from Sweden.

Mr. President, let us not vote on the theory or in the belief that the national-origins measure would restrict immigration, because the restriction would be so trifling that it would not be worth considering. I think the Senator from North Dakota has it in mind, when the matter is presented to us, to limit immigration under the census of 1890 to 150,000.

We would not be restricting immigration by sustaining the national-origins project. On the other hand, we will be giving offense to a great group of fine citizens, as loyal Americans as can be found in our country, if we permit the national-origins provision to become the law on the 1st day of July.

This is no time, when the whole world is striving to reestablish peace, when the whole world is striving to wipe out the scars and effects of the late war, this is no time for the Congress of the United States to give expression to the thought that our country does not welcome citizens who will come here from Germany and Ireland and from the Scandinavian countries. We wish to permit the sons and daughters who have prospered here to bring their parents and other fireside friends. Most of those who come will be of this class.

I live in a city and in a State where thousands upon thousands of our people have come themselves as immigrants, or they are the sons and daughters of immigrants. I could not find it in my heart to find any fault with those people. Regardless of religion or race, in my city our people are satisfied with the present condition.

I appeal to Senators not to take any steps to-day which will give offense to thousands of loyal citizens who will feel hurt beyond words if we give evidence by our acts that they are not welcome as citizens and inhabitants of our country.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for just a few moments.

I have listened with some amazement to some of the statements which have been made upon the floor of the Senate while this resolution relating to immigration has been pending. I find myself in accord with the view taken by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and find myself in opposition to those "pseudo-Republicans" who are opposing the President of the United States at this time.

The statement was made the other day—I think by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]—that we were letting in a lot of "slacker aliens." I was curious to know just what he meant by the statement, and I am not sure whether it was his statement or something that he read.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator permit me to answer?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. REED. It was a statement presented to the Committee on Immigration by the American Legion.

Mr. WHEELER. I was under the impression that that was so, but I was not sure. I am curious, then, to know just what the American Legion meant when they referred to "alien slackers."

Mr. REED. They meant——

Mr. WHEELER. Just let me continue.

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator was asking a question.

Mr. WHEELER. I was just wondering whether or not they meant by "alien slackers" the Swedes and the Norwegians and the Danes and the Irish. Are those the people they meant?

If my memory serves me correctly—and I was United States district attorney in my State during the war—the records will disclose, I am sure, there was no more patriotic class of people in the United States of America during the war than were the Swedes and the Norwegians and the Danes.

When the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] talked about the Black Hand individuals, the people who are destroying this Government of ours, did he mean that the Swedes and the Danes and the Irish and the Germans are the ones who are destroying this Government of ours? Are these people the criminals that he referred to?

The only issue in this fight to-day is as to whether or not you are going to let in more Scandinavians and more Germans or whether or not you are going to let in more of some other races. If you vote against the Nye resolution to discharge the committee, then you are voting to discriminate against the Swedes and the Norwegians and the Danes and the Germans and the Irish, and you might just as well recognize that that is the issue before us.

I stand on the floor of the Senate and say that in my humble judgment there is not any more patriotic class of citizens than those you are going to discriminate against by your vote when you vote in favor of national origins.

Gentlemen talk about national origins. Of course, the quotas would not be based on national origins. That is a misnomer, as it does not take into consideration the origin of all our nationals, and everybody on this floor knows it.

Some say you want to remember the forefathers who came over here, suffered hardships, and developed the Nation. How about the Germans and the Scandinavians who came over here and developed the great Northwest? They suffered hardships, and some still are suffering hardships.

Senators have risen in their places beating their breasts and talking about their forefathers having come here. My forefathers came over here at just as early a date, I am of the opinion, as the forefathers of any man on the floor of the Senate, and they all came from Great Britain. But that is not the question at the present time. The question, in my judgment, is whether or not the people of northern Europe make better citizens and whether or not we should let in more of the same nationality. The question is, What is best for the United States?

So far as I am personally concerned, I am in favor of restricted immigration. I would be perfectly willing to stop immigration into the country entirely for a period of two or three years. But when men rise on the floor of the Senate and wrap themselves in the American flag and say, "We are 100 per cent Americans and that is the reason why we are in favor of the bill," I say it is all nonsense. There is not, in my judgment, one iota of truth in any such statement, because it is not a question of patriotism but it is a question of whether or not we believe the northern Europeans, the Danes, Swedes, Germans, and Irish, should be discriminated against or whether we do not believe it. That is the issue and we can not shield it under any cloak of patriotism. If Senators want to discriminate against them, then they should vote to sustain the committee; but if they do not want to discriminate against them, then they should vote for the Nye resolution. If Senators vote for the Nye resolution and it is upheld and anybody in the Senate or a majority of the Senate want to restrict immigration, then let us do it. I would be one who would vote to restrict immigration more than it is restricted under the so-called national-origins clause.

Mr. STECK. Mr. President, I want to amplify briefly something the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has just said. I am quite certain that practically all of the patriotic groups, real and so-called, in the United States which have taken an interest in the immigration question have done so because they believe two things. In the first place, they believe that under the national origins act we are going really to restrict immigration over the present figure. In the next place, they believe, putting it very frankly, that under the national origins act we will have a gain from northern and western Europe and that we will lose from other parts of the world. That is absolutely an erroneous idea. I do not believe that the patriotic organizations, the American Legion and others, if they had the facts placed squarely before them, would be in favor of the national origins act as the results have been worked out. The claimed purpose of the method is a very patriotic one, but it is the result in which we are interested.

I have prepared a very brief table on the subject. I have taken the countries of northern Europe—Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, including Northern Ireland, England, Scotland, and Wales, the Irish Free State, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland—and I find that by a change from the present quota to the national origins act we would lose 16,553, or a total of about 12 per cent. I have taken the countries of southern and eastern Europe—Austria, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Russia, and Yugoslavia—and I find that from those countries we would have a total gain of 4,170, or an increase of about 25 per cent, as against a loss of about 12 per cent from the countries of northern and western Europe, if we change from the present basis to the national-origins plan.

So far as I am concerned, I believe in the restriction of immigration. I would like to see it cut to 100,000. But I do not believe in the present policy, and I do not believe in the policy we are seeking to adopt, because I think it means simply an explanation and an apology for the stand we are about to take. I believe unless we are going to adopt a scientific method, such as that suggested by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. ALLEN]—though I do not know what that might possibly be—we should take a positive stand and say that, regardless of how many are here and where they are from, we will accept so many as a total and we will accept so many from this country and so many from that country without any apology to any country. I do not believe we owe any explanation or any apology to any country for our attitude on this matter. I think that it is the only fair and honest method by which we can procure a fair immigration law and a fair immigration system. I expect to vote for the pending resolution.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD at this point the table to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Countries having a loss of about 12 per cent

	Present quota	National origin	Loss	Gain
Belgium	512	1,304		792
Denmark	2,789	1,181	1,608

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], referring a moment ago to my speech, stated that I had said in effect that the criminals in the United States to whom I had referred were from Germany and the Scandinavian countries. I made no such statement. A great many of our very best citizens come from the Scandinavian countries and Germany. I was referring to the criminal class, and I said they come from various countries, that some of those criminals have come from practically all the countries, and that if I had it in my power I would deport them and get rid of the aliens we have.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. REED. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRATTON. The vote now about to be taken is on the resolution of the Senator from North Dakota to discharge the committee from the further consideration of Senate bill 151?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the pending question. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. BLACK's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER].

Mr. BROOKHART (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who is detained by reason of illness in his family. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea." If the Senator from Mississippi were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. GOULD's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] and of the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD]. Those Senators have a pair upon this vote. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and if the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD] were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when Mr. HALE's name was called). The senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. If the Senator from Maine were present and voting, he would vote "nay," and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], I understand, would vote "yea."

Mr. NORBECK (when Mr. MCMASTER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCMASTER] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). Upon this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is absent on account of sickness. If the Senator from Maine were here, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HASTINGS (when the name of Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON], who is necessarily detained. If he were present, he would vote "nay," and if I were permitted to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when the name of Mr. STEPHENS was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] is detained by illness in his family. On this question he is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is necessarily absent because of illness. If he were present, I am informed, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HAYDEN. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—37

So the Senate refused to discharge the Committee on Immigration from the further consideration of the bill (S. 151) to repeal the national-origins provisions of the immigration act of 1924.

Mr. WHEELER subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] this afternoon announced that he was gratified to tell the country that one of President Hoover's recommendations had just passed both branches of the Government, and that certain credit was due to certain Republican Senators. I desire to announce that one of the President's recommendations was just defeated in the Senate, and great credit should be given to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] for its defeat. Perhaps this recommendation of the President's was only a campaign gesture.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES—OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS

Mr. JONES and Mr. HARRISON addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 22, being Senate Resolution 19, proposing to amend the Rule XXXVIII so as to provide for open executive sessions.

Mr. President, I desire to say that if the Senate shall vote to proceed to the consideration of the resolution, I shall then ask that it may be temporarily laid aside, not expecting to enter into a discussion of the resolution this afternoon.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington withhold that motion for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Finance Committee is now devoting a good many hours each day to the consideration of the tariff bill as passed by the House. Under the committee program witnesses are to appear in relation to the various schedules. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] this afternoon offered a very important resolution, expressing the sense of the Senate that the Committee on Finance be directed to consider nothing except the agricultural and related schedules. I am wondering if the Senator from Washington will not withhold his motion and let us consider the resolution of the Senator from Idaho, because of its very great importance and urgency at this time?

Mr. JONES. The resolution of the Senator from Idaho has gone over under the rule, as I understand.

Mr. HARRISON. But I am wondering if the Senator would not let us consider it now, because if the sentiment of the Senate shall be that we are to confine our consideration to the agricultural and related schedules, then we can avoid the taking of a great deal of testimony on the part of other witnesses.

Mr. NORRIS and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. JONES. I shall yield in just a moment. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi, as I said a moment ago, that if the Senate will take up the resolution for which I ask consideration, then I shall immediately ask that the resolution be temporarily laid aside, not expecting to discuss the resolution to-day. Then the Senate may proceed with anything else it desires.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, for what purpose——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I yield first to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to state to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that to consider the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] at this time would require unanimous consent. It has gone over under the rule, and will come up automatically to-morrow in the morning hour, if the Senate shall adjourn to-day. If the motion of the Senator from Washington to take up his resolution providing for an amendment to the rules shall be adopted, and if we shall adjourn to-night instead of taking a recess, then automatically the resolution of the Senator from Idaho will be reached in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I——

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JONES. I have yielded to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say further, before I conclude, that if we shall not have disposed of the resolution of the Senator from Idaho by 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, the Senator from Washington will be willing, I understand, to have the unfinished business laid aside temporarily at that time in order that the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Idaho may be continued.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I reported Calendar No. 22, being the resolution of the Senator from Washington, and I am as anxious as is any Senator to dispose of the question it involves before we adjourn or take a recess; but, inasmuch as we have the tariff bill before us, and the resolution introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has referred, is a matter of transcendant interest; inasmuch also as we are not going to have many more nominations before us until after the recess—whatever length it may be—I see no reason why we should not defer the question of the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], as reported with amendments from the Committee on Rules, until after we shall have decided what we are going to do about the tariff measure.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. And moreover, Mr. President, if to-morrow morning we meet after an adjournment, we shall come to Calendar No. 22 before we can reach the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho, because I understand his resolution will be a resolution coming over from a preceding day.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me?

Mr. MOSES. I have not the floor. I am speaking by the courtesy of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Some of us are not familiar with the resolution which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] seeks to have considered. Will the Senator kindly state what is the purport of the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. If that shall be done, it must be by the permission of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who has the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Washington yield to have the resolution of the Senator from Idaho read?

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly willing to have the resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is the sense of the Senate that any amendment to the existing tariff law should be confined to agriculture and directly related products: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance is hereby instructed to limit its hearings, deliberations, recommendations, and report upon H. R. 2667—the tariff bill—to the agricultural and directly related schedules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that if the Senate desires to dispose of the resolution of the Senator from Idaho, as I take it, it will, there will be no trouble about temporarily laying aside my resolution, if it shall be made the unfinished business. I should like to have my resolution made the unfinished business, and I repeat, there will be no trouble about giving the resolution of the Senator from Idaho all the consideration that may be necessary.

Mr. MOSES. Very well, Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington is willing to permit the resolution, if it shall be taken up, to be laid aside, I shall not object.

Mr. JONES. I am willing that it should be laid aside if no Senator wants to discuss the resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BINGHAM. I merely want to ask the Senator whether it is his intention to press for the consideration of the resolution before the recess which we hear so much about and to which we come no nearer?

Mr. JONES. I hope to dispose of the resolution before the Senate shall take any extended recess.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator be willing to lay aside the resolution whenever the Senate Finance Committee shall be in session holding hearings? There are several members of that committee who have been assigned certain duties in connection with the hearings on the tariff bill during the next two or three weeks, and who are also members of the Committee on Rules. They are very anxious to be present during the debate on the resolution.

Mr. JONES. No; I will not consent to lay it aside just for that particular purpose. I think, however, we can accommodate the members of the Finance Committee and at the same time consider the resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understood the Senator to say he was willing to lay it aside at any time.

Mr. JONES. I meant for actual business of the Senate on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield further to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington what is to be gained by pressing the resolution, in view of the fact, which everybody knows, that we are on the eve of a recess?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to press the resolution and have it disposed of before any such recess shall be taken.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, the Senator from Washington wants the Senate to be under a new set of rules while it is in recess for six weeks. Is that right?

Mr. JONES. The resolution has been pending for some time, and I am anxious to secure action upon it.

Mr. MOSES. It has been pending for years in one form or another, so far as that is concerned.

Mr. JONES. The Senate, of course, will take such action as the majority may determine.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to ask a query in behalf of a number of Senators who know nothing concerning the matter. Can the Senator tell us whether our leaders have determined upon a recess; and if so, when it is to be taken and for how long a period?

Mr. JONES. That I can not tell the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would inquire of any Senator, therefore, who knows any of the facts, who has any knowledge of the situation, whether the Senate can be afforded any information as to when we are to recess, for how long we are to recess, and what generally is the situation in that regard?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to ask if it would be possible to have a unanimous-consent agreement to take up the resolution which is now on the table to-morrow, say, at 12 o'clock, and vote upon it at not later than 4 o'clock?

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator refer to the resolution submitted by him to-day?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. I object to that.

Mr. BORAH. Will the leader of the majority permit us, then, to have an adjournment to-night?

Mr. WATSON. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho to-day may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read, and the Chair will request the Senate to be in order so that it may hear the resolution read. It has already been read twice.

The Chief Clerk again read Senate Resolution 91.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DILL. I should like to know what is pending before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At this time the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is pending, and that motion is debatable.

Mr. WATSON obtained the floor.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WATSON. I do.

Mr. EDGE. In view of the fact that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Idaho, as I followed its reading, is almost revolutionary in character, in so far as it attempts to direct a standing committee of the Senate, I should like to ask him, Why not make one straight cut across to the apparent objective, and move to discharge the Committee on Finance from further consideration of the tariff bill and permit the Senate to consider it as a Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold the motion for a minute?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator will not withhold the motion until we can have a vote on the motion which I have made?

Mr. WATSON. I am entirely willing to have a vote on the motion of the Senator from Washington, but it looked as if no vote was going to be reached.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Indiana to object to the request for unanimous consent to vote on the resolution of the Senator from Idaho at 4 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. WATSON. I did.

Mr. HARRISON. Would the Senator suggest some other date on which a vote may be taken on that resolution?

Mr. WATSON. I will have to talk with the Senator from Idaho about that.

Mr. HARRISON. I will remind the Senator from Indiana that this morning in the Finance Committee, when a similar resolution was offered, it did not take the committee two minutes to vote on the question. Why should we not vote on the resolution of the Senator from Idaho now?

Mr. WATSON. It may take the Senate more than two minutes to vote it down.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator entertain any doubt about voting it down here in the Senate?

Mr. WATSON. I know nothing about that, and I intend to try to find out. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 19.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, that motion is debatable, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BINGHAM. I should like to have the opportunity to debate it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I regret the necessity of debating the matter at this time; but in view of the fact that it probably will not come up at an hour——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. [A pause.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Chair state the question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 19.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. BLACK's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BLACK] is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce that upon this question my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD]. Both Senators are unavoidably absent. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and if the junior Senator from Maine were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. BLACK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and if the Senator from Maine were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. HARRISON. My colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness in his family. He is paired with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is necessarily absent from the city. If present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TYSON], the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. NORBECK. My colleague [Mr. MCMASTER] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea." He favors even more openness of Senate proceedings than that provided in the resolution.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 29, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 19) submitted by Mr. JONES May 6, 1929, to amend paragraph 2 of Rule XXXVIII relating to proceedings on nominations in executive session.

Mr. JONES. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 14, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, June 13, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father and our God, Thy blessed word is with us, "He that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." May we come, for Thou wilt hear. May we trust the events of Thy providence and understand that all good work is immortal. Not one wise word was ever lost; not one righteous prayer ever perished; not one pure enthusiasm ever failed; not one self-sacrifice ever came to naught. Impress us that there is no satisfaction comparable to the joy of appointed duty wisely performed, and that there is no regret like the consciousness of opportunities and gifts wasted and lost. Keep us in that pathway that leads to the temple of wisdom and knowledge, and evermore inspire us to grow the beautiful flowers of the soul. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution and bill of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution making appropriations toward carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1929; and

H. R. 3317. An act to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1452. An act to authorize the State of West Virginia to acquire a bridge over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek in said State, and to acquire the right to construct a bridge over said river at or near St. Albans in said State.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the approval of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries, with the amendment of the Senate thereto, insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa offers a motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported Mr. HAUGEN's motion.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the only issue involved at this time in respect to the farm relief bill is the debenture plan. The report of the conferees has been agreed to with the exception of that one provision. It is generally understood, and I shall not take up the time to discuss the debenture plan. The House is anxious that this matter be disposed of and have the matter go to conference in order that we may expedite the passage of the bill. I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. When will it be in order to move to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. After the passage of the motion and before the appointment of the conferees by the Chair. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. TILSON and Mr. JONES of Texas rose.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following preferential motion, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

By Mr. TILSON:

"Resolved, That the managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 1 be instructed in conference to insist on striking out of the Senate amendment section 10, the so-called debenture plan."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, a vote on the amendment I have offered will bring to a direct vote and a definite conclusion the controversy over the debenture plan, that is, as to whether it shall go into the bill or not. I believe that this is the most direct way and perhaps the only way that we can get this bill passed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 250, nays 113, answered "present" 2, not voting 65, as follows:

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I answered "no." The gentleman from Michigan, Mr. MICHENER, would have been present to-day and would have voted "aye" but for the fact he has a pair with me. I therefore withdraw my vote and answer "present."

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. KVALE, is unavoidably absent to-day. If he were present, he would have voted "no."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Colorado, Mr. TIMBERLAKE, is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "aye."

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BRAND of Georgia, is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "no." He is in favor of the debenture.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how did the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. NEWTON, vote?

The SPEAKER. He voted "yea."

Mr. GARNER. I did not understand it. I did not know he was here.

The SPEAKER. His resignation does not take effect until June 30.

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. I was temporarily out of the Chamber.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. TILSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the debenture clause was stricken out was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. HAUGEN, Mr. PURNELL, Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, Mr. ASWELL, and Mr. KINCHELOE.

FATALITIES IN PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by introducing two lists, one a list containing the names and circumstances in each case of persons killed or fatally injured by officers of the Bureau of Prohibition while acting in the discharge of their official duties, and the other a list of Federal prohibition officers who have been killed or fatally injured while actually engaged in their official duties, together with the attending circumstances, compiled from the date of the national prohibition act, January 16, 1920, to January 12, 1929. I have obtained the list from the Bureau of Prohibition.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from California asks unanimous consent to extend her remarks in the RECORD by printing lists of persons, including Federal officials, who have been killed or fatally injured in the enforcement of the prohibition law. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the lady from California if this includes assaults against Federal officials or only assaults by Federal officials?

Mrs. KAHN. It includes those killed or fatally injured. It is a list of fatalities on both sides. I obtained the list from the head of the Bureau of Prohibition, Doctor Doran.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does this include the immigration border patrol?

Mrs. KAHN. No. It includes the prohibition and narcotic administration officers.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Why is not the border patrol included?

Mrs. KAHN. That was not given to me by the Prohibition Department; and that is, of course, under another department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a list containing the names and circumstances in each case of persons killed or fatally injured by officers of the Bureau of Prohibition while acting in the discharge of their official duties, and also a list of Federal prohibition officers who have been killed or fatally injured while actually engaged in their official duties, together with the attending circumstances, compiled from the date of the national prohibition act, January 16, 1920, to January 12, 1929.

The matter is as follows:

LIST OF PROHIBITION AGENTS KILLED IN LINE OF DUTY, WHILE ACTUALLY ON RAIDS, FROM THE EFFECTIVE DATE OF THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT, JANUARY 16, 1920, TO JUNE 12, 1929, BY FISCAL YEAR

1920

W. D. Dorsey, prohibition agent, Georgia. Killed June 13, 1920, in White County, Ga. Agent Dorsey, assisted by one Ed Carpenter, proceeded on June 13, 1920, to execute a search warrant on the premises of one John Farmer, alleged to be operating an illicit still. During the search of the premises they were fired on by Farmer, who used a Winchester rifle, killing Dorsey. Carpenter returned the fire, resulting in both Farmer and Carpenter being seriously wounded. Farmer was taken in custody by the State authorities.

Kirby Frans, prohibition agent, Oklahoma. Fatally wounded November 19, 1920, at Perry, Okla. Died November 20, 1920. Agent Frans raided a moonshine still at Perry, Okla., on November 19, 1920, and during such raid was fired upon by an alleged moonshiner and suffered gunshot wounds which resulted in his death the following day, November 20, 1920.

Stafford E. Beckett, prohibition agent, Texas. Killed near El Paso, Tex., March 22, 1921. Agent Beckett, accompanied by Narcotic Agent Charles A. Wood and a number of other prohibition agents, proceeded on March 22, 1921, to the Sherman ranch for the purpose of executing a search warrant on the ranch. On the way there the party of officers met C. P. Sherman, the owner of the ranch, who accompanied the officers. Upon arrival at the ranch Sherman stepped behind a small building and fired upon the officers. At the same time a volley of shots came from various other points. The officers returned the fire, which continued for approximately two hours, resulting in the death of Prohibition Agent Stafford E. Beckett and Narcotic Agent C. A. Wood. The parties who attacked the officers were taken in custody by the State authorities and prosecuted on the charge of murder.

Jacob F. Green, prohibition agent, Mississippi. Killed March 1, 1921, near Richton, Miss. Agent Green, assisted by a local officer, while raiding a moonshine still, was fired upon and Agent Green received a gunshot wound which mangled his head. The parties implicated in the attack on the officers were taken in custody by the State authorities and prosecuted on the charge of murder.

Richard Griffin, prohibition agent, Alabama. Killed December 6, 1920, near Gadsden, Ala. Agent Griffin, accompanied by another prohibition agent and one Jock Horten, on December 6, 1920, took in custody alleged moonshiners in the vicinity of Gadsden, St. Clair County, Ala. The parties who had been taken in custody attacked the officers, resulting in Agent Griffin being fatally injured from a gunshot wound which resulted in his death while en route to a hospital. The parties who attacked the officers were taken in custody by the State authorities and prosecuted on the charge of murder.

R. W. Jackson, prohibition agent, Georgia. Killed December 16, 1920, in Taylor County, Ga. Agent Jackson, accompanied by two other prohibition agents, raided a still in Taylor County, Ga., on December 16, 1920. The parties found at the still were taken in custody. While proceeding with the prisoners to jail the officers were attacked by the owner of the premises where the still was located and certain other parties. The officers returned the fire, Agent Jackson being fatally wounded. He died one and one-half hours later. It is the opinion of the officers that two of the attacking party were also killed.

J. H. Rose, prohibition agent, North Carolina. Killed October 25, 1920, near Asheville, N. C. Agent Rose, while participating in a raid in Swain County, N. C., on October 25, 1920, was attacked and killed by alleged moonshiners.

Irby U. Scruggs, prohibition agent, Tennessee. Fatally wounded April 30, 1921, in Knox County, Tenn. While returning from a raid. Agent Scruggs ordered Deputy Sheriff Robert Fuller, of Knox County, Tenn., not to drink any of the liquor that had been seized by them. Thereupon Fuller became enraged and fired on Prohibition Agent Scruggs. Agent Scruggs returned the fire, killing Fuller. Agent Scruggs himself died shortly afterwards from his wounds.

Ernest W. Walker, prohibition agent, Texas. Fatally wounded March 2, 1921, on the Mexican border, Texas, and died from the wound on March 5, 1921. Agent Walker, together with a number of other prohibition agents, was engaged in a gun fight with Mexican liquor smugglers near the international line March 2, 1921. During the fight Agent Walker was fatally wounded and died on March 5, 1921. Three Mexicans were taken in custody by the State authorities in connection with this matter, but the grand jury failed to return an indictment and they were released.

John Watson, prohibition agent, New Mexico. Fatally wounded April 30, 1921, near Anthony, N. Mex., and died from his wounds on May 3, 1921. Agent Walker, accompanied by another prohibition agent, attempted to arrest some alleged bootleggers near Anthony, N. Mex., on the night of April 30, 1921. The officers were fired upon by the alleged bootleggers, resulting in the fatal wounding of Agent Watson.

Stanton E. Weiss, prohibition agent, Oklahoma. Killed October 28, 1920, near Oklahoma City, Okla. Agent Weiss, accompanied by another prohibition agent and State officers, raided an illicit still on the premises of one Charles Chandler near Oklahoma City. While engaged on this raid the officers were attacked, which resulted in a gun fight between the officers and the attacking parties. During the fight Agent Weiss, Deputy Sheriff Adrain, and Charley Chandler were killed. One of the officers was seriously wounded and one of the attacking party. The attacking parties were negroes and the one who was wounded was taken in custody by the local authorities and shortly thereafter forcibly released from jail and lynched by unknown persons.

Joseph W. Floyd, prohibition agent, Texas. Fatally wounded May 17, 1922, near Houston, Tex. Died same date. Prohibition Agent Floyd, with another prohibition agent, apprehended a truck leaving a premises with a load of liquor. They attempted to place the two men on the truck under arrest. The men resisted and fired on the officers, shooting Agent Floyd. The premises from which the truck had been driven was searched and a quantity of narcotics was found in the house. All parties found on the premises were taken in custody. The party who shot Agent Floyd was prosecuted on the charge of murder while the others were prosecuted on various Federal charges.

Charles E. Howell, prohibition agent, Alabama. Killed July 17, 1921, in Limestone County, Ala. Agent Howell was arranging for transportation for himself and party back to Decatur after a raid when suddenly he was attacked and shot down by parties from ambush. A number of parties were taken in custody on the charge of conspiracy. However, the parties who actually did the shooting escaped.

Jesse R. Johnson, prohibition agent, Arkansas. Fatally wounded November 20, 1921, in Saline County, Ark. Died November 21, 1921. Agent Johnson, accompanied by a number of other agents, had raided a number of premises in Saline County, Ark., and while placing under arrest certain parties who had just made a sale of liquor to the officers, Agent Johnson was shot and fatally wounded from ambush by one Orin Ray. Ray surrended to the State authorities and confessed that he had shot Agent Johnson. Agent Johnson died the next day, November 21, 1921, at St. Vincent's Hospital, Little Rock, Ark.

John O'Toole, prohibition agent, California. Fatally injured January 26, 1922, San Francisco, Calif. Died February 17, 1922. Agent O'Toole, accompanied by another agent, attempted on January 26, 1922, to take in custody two parties in an automobile on the charge of transporting liquor. One of the parties in the car pushed Agent O'Toole off the running board in such a way that the car ran over him. He died from his injuries on February 17, 1922. The party who was responsible for the fatal injury of Agent O'Toole was taken in custody by the State authorities on the charge of manslaughter.

J. H. Reynolds, prohibition agent, Kentucky. Killed August 26, 1921, in Johnson County, Ky. Agent Reynolds, accompanied by other officers, had raided a number of moonshine stills on State Branch in Johnson County, Ky., when the officers were fired upon by parties who were concealed. In the fusillade of shots Agent Reynolds was shot down, dying immediately. The parties who fired the shots, except one, were taken in custody by the State authorities.

Robert G. Anderson, warehouse agent, Indiana. Killed April 16, 1923, at Hammond, Ind. Agent Anderson was on duty at the Hammond Distillery, Hammond, Ind., on the night of April 16, 1923, when bandits entered the distillery to carry away liquor. In attempting to defend the premises from the bandits, Agent Anderson was shot down and killed.

Atha Carter, prohibition agent, Nevada. Fatally wounded December 19, 1922, near Palisade, Nev. Died December 24, 1922. Agent Carter, accompanied by other officers, was searching for a still on the Reine Ranch near Palisade, Nev., when the officers were fired upon from ambush, resulting in the fatal wounding of Agent Carter. The parties who attacked the officers were taken in custody by the State authorities and prosecuted on the charge of murder.

E. Guy Cole, prohibition agent, Kentucky. Killed December 15, 1922, near Lexington, Ky. Agent Cole, accompanied by other officers, while raiding moonshine stills near Lexington, Ky., approached a house occupied by alleged moonshiners. The parties in the house fired upon the officers, killing Agent Cole instantly and the accompanying agents ran for cover. One of the two parties who fired on the officers was killed and the other was wounded and later taken in custody by the State authorities on the charge of murder.

Robert E. Duff, prohibition agent, Kentucky. Killed December 9, 1922, in Manifee County, Ky. Agent Duff, accompanied by other officers, while engaged in searching for a still on the East Ford of State Branch, Manifee County, Ky., located a log house in which it was believed a still was located. While battering down the door of the log house after the odor of mash had been detected, the door opened and a volley of shots was fired from within, causing the immediate death of Agent Duff. When the body was recovered, his rifle, pistol, pocket commission, No. 8884, and all valuables were missing.

Howard H. Fisher, prohibition agent, Virginia. Fatally wounded July 22, 1922, at Titustown, Va. Died the same date. Agent Fisher, accompanied by Prohibition Agent Gary Freeman, was executing a search warrant on the premises of one James Chambers at Titustown, Va. While the officers were engaged in this search Chambers attacked and fatally wounded both Agents Fisher and Freeman. Agent Fisher died the same date he was wounded shortly after he had reached a hospital.

Gary D. Freeman, prohibition agent, Virginia. Fatally wounded July 22, 1922, at Titustown, Va. Died the same date. Agent Freeman, accompanied by Prohibition Agent Howard Fisher, was executing a search warrant on the premises of one James Chambers at Titustown, Va. While the officers were engaged in this search Chambers attacked and fatally wounded both Agents Freeman and Fisher. Agent Freeman died the same date he was wounded shortly after he had reached a hospital.

Howell J. Lynch, prohibition agent, Tennessee. Killed July 6, 1922, at Gainesboro, Tenn. Agent Lynch, accompanied by a deputy sheriff, had raided a still near Gainesboro, Tenn., when the officers were fired on from ambush and Agent Lynch killed. It is believed that a moonshiner whose still had been raided fired the shots.

Glen H. Price, prohibition agent, Oregon. Killed September 3, 1922, at New Grand Ronde, Oreg. Agent Price, accompanied by Prohibition Agent Grover C. Todd, attempted to take in custody one Phillip Warren, an Indian bootlegger in New Grand Ronde, Oreg. Warren escaped from the officers, obtained a rifle and fired, killing both Agents Price and Todd. He was taken in custody by the State authorities on the charge of murder.

Joseph P. Owen, prohibition agent, Mississippi. Fatally wounded August 22, 1922, near Kosciusko, Miss. Died September 6, 1922. Agent Owen, accompanied by other officers, raided an illicit still near Kosciusko, Leake County, Miss. While engaged in this raid the officers were fired upon and Agent Owen was fatally wounded. The parties who attacked the officers were taken in custody and convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary.

Charles C. Sterner, prohibition agent, Missouri. Fatally wounded June 18, 1923, near St. Louis Mo. Died June 25, 1923. Agent Sterner, accompanied by a number of other officers, was searching the premises of the Sharpshooters Park and Club near St. Louis Mo. During the search a shot was fired from one of the buildings, striking Agent Sterner and fatally wounding him. He died as a result of this wound June 25, 1923. A number of parties found on the premises were taken in custody, but those implicated in the shooting escaped.

Grover C. Todd, prohibition agent, Oregon. Killed September 3, 1922, at New Grand Ronde, Oreg. Agent Todd, accompanied by Prohibition Agent Glen H. Price, attempted to take in custody one Phillip Warren, an Indian bootlegger in New Grand Ronde, Oreg. Warren escaped from the officers, obtained a rifle and fired, killing both Agents Todd and Price. He was taken in custody by the State authorities on the charge of murder.

John V. Waters, prohibition agent, Florida. Killed October 5, 1922, near Dade City, Fla. Agent Waters left Dade City, Fla., for the purpose of searching a near-by farm. His body was found in an automobile on the road, near the farm, riddled with bullets. The "Overstreet gang" was charged with his murder and indicted.

J. Leroy Youmans, prohibition agent, South Carolina. Killed April 3, 1923, near Hartsville, S. C. Agent Youmans, together with a number of other officers, was in the vicinity of a still observing those operating it preparatory to taking in custody the operators when the operators detected the presence of the officers. Agent Youmans rose to a standing position to be prepared to arrest the man. The white man turned a flash light full on Agent Youmans, holding the light in one hand, he immediately fired the revolver which he carried in the other hand. The bullet went entirely through his body, Agent Youmans dying in about 10 minutes.

Willie B. Saylor, prohibition agent, Kentucky. Fatally wounded February 23, 1924, near Pineville, Ky.; died February 24, 1924. Agent Saylor, while en route to Pineville, Ky., with a number of prisoners he had taken in custody, arrested one Lloyd Littrell on the charge of possessing and transporting liquor. Bill Littrell, father of the prisoner, and John Littrell came down the pike in a car, blocked the passage of the agents' cars, and demanded the prisoner's release. Agent Saylor refused to release the prisoner and the two parties and the prisoner then attacked the agent. Agent Saylor was fatally wounded in this encounter and died on February 24, 1924. Bill Littrell was also killed and Lloyd and John Littrell were wounded.

George H. Stewart, prohibition agent, New York. Killed November 11, 1923. Agent Stewart entered a cafe at Buffalo, N. Y., where he purchased some liquor. Upon leaving the place he was followed by several parties and to defend himself he pulled his gun, whereupon he was fired upon from the rear, being killed instantly. The party who fired the fatal shots escaped.

James E. Bowdoin, prohibition agent, Florida. Killed February 16, 1925, near Caryville, Fla. Agent Bowdoin, accompanied by other officers, while searching for an illicit still near Hewett Berry Landing on the Choctawhatchie River near Caryville, Fla., discovered a Ford car where he stationed the other officers, and he continued to the river landing where he seized a 10-gallon keg of liquor on a barge anchored there. Soon after he had seized the liquor, three parties approached the barge in a boat. These parties and Agent Bowdoin fired at each other resulting in Agent Bowdoin being killed. One Houston Harris was also killed, a Harvey Walker was shot and seriously injured, and Sumpter Harris's leg was broken. Sumpter Harris, who shot Agent Bowdoin, was taken in custody by the State authorities on the charge of murder.

Daniel S. Cleveland, prohibition agent, Mississippi. Killed July 10, 1924, near Meridian, Miss. Agent Cleveland and a deputy sheriff approached a still that had previously been located for the purpose of destroying the same by dynamiting it. A short distance from the still the officers were fired upon and Agent Cleveland was killed. One of the parties who attacked the officers was wounded by the sheriff. The parties who attacked the officers were taken in custody by the State authorities and one of them was convicted on the charge of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment.

William E. Collins, prohibition agent, Louisiana. Killed March 6, 1925, near Vinton, La. Agent Collins and a deputy sheriff raided a moonshiner's premises near Vinton, La., and while engaged in this raid both officers were killed. An investigation disclosed that their revolvers had not been fired, and they had apparently been surprised by the attacking party. The parties charged with the murder of the officers were taken in custody and prosecuted.

M. M. Day, prohibition agent, West Virginia. Killed February 14, 1925, near Welch, W. Va. Prohibition Agent Day, accompanied by other prohibition agents, searched the premises of a negro moonshiner near Welch. While the search was in progress the negro, Jim Sneed, ran into the house and on returning fired on the officers, killing Agent Day. Then followed a gun battle between the other officers and Sneed, resulting in the death of Sneed.

William Frank Porter, prohibition agent, West Virginia. Killed June 20, 1925, at Camp Creek, W. Va. Prohibition Agent Porter, together with other prohibition agents, was observing the operations of a still in the early morning, and while thus engaged a party of local officers came up and, mistaking the prohibition agents for moonshiners, opened fire. Agent Porter was killed and one of the officers with Agent Porter was wounded, and one of the local officers was fatally wounded.

Remus W. Buckner, prohibition agent, Alabama. Fatally wounded May 10, 1926, near Springville, Ala. Died May 12, 1926. Agent Buckner, accompanied by some county officers, raided a moonshine still located in a woods near Springville, Blount County, Ala. Eight men were seen at the still as the officers approached. The officers separated in order to capture any of the men who might attempt to escape. One of the men ran from the still, concealed himself behind a tree, and as Agent Buckner passed in the immediate vicinity shot and fatally wounded the agent. Agent Buckner died from his wound May 12, 1926.

V. E. Grant, prohibition agent, North Carolina. Fatally wounded June 1, 1926, near Hendersonville, N. C. Died same date. Agent Grant and another prohibition agent attempted to overtake another automobile believed to be transporting liquor. As the officers passed the car believed to be transporting, the occupants of the same fired, some of the shots striking Agent Grant. Agent Grant died shortly thereafter on the way to the hospital the same day, June 1, 1926.

Thomas B. Lankford, prohibition agent, Illinois. Fatally wounded May 25, 1926, Springfield, Ill. Died May 26, 1926. Agent Lankford was assigned to guard a large still that had been seized at Springfield. An automobile drove up which appeared to contain liquor, and Agent Lankford attempted to search the same and while doing so he was fired on by the occupants of the car and was fatally wounded, dying the next day, May 26, 1926.

John M. Mulcahy, prohibition agent, Massachusetts. Fatally wounded September 2, 1925, at Flushing Point, Westford, Mass. Died September 3, 1925. Agent Mulcahy, accompanied by a number of State officers, was attempting to search premises where it was believed smuggled liquor was stored. Shots were fired from inside the house, and Agent Mulcahy was fatally wounded, dying the following day, September 3, 1925.

Charles Bintliff, prohibition agent, South Dakota. On the morning of May 13, 1927, Prohibition Agent Charles Bintliff (or Bintleff), while assisting in the apprehension of one Walter Chrisman, was shot and killed by him. The shooting of Agent Bintliff took place near the barn on the Walter Chrisman farm, 7 miles east of Redfield, S. Dak. Agent Bintliff died instantly. Practically at the same time a deputy State sheriff, who was with Bintliff, was also killed by the same offender. Chrisman on May 7, 1927, shot and wounded Agent R. W. Labrie (necessitating the amputation of his left arm) while he was about to arrest Mr. Chrisman on a charge of illegal selling of intoxicating liquors.

Jacob P. Brandt, prohibition agent, Florida. Killed December 9, 1926. Agent Brandt, accompanied by another prohibition agent, visited the home of one J. W. Buchanan, alleged prohibition violator, near the town of Perry, Taylor County, Fla., for the purpose of making a purchase of liquor upon which to base the issuance of a search warrant. It appears, from what can be learned of this occurrence, that Buchanan went outside of the house and talked to the officers as they approached the premises. He then ran into the house and secured a revolver and shotgun, opening fire on the officers and killing them. Agent Brandt died instantly December 9, 1926.

Walter C. Mobray, prohibition agent, Florida. Killed December 9, 1926. Agent Mobray, with another prohibition agent, visited the home of one J. W. Buchanan, alleged prohibition violator, near the town of Perry, Taylor County, Fla., for the purpose of making a purchase of liquor upon which to base the issuance of a search warrant. It appears, from what can be learned of this occurrence, that Buchanan went outside of the house and talked to the officers as they approached the premises. He then ran into the house and secured a revolver and shotgun, opening fire on the officers and killing them. Agent Bobray died instantly December 9, 1926.

Charles C. Rouse, prohibition investigator, Maryland. On the night of June 7, 1927, having information that a car bearing license number, Maryland 85939, loaded every night at midnight in Wayson Alley, Baltimore, Investigator Charles C. Rouse, Agent Jackson, and George P. Busch, assistant administrator, proceeded to this vicinity. About 12.30, June 8, while driving east in Hager Street, Rouse and Jackson saw a car parked in Wayson Alley. Stopping their car, they ran a short distance down Wayson Alley to where the car was drawn up alongside a garage, which was attached directly to the house on the corner of Wayson Alley and Hager Street, No. 1107. Two men were in the act of unloading materials from the car into the garage. After revealing their identity, Agent Jackson seized one of the men and Busch held to the other. At this time Rouse said, "Wait a minute," and Busch turned in time to see him enter the garage door. A light was shining out through the rear door of the house, which led directly into the garage, and there were shadows of persons on the wall cast by the reflection of the light. At the same instant that Rouse entered three shots were fired in quick succession. Busch saw flashes from the gun which appeared to be pointed directly at the garage entrance. Four or five more shots were fired, and Rouse called to Busch, and two more shots were fired as Busch entered the garage door. Rouse called, "For God's sake, Mr. Busch, come here; they got me." Busch found Mr. Rouse in the rear of the garage, slightly bent forward, with his hands pressed to his stomach. He was rushed to Mercy Hospital and received immediate treatment. The bullet was not located and peritonitis set in, and he died at 11.20 a. m., June 12. Jackson took his prisoner to the police station, and police assisted in a search for the slayers, but the men who did the shooting have not been apprehended, consequently no action has been taken in the courts.

George H. Wentworth, prohibition agent, California. Fatally injured November 23, 1926, near Berkeley, Calif. Died the next morning, November 24, 1926. Agent Wentworth, accompanied by another prohibition agent, arrested a violator, one Burrill Morris, in the act of delivering a load of liquor in Berkeley, Calif. They started for the police station in the agents' car, with Agent Wentworth driving and the other agent seated on the other side of Morris, who was thus between the two agents. After going some distance Morris placed his gun at Wentworth's side and commanded him to stop the car. When Wentworth did not comply. Morris shot him through the right side, the bullet passing through his stomach and out of the left side. Although wounded, Agent Wentworth pulled his gun and shot Morris through the heart, killing him instantly. Both men were taken to the Berkeley General hospital, where Agent Wentworth died the following morning, November 24, 1926.

James C. Capen, prohibition officer, Wyoming. On May 10, 1928, Agent Capen, assisted by Percy Epperson, went to the ranch of Mike Soytik, near Cumberland, Wyo. They found a still on the isolated ranch on Little Muddy Creek and destroyed it. Soytik was placed under arrest. He asked permission to get his hat and coat, and when he reappeared he had a rifle and shot Agent Capen in the abdomen. Epperson and Soytik then engaged in a duel, in which the officer sent six shots into the body of his opponent. Epperson then took the two wounded men in Capen's car and started for the hospital at Kemmerer, Wyo. Both of these men died just as they were being carried into the hospital.

Warren Frahm, prohibition agent, New York. On June 18, 1928, Agent Frahm, accompanied by Marvin Barnes, a reliable chauffeur, drove out on the Chateaugay-Brainardsville Highway about one-half mile north of Brainardsville in the town of Belmont, Franklin County, N. Y., to investigate the rum running on that road which was reported to be taking place after midnight. About 3 a. m. they started to return to Malone, without having seen any rum runners. At this time Frahm was driving his own car and Barnes the one owned by the Government, when they met two loaded cars driving at a high rate of speed and without lights. Barnes turned and followed one of the cars, which turned down a country road, and after a chase of two or three miles found the car mired in a barnyard, the driver having escaped. Frahm followed the other car. Indications are that Frahm attempted to pass the loaded car and was crowded off the road. His body was found about 200 feet from his car, which had turned turtle, rolling over two or three times. An autopsy revealed two vertebræ of the neck broken, an abdominal rupture, internal injuries sufficient to cause death, and three of his lower ribs were crushed. The owners of the cars and drivers were ascertained.

Wesley A. Frazer, prohibition agent, Minnesota. On December 9, 1927, Agent Wesley A. Frazer and Agent Carl E. Olson made an investigation at 1408 Fifth Avenue South, South St. Paul, Minn. Through the basement door they could see a still and several barrels of mash, and distilling paraphernalia. Three violators were arrested, Sam Cimin, Pedro Francisco, and Sam Nondy, and taken to St. Paul for interrogation. On January 2 Agent Frazer accompanied by men from the Star Trading Co. went to the premises to finish taking away the seized property. Gulop Nickolich, the owner of the premises, was not at home, so the keys were not available, but Mrs. Nickolich said they could enter through a basement window. While they were working, loading some coke into the truck which they had backed up to the window, Nickolich approached with two men in a Ford coupé. He got out of the coupé and approached the truck. Passing the driver, he knelt on the ground by the window and fired two shots. He then made an attempt to shoot the driver, but was prevented by one of the men with him. Frazer, who was in the basement, was found struggling to crawl out of the window. He died on the way to the hospital. One shot had pierced his heart and the other his left wrist. The coroner's jury returned a verdict charging Gulop Nickolich with murder in the first degree.

W. T. Lewis, prohibition agent, North Carolina. On the morning of July 11, 1927, Deputy Administrator McDuffie with Prohibition Agents A. M. Beck, J. B. Rosser, W. T. Lewis, and C. W. Lineberger, a military policeman from Fort Bragg, N. C., left Fayetteville, N. C., with two automobiles as had been previously arranged by Lewis with Andrew Purefoy, the bootlegger from whom the purchase of 500 gallons of liquor was to be made. On arriving at Kinston, N. C., Lewis and Lineberger took the two cars, leaving the other agents just outside of Kinston. Following instructions, Lewis and Lineberger drove to Fort Barnwell, N. C., and parked their cars across from Luby Sauls filling station. Sauls directed them to drive to the rear of the station and stated that the men they wanted to see would soon be there. Soon Luther Sermons came up and inspected their cars, drove away, and returned in 15 minutes with his brother, Virgil Sermons, and Will Chapman, a negro. Virgil Sermons and Chapman took the agents' cars and drove away, and Luther Sermons asked Lewis and Lineberger to ride with him in his Dodge coupé. He took them toward New Bern for about 3 miles and then drove to the right over an old road about 2 miles. Soon the agents' cars came up loaded, and Lewis asked whom he should pay. Luther Sermons said he was the man. Lewis gave him a $20 bill and then both he and Lineberger informed the men that they were Federal officers and for them to consider themselves under arrest. Two shots were fired behind Lewis, one of them striking Virgil Sermons. At the time, Luther Sermons knocked the pistol from Lewis's hand and in the scuffle Lewis could not recover it. Lee Sermons, carrying a gun, came from a near-by house when he heard the shots. Lineberger gave chase to the negro, Chapman, who escaped and Lineberger was not seen again until the following morning. The men took Lewis's money and asked him to leave. He said, "If I leave you will shoot me." Luther Sermons replied that if he went immediately they would not shoot. Lewis started right away and two shots were fired striking him in the back. He managed to get to a farmer's house near by, and was taken to the Memorial General Hospital at Kinston, N. C., where he died on the morning of July 15, 1927.

George Nantz, prohibition agent, Kentucky. On the night of July 19, 1927, about 8.30 p. m., Agent George Nantz and Warren Scoville, sheriff of Laurel County, Ky., United States Marshal Berry Little, and Sam Morgan, deputy sheriff of Laurel County, went by automobile to Walnut Grove Camp, which is located about 300 yards from the Laurel County line, in Rockcastle County, Ky., on the Dixie Highway, and about 100 yards from the Rockcastle River. This camp had been complained of many times during the previous month because it was frequented by a bunch of undesirables and whisky had been received from persons living in that vicinity. When Agent Nantz and his posse arrived at the camp they proceeded to walk around to observe conditions, but when they entered the camp they were met by several men and a woman, all armed. The pistols were pointed at the officers and they were ordered to leave. Seeing they were outnumbered and not wishing to have trouble, the officers left and went back to London, Ky. The following morning, July 20, 1927, Agent Nantz procured a search warrant for the camp and also warrants for the arrest of Viola Oaks, Clarence Maddox, Alex Jones, and August Mullins, who were in the crowd that threatened them the night before. Going back to the camp they immediately arrested Viola Oaks, Pauline Hedrick, Alex Jones, and Esco Loy, and attempted to arrest Clarence Maddox. Maddox backed around a corner of the house and ran with his pistol in his hands, pursued by Agent Nantz, Sam Morgan, and B. L. Little. Maddox fired two shots over his shoulder as he ran and Nantz fired a shotgun. Another shot was fired by Maddox, which hit Agent Nantz in the right temple, causing instant death. Maddox was finally captured, his pistol containing three empty shells. All the prisoners were taken to London, Ky., and placed in jail awaiting examining trials on Federal charges.

They will also be turned over to State authorities for prosecution in State court.

Walter R. Tolbert, prohibition agent, Georgia. On the morning of February 22, 1928, Agent Walter R. Tolbert, accompanied by Policemen W. S. Harrison, jr., and D. T. Fuller, of Harlem, Columbia County, Ga., raided a distillery about 5 miles south of Harlem. Men working at the still saw Tolbert approach and made their escape, so that when Tolbert and the other officers returned to the site the operators had abandoned it. After destroying the distillery the agents started to return by another road. They reached a point about a mile from the distillery when they were fired upon from ambush. Agent Tolbert had Harrison stop the car, and as he, Tolbert, stepped on the running board preparatory to getting out to investigate the shooting, a ball from a rifle struck him, penetrating his heart and entire body. He died almost instantly. Six suspects were placed in jail, and one, Burley Adams, confessed to having killed Agent Tolbert, though he had meant to kill W. S. Harrison, sr., a county officer.

Ludwig Johnson, prohibition agent, Washington. On the night of July 25 Agents Ludwig Johnson, Arthur Means, and Gerald Church went out near Leavenworth, Wash., to locate a still which had been reported. About 11 p. m., while proceeding along a trail which is densely wooded the agents came upon a new Ford car parked, which they supposed belonged to the moonshiners. Agent Johnson stayed near the car and Agents Means and Church proceeded along the trail toward the still. They saw two men approaching, whom they thought were moonshiners but who were, in reality, the Chelan County sheriff and his deputy. The parked car belonged to the sheriff, and as they approached the car Agent Johnson announced loudly his identity, stating that he was a Federal prohibition agent, and commanded the men to halt; but the sheriff thought that Johnson was the moonshiner who had escaped from the still and kept on coming and grabbed for Johnson's gun. Agent Johnson believed that he was being attacked by the moonshiner, as he could determine that they were carrying parts of a still, and fired his gun apparently in the ground. The sheriff thereupon fired several shots at a distance of a foot or two into the body of Johnson. The deputy and Agents Means and Church joined in the shooting. Before the various officers had discovered the identity of the others Johnson had been seriously wounded. The sheriff and deputy received slight wounds. Agent Johnson died after an operation made in desperate attempt to save his life. No blame was attached to the actions of the Federal prohibition agents.

Irving Washburn, prohibition agent, New York. Prohibition Agent Washburn was shot when he invaded the Madison Avenue resort section with Wilfred Grisson, another officer, after having been warned not to do so. The shooting began at 2.30 the morning of July 13, 1928, after the arrest of Joseph Skepse in an automobile in that section. Before Washburn died he identified Barver Zulo, alleged proprietor of a soft-drink parlor from which the assailant is said to have emerged, as the man who shot him.

John Nicola, prohibition agent, Maryland. Fatally injured October 4, 1928, near Baltimore, Md. Agent Nicola, accompanied by Agents Nathaniel W. Bowes and John T. Weigel, with an unidentified prisoner, were proceeding east on the Baltimore Boulevard, when they observed a high-powered gray coupé, apparently loaded with liquor, driving west. The agents turned about and gave chase. The gray coupé came to a complete stop near the intersection of Ridge and Selma Avenues. In an attempt to avoid a collision Agent Nicola swerved suddenly to the left. A gutter depression caused the Cadillac to turn a complete somersault. Agent Nicola was caught under the steering wheel, terribly mangled. Agents Bowes and Weigel also received injuries. A man in a gray coupé volunteered to rush Agent Nicola to St. Agnes's Hospital, where he died as they were taking him to the operating room.

Patrick Sharpe, prohibition agent, Texas. Asphyxiated December 6, 1928, near Houston, Tex. Agent Sharpe, accompanied by L. P. Gillespie, James Fisch, and Prohibition Deputy Victor J. Buthod, went to the Vito Caruso farm, about 8 miles north of Houston, in Harris County, Tex., to search for a still. Agent Sharpe discovered a camouflaged trapdoor in the barn and upon opening it could see distilling apparatus in the room below. He descended the ladder and before Deputy Buthod could make the descent Agent Sharpe was overcome by gas fumes and all efforts to resuscitate him failed. Deputy Buthod was rendered unconscious, but later recovered.

NARCOTIC ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS WHO HAVE BEEN KILLED OR FATALLY INJURED WHILE ACTUALLY ON RAIDS, FROM THE EFFECTIVE DATE OF THE NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT, JANUARY 16, 1920, TO JUNE 12, 1929, BY FISCAL YEARS

Charles A. Wood, 1921

Facts of the case: On March 22, 1921, Narcotic Agent Charles A. Wood and Prohibition Agent Beckett, having information that a large quantity of whisky was being delivered by smugglers at the Shearman ranch 5 miles east of El Paso, Tex., procured a search warrant, and with Prohibition Agents Parker, McClure, Guinn, Giere, Quirk, Raithall, and Ornelas, proceeded to the ranch and on the way met C. P. Shearman, the owner, who insisted upon returning with them. Upon arriving at the premises, Shearman disengaged himself from the crowd, stepped behind a small building, and fired a shotgun in the direction of Agents Wood and Beckett, which was immediately followed by a volley of 20 to 50 shots from various points. The agents immediately took to cover and continued the gun fire for about two hours. Finally, Agents Guinn and Parker escaped, returned with reinforcements and found the combatants had disappeared, and it was at this time that the bodies of Agents Wood and Beckett were found riddled with gunshot.

Disposition of the case: Five of the principal parties in the battle, including all the Shearmans, have been indicted by the State grand jury for murder.

James T. Williams

Facts of the case: On October 15, 1924, Narcotic Agent Williams in company with Agent George Howard, halted and started to search one James Beck, a negro, known both as an addict and peddler of "dope." The negro resisted the agents and in the struggle managed to snatch the revolver from Howard's holster. Howard tried to hold his arms and throw him to the ground, but he fired one shot which entered Williams' forehead. Williams died at 3.30 a. m., October 16, 1924, the following day, at Lakeside Hospital, Chicago, Ill.

James E. Brown

Facts of the case: On June 7, 1928, James E. Brown went to a ranch house near Isleton, Calif., to search for narcotics. He arrested two Chinese, Ah Wong and Wong Toy, handcuffing Wong Toy and tying the hands of Ah Wong. After searching the premises he gathered up a quantity of narcotics found therein and a Luger automatic pistol which he had taken from the defendant Ah Wong. He left the two prisoners sitting in a room in the ranch house while he placed the narcotics and the pistol in his car outside the house. During his absence Ah Wong worked his hands round to the front of him and opened a small drawer in a table and secured a .38 Remington automatic pistol. As Agent Brown was about to enter the room, Ah Wong fired at him, the shot taking effect in the chest. Brown fell and Ah Wong fired three more shots, two of which took effect in the abdomen, and the other grazed the leg just above the ankle. This was about 5 p. m., on June 7, 1928.

1920

Ernest E. Emily

Facts of the case: On the night of May 23, 1920, Prohibition Agents John C. Montgomery and William C. Vest located a car that was dispensing liquor to Indians and others in West Forks, Wash., but were unable to apprehend the driver, who tried to run down the agents each time they tried to stop the car. The agents shot at the tires and after a short distance the car stopped and the agents found that the driver, Ernest E. Emily, was mortally wounded.

Disposition of the case: Coroner's jury on May 26, 1920, brought in a verdict of murder against the two agents and the sheriff of Ferry County. The charge against the sheriff was dismissed and that against the agents reduced to manslaughter. Montgomery was acquitted April 21, 1921, and Vest was acquitted in October, 1921.

Horace Brown

Facts of the case: On December 20, 1920, Prohibition Agents L. W. Gerth and F. T. Rose, in company with Charles Carr and John Saunders, chauffeurs, pursued Philip Butler, James Butler, Clarence Butler, Flora Butler, Mattie Butler, and Horace Brown, who were endeavoring to make their escape after having been arrested by the above-mentioned prohibition agents for violation of the national prohibition act. As the agents' car was about to overtake the Butler machine Philip Butler fired three times. One of the shots struck Agent Gerth under the eye, another struck him in the back, and the third hit the car. After Philip Butler began firing Agent Gerth commenced shooting at the automobile and hit the tires of Butler's automobile, and one of the said shots struck Horace Brown, resulting in his death.

Disposition of the case: Indicted March 4, 1921, Circuit Court of Baltimore County, Md., for manslaughter. Case removed to United States District Court April 21, 1921. Verdict of not guilty returned January 6, 1922.

Robert Fuller

Facts of the case: While returning from a raid April 30, 1921, participated in by Agents Scruggs and Robert Fuller, deputy sheriff for Knox County, an altercation between the two men occurred, and the shooting resulted from order given Fuller by Scruggs to the effect that Fuller should not drink any of the seized whisky and that he should put up a gun which he had in his lap. It appears that Fuller became enraged and shot Scruggs, whereupon Scruggs fired back, killing Fuller instantly. Scruggs himself died on the operating table a few hours later at Knox County, Tenn.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted.

Johnnie Garrett

Facts of the case: On December 16, 1920, Agent R. W. Jackson, in company with Agents English and Causey, conducted a raid in Taylor County, Ga., upon the premises of Napoleon Garrett. After destroying the still, C. M. Wadsworth and two negroes were placed under arrest. As they were conducting the prisoners to jail they were set upon by Napoleon and Johnnie Garrett and several other white men, who began firing with pistols and forced the officers to release their prisoners. Agents returned the fire and during the battle Agent Jackson was mortally wounded and died one and one-half hours later. Johnnie Garrett was instantly killed and Napoleon Garrett seriously wounded.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted against the agents.

R. W. Hedderly

Facts of the case: On September 10, 1920, Prohibition Agent Delason C. Smith, Narcotic Agents William R. Wood and James J. Biggins, and Police Officers William D. Morris and Jackson, while attempting to apprehend and arrest R. W. Hedderly and one George Lewis, bootleggers, killed the said Hedderly while he was attempting to evade arrest by escaping in an automobile.

Disposition of the case: Indicted for manslaughter in State court. Tried at Portland, March 7, 1921, Biggins being acquitted, and the case against the other officers dismissed.

Bud Riley

Facts of the case: On March 28, 1921, Prohibition Agent Delford David Dougherty, with three police officers, started for the farm of Bud Riley in Greene County, Okla., for the purpose of searching for a still. They stopped a car on the way to inquire the location of the premises. The occupant of the car chanced to be Bud Riley, and he raised a gun and fired at one of the police officers, who fell to the ground as the shot passed over him. Agent Dougherty and Claude Hines, a police officer, simultaneously shot and killed Riley.

Disposition of the case: Indicted for murder. At close of second day of trial, November 28, 1921, the presiding judge instructed the jury to bring in a verdict of not guilty.

Louis Vokivich

Facts of the case: On the night of November 6, 1920, Prohibition Agent Glenn S. Young, in company with police officers of Granite City, Ill., raided a house in Madison, Ill., finding a still, some mash, and a small quantity of whisky. Agent Young learned that Louis Vokivich, who lived in the adjoining house, was a relative of the person he had raided, and, suspecting there might be some liquor in the house of Vokivich, he took a police officer with him and made an investigation of Vokivich's house. He claims he saw Vokivich drinking from a bottle as he passed a window, but when he asked admission he received no response. He and the policeman forced an entrance and found a 25-gallon keg of moonshine whisky. Vokivich pointed a pistol at Young and snapped it several times, but it failed to explode, and Agent Young fired several times in self-defense, killing Vokivich.

Disposition of the case: Indicted for murder. Acquitted June 10, 1921.

Ward Adkins

Facts of the case: In August, 1921, in Lincoln County, W. Va., while in the performance of their official duties, Prohibition Agents Raymond A. Miller and Henry E. Phipps killed Ward Adkins.

Disposition of the case: Indicted in Lincoln County Circuit Court, W. Va., for murder. Found not guilty December 12, 1921.

Lonnie Atwell

Facts of the case: On July 5, 1921, Agents H. E. Phipps and James Gillette stopped a Cadillac car on the Sixteenth Street road near Huntington, W. Va., in which W. F. Barnette, Boston O'Niel, and Lonnie Atwell were transporting moonshine liquor; the bootleggers began to run and several shots were fired. Atwell was wounded and died in a hospital a few hours later.

Disposition of the case: Agents Phipps and Gillette were indicted and acquitted by a jury in a Federal court at Huntington.

Peeler Clayton

Facts of the case: On the night of December 15, 1921, Prohibition Agent Bassett R. Miles, accompanied by local officials, was engaged in enforcement work in the city of Austin, Tex. In an alley leading into San Jacinto Street, between Fifth and Sixth Streets, the officers attempted to stop a car in order to search it for liquor, but the occupants of the car opened fire on the officials, who returned fire. In the affair the driver of the car, a taxi, one Peeler Clayton, was killed.

Disposition of the case: Miles and the local officers indicted for murder by grand jury of Travis County. Case transferred to Federal court and listed for the June, 1924, term. Case dismissed for want of prosecution.

Teddy Cox

Facts of the case: On March 16, 1922, Prohibition Agents Newton M. Cloninger and Otis B. Knapp raided a moonshine still in Falling Water country about 5 miles west of Moore, Ark., and near the junction of the lines bounding Newton, Pope, Searcy, and Johnson Counties. Teddy Cox, one of the owners and operators of the still, ran into the shack where the still was being operated and returned with a Winchester rifle, apparently for the purpose of shooting the prohibition agents and sheriffs conducting the raid. In the shooting which occurred Teddy Cox was killed.

Disposition of the case: Grand jury of Newton County failed to return an indictment against the agents.

Joe Duncan

Facts of the case: On the morning of February 4, 1922, Prohibition Agent John Carroll Cate, accompanied by the sheriff and two deputies, raided an illicit distillery that was in operation on Spruce Pine Creek near the line between Greene and Washington Counties, Tenn. After watching the operation of the distillery by three men for about a half hour, the officers proceeded to arrest the men and destroy the outfit. The three moonshiners attempted to escape. Several shots were fired by the officers, but only for the purpose of frightening the fugitives. One of them, Joe Duncan, who was carrying a .38 special revolver in his hand, dropped behind a fallen tree and pointed the revolver at the officers. He was told to drop the gun but did not do so, whereupon he was shot by Agent Cate and fatally wounded.

Disposition of the case: Indicted in State court July 1, 1922, for murder; case referred to Federal court and tried April 6 and 7, 1923. Verdict of not guilty returned.

Boe Fugate

Facts of the case: In April, 1922, Prohibition Agents Collins, Collier, and Kinnaird attempted to arrest Boe Fugate, charged with operating a still. Instead of surrendering to the officers when they approached him and sought his arrest in Knott County, Ky., he opened fire on them, and the agents, as well as several of the possemen who were trying to apprehend Fugate, returned the fire and killed Fugate.

Disposition of the case: Indicted for murder April, 1922. Indictment dismissed for lack of prosecution.

Steve Isom

Facts of the case: On October 21, 1921, Prohibition Agent John D. W. Collins, accompanied by Possemen C. S. Day, Doak Hall, and Townsell Hall, was searching for a still operated by James and Steve Isom along the State line between Kentucky and Virginia in the county of Letcher. Collins and Townsell Hall were together and had separated from C. S. Day, and the latter two were raiding together and had just crossed over the line into Virginia, when they discovered about 30 yards away from them and in front a moonshine distillery in full operation by James and Steve Isom. On seeing the officers Steve Isom drew a pistol and fired at them, whereupon the possemen returned fire. Steve Isom was mortally wounded. Agent Collins was not present at the distillery when the shooting was going on, but he was indicted along with all three possemen, although but two of the possemen engaged in the shooting.

Disposition of the case: Indicted for murder September 13, 1922. Found not guilty October 8, 1923.

Bruce Kirby

Facts of the case: On September 7, 1921, during a raid on a still in Jeff Davis County, 4 miles west of Hazelhurst, Ga., Prohibition Agent G. C. Rogers shot and killed Bruce Kirby. While dying Kirby said he had tried to kill Rogers and did not blame him for having shot him. The records of the office indicate that Kirby was a desperate character, having killed his brother-in-law in 1919, shot another man, and having been released from the Jeff Davis County chain gang in March, 1921, after serving 22 months for stealing hogs.

Disposition of the case: Indicted for murder September 27, 1921. Tried May 29, 1922, and acquitted.

Arlett Kiser

Facts of the case: On February 22, 1922, Prohibition Agent John W. Smith in company with county officials of Dickenson County, Va., and armed with a United States search warrant searched the premises of Arlett Kiser and found a complete illicit distillery in the basement of the house with all necessary accessories. They lay in wait for Kiser's return to the house and upon his return Agent Smith demanded his arrest, which Kiser resisted. He pulled a revolver and was about to discharge it at the agent, when the latter fired, the bullet striking Kiser in the right arm and ranging through his lungs. Kiser was a notorious bootlegger and Smith had been told by Kiser's wife that he would never be taken alive.

Disposition of the case: Tried before three justices of the peace March 8, 1922, and acquitted.

Chalmers McAlphine

Facts of the case: On October 13, 1921, Federal Prohibition Agent Robert P. Ferguson, accompanied by State officers, found three distilleries in operation located about 600 yards from the residence of Arthur Coggins and about 700 yards from the residence of a certain McAlphine in Clebourne County, Ala. The man in charge of the stills was arrested and stated that the outfits belonged to Archie McAlphine, Chalmers McAlphine, and Arthur Coggins. The officers proceeded to the McAlphine home, found Archie McAlphine, and placed him under arrest. Chalmers McAlphine was not at home and after a search he was found at the store of John Long about 3 miles from the scene of the illicit operations. McAlphine attempted to escape and Agent Ferguson and Sheriff Adams gave chase for some distance. At last, obstructed by a fence, McAlphine turned toward the officers with a pistol in his hand, evidently with the intention of shooting them. Agent Ferguson fired and his bullet resulted in McAlphine's death.

Disposition of the case: Indicted February 20, 1922, for murder. Acquitted January 23, 1924.

Willie Nelson

Facts of the case: On November 29, 1921, Prohibition Agent Maxey, in company with Federal agents and county officer, raided a distillery about 1½ miles from the main road between Morrison and Harpersville, Va. When about 30 yards from the still Maxey ordered the operators to throw up their hands, announcing himself and companions as officers. Willie Nelson, who was standing beside the mash boxes, grabbed his rifle and pointed it toward the officers, while the other operators of the still ran. Agent Maxey fired one shot. Nelson ran behind the mash boxes, and Maxey fired three more shots. After the other operators of the still were captured Nelson was found in the woods shot through the body. The officers took him to a hospital, where an operation was performed, but he died after an illness of about 10 days.

Disposition of the case: No criminal prosecution was instituted against the agents.

Bruno Nistico

Facts of the case: On October 31, 1921, while investigating the delivery of alcohol at a road house, Faatz' Hotel, in the vicinity of Syracuse, N. Y., Prohibition Agent James M. Stapleton shot and killed one Bruno Nistico, who had fired two shots at Federal Prohibition Agent Van Tassel, who tried to arrest him. The truck with which Nistico arrived at the road house was found to be loaded with alcohol.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution was instituted against Agent Stapleton.

Joseph Sesqueria

Facts of the case: On the evening of June 10, 1922, Prohibition Agent Eddie Bogan and another prohibition agent were investigating violations of the national prohibition act in a dangerous section of Boston. While at their work they were recognized and attacked. After receiving minor injuries, they retreated to the Ferry House at the North Ferry. They were pursued, and one Joseph Sesqueria forced his way into the inclosure, rushing into the room in which they had taken refuge, smashed the agent who accompanied Bogan to the floor, and then started for Bogan, who warned him back, and then, in fear of his life, shot him, Sesqueria dying some two weeks later.

Disposition of the case: Agents were arrested by police and Bogan held. Tried in April, 1923, and Bogan found guilty of manslaughter. On petition to the Governor of Massachusetts, the sentence of Bogan was commuted, and he was released April 30, 1924.

Francis Marion Smith

Facts of the case: On November 17, 1921, Prohibition Agents H. C. Blincoe, F. G. Fields, A. F. Guelda, N. C. Gilliam proceeded to Nelson County, Ky., and when in close proximity to a moonshine distillery they were fired upon by the men who were engaged in the operation of the distillery. The agents returned the fire and during the exchange of shots Smith was killed.

Disposition of the case: No criminal prosecution was instituted.

Clarence Sturges

Facts of the case: On September 9, 1921, Prohibition Agents Chapman and Boyd and county officers raided an illicit distillery, and as they did so Anderson Sturges, Frank Sturges, Clarence Sturges, Vernon Sturges, and George Kelly, R. F. D., Learned, Miss., the operators, attempted to make their escape. Agent Chapman fired his pistol twice in the air and commanded them to halt. Clarence Sturges went about 40 feet from the distillery, turned and fired at Chapman, and the latter then fired at him. Clarence Sturges then ran about 20 feet farther and again turned and fired at Chapman. Chapman then fired the second time and killed Clarence Sturges.

Disposition of the case: On September 12, 1921, Agent Chapman was completely exonerated by the circuit court grand jury, and indictments were returned against all of the alleged moonshiners in this case for illicit distilling.

Curtis Tidmore

Facts of the case: On the evening of September 28, 1921, Prohibition Agent Thomas C. Dews with other officers having a search warrant for the wagon of one Elmer Hufstutler and one Kirk Lewis, alias Curtis Tidmore, attempted to search the same on the public highway of Jefferson County, Ala. They drew their car up beside the wagon and asked the occupants to hold up a minute as they were Government officers, whereupon shots were fired from the wagon into the car of the agents. The agents returned the fire, and Tidmore was wounded. He was hurried to a hospital, but his life could not be saved.

Disposition of the case: Indicted in State court for second-degree murder. Tried in United States District Court at Birmingham, and Dews convicted and sentenced to three years in penitentiary.

John Wilson

Facts of the case: On April 15, 1922, while prohibition agents James G. Buchanan, Joseph P. Owens, Robert L. Williams, were raiding an illicit distillery near Mehan Junction, Lauderdale County, Miss., under the supervision of the head of field force in that State, one John Wilson was shot while resisting arrest and later died.

Disposition of the case: These agents were arrested April 29, 1922, by State authorities on a charge of manslaughter. Grand jury failed to indict.

Julius Wurzer

Facts of the case: On December 21, 1921, about 11 a. m., prohibition agents Nicholas Annen, Joseph A. Dorr, and William Loose, accompanied by a deputy sheriff and armed with a search warrant, searched for and found a shack 15 or 20 miles from the city of Antigo, Wis., in which two men named Wurzer and one named Pennington were operating a still. Some of the moonshiners had made threats as to what they would do to the officers who might try to arrest them. The violators were fully armed, and the country around the scene of action is a wild one. The agents and the deputy sheriff approached the moonshiners' shack with guns in hand. Just as an exchange of shots occurred Julius Wurzer attempted to escape through a door in the opposite side of the shack from that approached by the agents. He was fatally shot as he made his exit. He traveled some 30 or 40 feet and then collapsed and died shortly after.

Disposition of the case: These agents were charged with manslaughter. However, on September 8, 1923, an order was entered dismissing the action of the State of Wisconsin against these agents.

Harry Baker

Facts of the case: During July, 1922, agents W. W. Wooten and George Griffin took part in a raid on the Ferncliffe distillery at Louisville, Ky. Harry Baker was in a truck in which whisky which had been stolen from the distillery was being driven away. The occupants of the truck opened fire on the officers and tried to run down their car. The agents riddled the truck and Baker was killed. It was claimed that Agents Griffen and Wooten fired the shots that killed the man.

Disposition of the case: No criminal prosecution was instituted against these agents.

Bob Ballard

Facts of the case: On December 15, 1922, Agent Guy E. Cole, investigating moonshiners near Lexington, Ky., approached an empty house on the farm of Will Ferguson. Upon opening the door he was immediately shot by Bob or Charles Ballard, occupants of the house, who kept up continuous firing at accompanying agents, who had to run for cover. Bob Ballard was killed and Charles Ballard was wounded, although the latter escaped and was not caught until later. The first shot fired struck Agent Cole in the left eye, penetrating his brain, fracturing his skull, causing instant death.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted.

Edgar Bunch

Facts of the case: On March 9, 1923, Prohibition Agents McNeil and Murphy, with local officers, while executing a search warrant for Edgar Bunch's soft-drink stand in Ashland, Ky., were fired upon by some one inside of said stand. After breaking down the door and entering, the officers found Mr. Bunch dead with a .38-caliber Colt's pistol with four empty shells lying beside his body.

Disposition of the case: At the May, 1923, term of the Boyd circuit court, the grand jury ignored the case against Prohibition Agents McNeil and Murphy and local officers.

Smokey Cash

Facts of the case: On June 24, 1923, Prohibition Agent Charles F. Buzzi, while raiding a road house near Sand Springs, Okla., in company with other officers, killed Smokey Cash, a negro, known to be a dope head and a bootlegger of the very worst type. Cash entered the road house during the progress of the raid, and while in there he seized a revolver which one of the agents had placed on a counter, apparently for the purpose of shooting the raiding officers, and started for the door. He was ordered to halt, but did not do so, turning and fired at the officers instead, and Agent Buzzi shot him.

Disposition of the case: County Attorney of Tulsa County refused to file charges against the agent, saying no action was necessary, as the shooting of Cash was justified.

Jess Coffey

Facts of the case: On March 28, 1923, Prohibition Agent Benjamin H. Crumpton, accompanied by some sheriffs, raided an illicit distillery near Muscadine, Ala., operated by Jess Coffey. Coffey attempted to escape and Crumpton fired to his right trying to stop him. As he fired his foot slipped causing the gun to swerve to the left and as a result Coffey was shot and later died.

Disposition of the case: Crumpton was indicted by grand jury of Cleburne County for murder; November 6, 1924, was tried and acquitted.

Zategosa de Leon

Facts of the case: On May 16, 1923, Prohibition Agent Charles E. Miller, accompanied by another officer, investigated the premises of 128 Guilbeau Street, San Antonio, Tex., the home of Zategosa de Leon, a notorious bootlegger. Agent miller was attacked by De Leon with a knife and cut in several places. De Leon instructed his two sons to get a pistol. Miller could not get away from De Leon who was following him and striking him with the knife, and fearing for his life he drew a pistol, shot De Leon and killed him. Cuts in Miller's clothing and papers indicate that De Leon attempted to stab him in the heart. A 40-gallon still, five 50-gallon barrels of peach mash, a 50-gallon cooling barrel, and all the paraphernalia used in distilling intoxicating liquor were found.

Disposition of the case: Grand jury returned a "no bill" on July 27, 1923, thereby exonerating Agent Miller.

Douglas Dunham

Facts of the case: On the evening of October 14, 1922, Deputy Marshal C. G. Bryant, accompanied by Federal Prohibition Agents Cheatham, Moor, and Ratledge, went to Jake Brown's filling station near Salisbury, N. C., to serve a search warrant. When the officers arrived one Douglas Dunham was seen in the store in a bending position looking through the door at him. Dunham made a dash for a door opening into a rear room. Cheatham ran after him but Dunham slammed the door before Cheatham reached it, and bolted it on the inside. Cheatham, with his gun in his hand, forced the door open. The floor on the other side of the door was lower than the floor of the store, and as the door sprung open Cheatham fell down the step to his knees, throwing out his hands to stop his fall. His pistol struck the door and was discharged, the shot striking Dunham, who died as a result of the wound.

Disposition of the case: Agent Cheatham was tried and acquitted April 18, 1923.

Harry Givens

Facts of the case: On September 4, 1922, Prohibition Agent Lloyd J. Gay purchased liquor from several persons in the vicinity of Orlando, Fla., including one Harry Givens. When Givens delivered intoxicating liquor to Gay, as arranged previously, and after Givens had accepted pay for such liquor, Agent Gay informed him he was under arrest. Givens snatched a revolver from the pocket of a Mr. Bledsoe, who was assisting Agent Gay, and started chasing Gay around an automobile, saying he was going to kill him. Agent Gay dodged behind a tree and while Givens was trying to get a shot at him Gay shot Givens, killing him.

Disposition of the case: Gay charged with murder. Tried and found not guilty.

Arthur Hood

Facts of the case: On February 19, 1923, Agent H. Mayo Shugart and Agent S. H. Parkins were detailed to assist Sheriff Shackelton, of Lunenburg County, Va., on a raid about 10 miles from Victoria, Va. Arthur Hood, owner of the distilling plant, and three other operators composed the violating party. During the raid Hood shot Agent Shugart, the shot striking just below the heart and passing through the left lung. After being shot down by the moonshiner Agent Shugart returned fire, three times hitting Hood, and wounding him in such a way that he died on February 21, 1923. The other three operators were apprehended and taken to jail, awaiting trial in State court at Lunenburg courthouse.

Disposition of the case: No record of any action against Shugart September 30, 1927.

James Jenkins

Facts of the case: On August 21, 1922, Prohibition Agent A. B. Seabrook in company with other officers raided an illicit distillery at Faber's Place, Charleston, S. C. During the raid two negroes ran out of the distillery. The negro in front, who later was found to be Willie Bennett, carried a shotgun, and while running shot the agent, wounding him. This negro then dropped the gun and continued to run. The second negro picked up the gun, with the evident intention of shooting Agent Seabrook, when the agent killed him. The name of this negro was James Jenkins.

Disposition of the case: Tried in State court and agent found not guilty.

Posey Maddox

Facts of the case: On October 4, 1922, Prohibition Agent W. P. Stancil and Deputy Sheriff J. W. Walden raided an illicit still on the premises of Posey Maddox, near Fayette, Ala. Walden was shot from ambush, the shot passing through both his thighs. Agent Stancil shot Maddox, and he died the next day.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted against Agent Stancil.

John Rinnberg

Facts of the case: On July 8, 1922, Prohibition Agents Henry Alston, Oscar Granay, Charles Short, M. S. Shoulders, and Charles Vursell raided a farm of an alleged violator at Belleville, Ill. During this raid John Rinnberg fired on the officers and the officers in self-defense returned the fire, killing him.

Disposition of the case: No criminal prosecution instituted.

J. B. Smith

Facts of the case: On June 1, 1923, Prohibition Agent James H. Gastley, in company with the chiefs of police of Union Point and White Plains, Ga., and two deputy sheriffs, was stationed on the road about 1 mile from Carey Station, Ga., in order to apprehend a whisky-running car which they had been advised traveled the road in question. When ordered to stop the driver of the car deliberately ran down one of the officers, knocking him off a bridge and into a ditch, then hit another officer and knocked him down. Agent Gastley mounted the running board of the machine and the occupants began shooting at him. A pistol duel ensued and both occupants—J. B. Smith and Jett Smith—of the car were killed. Fifty-six gallons of whisky were found in the car.

Disposition of the case: No criminal prosecution was instituted.

Jett Smith

Facts of the case: On June 1, 1923, Prohibition Agent James H. Gastley, in company with the chiefs of police of Union Point and White Plains, Ga., and two deputy sheriffs, was stationed on the road about 1 mile from Carey Station, Ga., in order to apprehend a whisky-running car which they had been advised traveled the road in question. When ordered to stop the driver of the car deliberately ran down one of the officers, knocking him off a bridge and into a ditch, then hit another officer and knocked him down. Agent Gastley mounted the running board of the machine and the occupants began shooting at him. A pistal duel ensued and both occupants—J. B. Smith and Jett

Smith—of the car were killed. Fifty-six gallons of whisky were found in the car.

Disposition of the case: No criminal prosecution was instituted.

Ike Strong

Facts of the case: On March 28, 1923, Prohibition Agents Tuggle, Easley, Green, and Saylor, with possemen arrived at the home of George Strong, Middle Fork, 25 miles north of Harlan, Ky., near Asher, for the purpose of searching same for liquor. One of the possemen was shot through the head and also in the breast. The shots came from the Strong house. The agents returned the fire and after the firing ceased on both sides found Ike Strong, George Strong, and Mrs. Ike Strong had been killed. All had been taking part in the fight.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted against the above-named agents.

George Strong

Facts of the case: On March 28, 1923, Prohibition Agents Tuggle, Easley, Green, and Saylor, with possemen arrived at the home of George Strong, Middle Fork, 25 miles north of Harlan, Ky., near Asher, for the purpose of searching same for liquor. One of the possemen was shot through the head and also in the breast. The shots came from the Strong house. The agents returned the fire and after the firing ceased on both sides found Ike Strong, George Strong, and Mrs. Ike Strong had been killed. All had taken part in the fight.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted against the above-named agents.

Mrs. Ike Strong

Facts of the case: On March 28, 1923, Prohibition Agents Tuggle, Easley, Green, and Saylor, with possemen, arrived at the home of George Strong, Middle Fork, 25 miles north of Harlan, Ky., near Asher, for the purpose of searching same for liquor. One of the possemen was shot through the head and also in the breast. The shots came from the Strong house. The agents returned the fire and after the firing ceased on both sides found Ike Strong, George Strong, and Mrs. Ike Strong had been killed. All had taken part in the fight.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted against the above-named agents.

Albert L. Swope

Facts of the case: On September 25, 1922, several prohibition agents, including Sylvester E. Davis, raided the farm of James M. Byers near Shandon, Butler County, Ohio. On the farm they found a complete distilling plant and two men ran away from the still as the officers approached. One was caught although he resisted arrest and he refused to accompany the agents away from the farm in an automobile. While attempting to handcuff him he made a dive at Agent Davis, trying to get Davis's gun, which was in the holster, and in the ensuing struggle the gun was discharged, killing the moonshiner. It was ascertained he went by the several names of Andrew L., August L., and Albert L. Swope, and sometimes spelled his last name Schwab.

Disposition of the case: A charge of manslaughter was ignored by the grand jury, thereby exonerating the agent.

T. Q. Wallace

Facts of the case: On May 19, 1923, T. Q. Wallace, a notorious bootlegger, who had been arrested by Prohibition Agent David M. Wills, came to the hotel where Wills was staying at Irvine, Ky., and after cursing him and making threatening remarks, started shooting at Wills. Wallace shot one revolver empty, threw it aside and drew another, and shot in all eleven times. Wills shot five times, one shot hitting Wallace's revolver and putting it out of commission and another striking Wallace and going through his body, causing death.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted against this agent.

Fredius Wilson

Facts of the case: On the evening of June 13, 1923, Prohibition Agents James C. Dilworth and Charles E. Miller met former Prohibition Agent Fredius Wilson on the street in Galveston, Tex., and Wilson accosted Dilworth, calling him a foul name and accused him of being responsible for certain men going to jail. Dilworth informed Wilson that he was not looking for trouble, and Wilson answered that he was, and he fired from the hip instantly, hitting Dilworth in the shoulder. The force of the shot caused Dilworth to stagger, and he reached for his gun, but being somewhat paralyzed he did not shoot. Wilson fired a second shot, and then Miller shot Wilson, killing him. Wilson had been dropped from the rolls for the good of the service, his work having been unsatisfactory. He had a great deal of trouble with other agents and officials, and his shooting was undoubtedly the result of personal animosity between him and the agents Dilworth and Miller.

Disposition of the case: On July 27, 1923, grand jury reported "no bill" against these agents.

Peter Yancaukas

Facts of the case: On April 27, 1923, Agent James L. Asher, with two other prohibition agents and a deputy sheriff, went to a saloon at Tenth and Winter Streets, Philadelphia, to identify prisoners wanted and serve a search warrant, a purchase of whisky having been made in such saloon on a previous date. When the agents entered Mrs. Peter Yancaukas, the wife of the saloon keeper, was serving whisky out of a pitcher. The agents tried to get possession of the pitcher and a fight ensued, in which the agents were assaulted with bottles and other articles. Agent Asher tried to arrest Peter Yancaukas, but he resisted. It is alleged that Asher kicked Yancaukas in the stomach and that Yancaukas later died as a result thereof. Asher denies this, stating that the only thing he did was to hit Yancaukas with his fist under the chin when Yancaukas was about to hit another agent with a quart soda-water bottle. He further states that Yancaukas while under bond called at the prohibition office three times, at which times he seemed in the best of health.

Disposition of the case: Agent Asher was arrested July 2, 1923, charged with manslaughter. Indicted July 20, 1923. Acquitted December 23, 1924.

Bradley Bowling

Facts of the case: On June 1, 1924, Prohibition Agent William Turner and others left Hazard, Ky., to make a raid on law violators. In the vicinity of Yerkes, Ky., they came upon four men who had been drinking and were carrying a quantity of moonshine whisky. Three arrests were made, but the fourth man, one Bradley Bowling, escaped with a half-gallon jar of liquor and ran into the house of J. L. Dysart. As the agent and his companions approached the house Dysart and his wife appeared in the door armed with revolvers. Bowling attempted to escape, and in doing so ran through the yard and behind a large pile of rocks. He threw his hand into his pocket as if drawing a pistol and Turner, believing he was about to be shot, fired, hitting Bowling in the head.

Disposition of the case: Arrested June 1, 1924. Indicted September 19, 1924. Case dismissed for want of prosecution October 21, 1925.

Grover C. Bradley

Facts of the case: On December 3, 1923, at Littleston, N. C., Prohibition Agent W. E. Woodfin attempted to arrest John R. Bradley, a violator, and a sharp scuffle ensued between him and Bradley, during which time the agent tried to put handcuffs upon Bradley. Grover C. Bradley thereupon demanded that his brother be released; but, as the agent did not comply with his demand, he shot at the agent with his revolver, after which, while Grover Bradley was in the act of shooting for the second time, the agent shot and killed him.

Disposition of the case: Agent Woodfin was indicted for murder. Transferred to Federal court and set for trial May, 1924, at Raleigh. Found not guilty June 11, 1925.

James Cafane

Facts of the case: On the night of May 17, 1924, Prohibition Agents Gaddis, Gantert, Kroesen, Lang, Day, Swackhamer, and Zipf were stationed on the fifth floor of the Essex Storage Warehouse, Newark, N. J., having been advised an attempt would be made to rob the same. At 10.45 the elevator stopped at the fifth floor and a number of men stepped out, having previously filed the Government locks off the elevator doors. They started toward the barrels of whisky. Agent Zipf ordered them to halt and to put up their hands. A shot was fired from the direction of the burglars. The agents returned the fire and one of the burglars and the elevator man were shot. The burglar, James Cafane, later died from the wound.

Disposition of the case: No criminal prosecution was instituted.

Ira Combs

Facts of the case: On June 14, 1924, Prohibition Agent William Turner, in company with other officials, was watching a public road leading into the city of Hazard, Ky., for rum runners at 10.30 p. m., and Ira Combs, colored, a noted bootlegger, whom the agent had been informed was coming to town with a load of whisky, came along. He had a quantity of moonshine whisky and upon being commanded to surrender he drew his revolver and fired. The man returned the fire and Combs was shot and killed.

Disposition of the case: Arrested June 17, 1924. Case dismissed for want of prosecution October 21, 1925.

W. E. Hicks

Facts of the case: On September 13, 1923, Prohibition Agent Keller Hines and another agent had seized several cars which were transporting intoxicating liquor on the Houston-Galveston highway, and while waiting for others, two men came along in a car and opened fire on the two agents. Hines returned the fire and in the battle one of the men was killed. This man proved to be Deputy Constable W. E. Hicks. Hicks had opened fire on the agents thinking they were bootleggers.

Disposition of the case: Indicted September 16, 1923, for murder. Case dismissed for want of prosecution.

Philip Kalb

Facts of the case: On January 13, 1924, Prohibition Agents Rickey, Gibboney, Campbell, Larimer, Thayer, and others went to the premises known as "Jew Corners," 5 miles north of Lambertsville, Mich., for the purpose of searching the home of one Sam Kalb. Several men ran down a field and were captured by the officers. As they returned they heard a loud cry from within the house and a man ascertained to be Philip Kalb came to the door in a fainting or painful condition. He was helped several feet and then collapsed, never regaining consciousness.

Disposition of the case: Agent Rickey was tried in United States Federal court July 15 to 23, 1924, for the killing of Philip Kalb, and a verdict of not guilty was brought in.

Bill Littrell

Facts of the case: On February 23, 1924, after having taken four men in raids and while traveling with the prisoners on a public road of Virginia en route to Pineville, Ky., Agent Saylor arrested one Lloyd Littrell on charge of possessing and transporting intoxicating liquor. Bill Littrell, father of the prisoner, accompanied by one John Littrell, came down the pike in a car, blocked the passage of the agent's car, and demanded release of his son, stating he was a magistrate of the district and would try his son on said charge. Agent Saylor replied he would deliver the prisoner to a Federal prohibition agent of Virginia for trial in that State, whereupon Bill Littrell fired at Agent Saylor; a fight followed in which Lloyd and John Littrell and Agent Saylor were wounded, and Bill Littrell was killed. Agent Saylor died the following day.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted.

Ralph Marchese

Facts of the case: On June 24, 1924, Prohibition Agents L. R. Collins and J. B. Murtagh, while searching the premises of Gicamo Bucaro, 626 Erato Street, New Orleans, La., were attacked by Mr. Bucaro, Mary Cascio, his mother-in-law, and Frances Bucaro. During the scuffle 4 shots were fired, 1 by Collins, 1 by Murtagh, and 2 by Gicamo Bucaro. One, Ralph Marchese, apparently a friend of Bucaro's, sneaked up behind Agent Collins and was close to him, and Agent Murtagh, thinking Marchese had a gun and intended to use it on Collins, fired at him. At the same time Bucaro fired at Agent Collins, and one of the bullets struck Marchese, and he died soon after being taken to the hospital. Both revolvers were of the same caliber and it could not be determined who fired the fatal shot.

Disposition of the case: On August 22, 1924, hearing was held in criminal court, New Orleans, La. No prosecution was instituted in this case.

Guy Meadows

Facts of the case: On March 20, 1924, Prohibition Agent Gustavus J. Simmons, accompanied by Police Officer G. A. Lilly and Sheriff O. L. Foster, secreted themselves behind a fence about 2 miles above Hinton, W. Va., near where some liquor was concealed. An automobile stopped in the road near by in which there were two men and one went to where the liquor was hidden and picked up a pint, at which time the officers made themselves known. The man threw the pint of liquor into the river and started to run in the direction of the river, and Sheriff Foster and Agent Simmons both fired one shot, not with the intention of shooting the man, who ran into the edge and the river, then came back and threw up his hands and laid down on the ground, saying he was shot. He was rushed to a hospital where he died two hours after the shooting. The man who was shot was learned to be Guy Meadows.

Disposition of the case: Indicted April 23, 1924, for murder. Acquitted in Federal court December 13, 1924.

Thomas Monteforti

Facts of the case: On April 18, 1924, Prohibition Agents Kupferman, Owens, and others purchased a considerable quantity of intoxicating liquor at a garage at 248 North Eighth Street, Williamsburg, Brooklyn, N. Y. After the liquor had been put into the agents' car Thomas Monteforti, his cousin Michael, and one Fisher, with four or five others, and the agents went into the garage to settle. Agent Owens handed Fisher two $100 bills, and then Kupferman displayed his badge and told the bootleggers they were under arrest. Thomas Monteforti said he would shoot and pulled a pistol from his hip pocket and was in the act of drawing when Kupferman shot and the bullet entered Monteforti's cheek just below the eye, mortally wounding him. Just at that time two other shots were fired either by Michael Monteforti or Fisher. Kupferman turned to defend himself from these men and wounded Michael Monteforti. Fisher escaped. Kupferman admitted doing the shooting, and as Agent Owens's pistol was in evidence with its chambers full he was not held.

Disposition of the case: Kupferman arrested April 19, 1924, charged with homicide. Grand jury returned a "no bill" May 12, 1924.

Elisha Northcutt

Facts of the case: On August 8, 1923, on a tour of investigation Prohibition Agent Seth Ward and Policeman Baker entered the soft-drink bar of Elisha Northcutt, of Anderson, Ind. Northcutt attempted to empty a pitcher of whisky, when Policeman Baker interfered. Northcutt then attacked the policeman, and after struggling for some time succeeded in getting to a drawer and extracting therefrom a revolver. He drew the revolver on Baker, and while struggling to get into a position to shoot him he was shot by Agent Ward and killed.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution was instituted in this case.

Alducci Sabatino

Facts of the case: On the night of June 29, 1924, at Wilmington, Del., Prohibition Agents Melvin, Dillahay, Herman, and Washburn were awaiting the return of an automobile which they were informed was operated by Alducci Sabatino in the traffic of illicit drugs and liquor. The agents and an Italian informer were in two automobiles when Sabatino and three other men appeared in their machine and parked a short distance away. Agent Melvin attempted to engage Sabatino in conversation in the road, but Sabatino immediately opened fire. Melvin fell to the ground, and the bullet went over him, hitting Dillahey in the neck. Agents Washburn and Herman immediately opened fire, killing him instantly.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution instituted in this case.

Sylvester Strickland

Facts of the case: On the night of April 5, 1924, Prohibition Agent Dearie and two deputy sheriffs while on a scouting trip on a public road near Vivian, La., in search of a negro rum runner with a reputation as a gunman, unexpectedly ran across a negro whom the officers took to be the gunman but who later proved not to be. Upon being approached by the officers this negro fled and when he was called upon to halt he suddenly stopped and made a motion with his hand which caused Agent Dearie to believe that he was about to draw a gun, whereupon Dearie fired one shot at the negro, which proved fatal.

Disposition of the case: Grand jury of Cadde Parish, La., ignored the charge.

Ernest Twombley

Facts of the case: On April 11, 1924, Prohibition Agent William H. Stanley with other officers, in pursuing two automobiles transporting liquor, overtook the last car when it ran into a ditch off the road about a mile south of De Kalb Junction, N. Y. The driver of the car jumped out while the car was going at full speed and suffered a terrible fall on the macadam road. He got up and ran down the road followed by the officers. Agents Stanley and Stevenson fired several shots into the ground in the hope of making the man stop. One of the bullets from Stanley's pistol struck the fugitive, who then stopped and gave himself up. He said his name was Ernest Twombley and that he lived at Bensons Mines, N. Y. He died before he could be gotten to a hospital.

Disposition of the case: Arrested April 14, 1924. Indicted May 26, 1924, for manslaughter. Case dismissed for want of prosecution.

James S. White

Facts of the case: On October 17, 1923, Prohibition Agent John H. Vail was participating with local officers in executing a search warrant against the "Shasta View Hotel" at Castella, Calif., when James S. White, a deputy fish and game warden, entered the room and, drawing his gun, pointed it at the officers and defied them to pull their guns. An altercation ensued between White and Vail and White fired two shots at Vail, both taking effect in Vail's body. Vail returned the fire, shooting three times at White, two of the shots taking effect, and resulting in White's death.

Disposition of the case: The matter was presented to the Shasta County grand jury, which body voted 16 to 3 against indicting Vail, and he was exonerated from the charge of murder. About a year later, August 8, 1924, the owner of the hotel swore to a complaint against Vail charging him with murder, and the justice of the peace held him to answer to the superior court of Shasta County. Case was transferred to the Federal court, and verdict of not guilty, December 31, 1926.

Leslie Britt

Facts of the case: On August 9, 1924, Prohibition Agent J. G. Griffin, while on a raid in Southampton County, Va., came upon a man by the name of Leslie Britt, whom, the agent believed, was about to wound him, and in self-defense Agent Griffin shot him. He died later in the hospital.

Disposition of the case: On August 12, 1924, coroner's jury exonerated Agent Griffin on the ground that the shooting occurred in the discharge of his official duties.

Pres Brown

Facts of the case: On April 7, 1925, Prohibition Agents Shields, Nichols, and Crewse and a county officer came upon a man who was operating a still at an isolated point about 25 miles northeast of West Plains, Mo. As the officers surrounded the still their presence was discovered by the operator of the still, one Pres Brown, who ran for his shotgun, which was on the ground near by. Agent Shields announced he was a Federal officer and commanded Brown to hold up his hands. Instead of complying Brown brought his shotgun up to fire at the officers. The officers in self-defense all fired at Brown, who at the same time fired with his shotgun. Brown then ran for a barricade in some near-by rocks, where he collapsed and died, death having resulted from one revolver wound.

Disposition of the case: No inquest was held, as Circuit Judge Stewart, at Ava, Mo., decided that none was necessary in view of the fact that the shooting was in self-defense and that Brown was a notorious desperate character who had many times stated he would get anyone who attempted to molest him.

Joe W. Carter

Facts in the case: On February 7, 1925, Prohibition Agents Gurley, Burnes, Goode, and Sutterfield were searching for an alleged still that was believed to be in operation near Frenchmans Bayou, Mississippi County, Ark. As the officers approached a wood in that vicinity they saw a man flee into the woods. He was ordered to halt and advised that the party was composed of officers, but he failed to obey the command. The officers fired into the woods after the fleeing man, who, from the cover of the woods, fired four shots at the officers. After firing ceased the man, who, it was ascertained, was one Joe Carter, was found wounded. He was removed to Blytheville, Ark., where he died during an operation performed in an effort to save his life.

Disposition of the case: The coroner's jury found that Carter had come to his death by gunshot wounds at the hands of officers while resisting arrest, the officers being exonerated.

Beckham Cecil

Facts of the case: On July 23, 1924, Prohibition Agents Nantz, Unthank, and Ransdall, with several citizens, located a still near Bardstown, Nelson County, Ky., and found two men operating it. As the officers approached, the men started to run away. One was captured; the other continued running, with Agent Nantz in pursuit. This man, who, it was later ascertained, was one Beckham Cecil, after running about 150 yards from the still, turned around, drew his gun, and said, "Stop, damn you, or I'll kill you." Agent Nantz then fired and killed Cecil.

Disposition of the case: Agent Nantz was indicted August 5, 1924, on the charge of murder by a grand jury at Bardstown, Ky. In October, 1924, the case was removed from the State court to the United States district court. The case was continued on the motion of the Commonwealth's attorney. A verdict of "not guilty" was rendered January 30, 1926.

George Clark

Facts of the case: On October 11, 1924, Prohibition Agent Easley, accompanied by seven county officers of Whitley County, Ky., went to the vicinity of the Corn Creek schoolhouse where they watched the road for alleged whisky runners. While at this point about 10.30 p. m., two cars came down the road, and when signaled to stop speeded up and fired several shots at the officers. Agent Easley and the county officers in self-defense returned the fire, wounding one George Clark and William Adams. The wounded men were taken to a hospital at Corbin, Ky., where Clark died.

Disposition of the case: The Whitley County grand jury, on October 29, 1924, after hearing the evidence in the case found that the officers fatally wounded Clark in self-defense while in the performance of their official duties.

Hirman Fee

Facts of the case: On October 7, 1924, Prohibition Agent Lewis, accompanied by two citizens, while searching for stills near Earbs Branch, Harlan County, Ky., came upon two men who where then operating a still. A third man was within 25 or 30 yards of the still. Agent Lewis demanded that all three surrender. The two men operating the still immediately fired their revolvers at Agent Lewis. The agent returned the fire wounding both men. One of the men, who it was ascertained was one Hiram Fee, died within a short time from his wound.

Disposition of the case: Agent Lewis was indicted by a grand jury in Harlan County, Ky., on the charge of murder. The case was removed for trial from the State court to the Federal court December 22, 1924. The case was dismissed April 7, 1925, for want of prosecution, on motion of the United States attorney.

Marcus Ferrell

Facts of the case: On the night of May 10, 1925, Prohibition Agents Mathew and Raney, accompanied by a citizen, went to a point 2½ miles from Raywick, Ky., where four men were found operating a still. The agents and the man accompanying them surrounded the still. While Agent Mathew was attempting to take into custody one Evard Mattingly and one Marcus Ferrell, his revolver was accidentally discharged, killing Ferrell instantly.

Disposition of the case: Agent Mathew was indicted by the Marion County grand jury on May 20, 1925, on the charge of involuntary manslaughter. Case removed to Federal Court. Dismissed March 20, 1928, on motion of United States attorney.

Francis Fontaine

Facts of the case: On May 15, 1925, Prohibition Agents McCoun, Rufer, and Holliday were searching for an alleged still on the banks of the Sioux River, near the town of Jefferson, in Union County, S. Dak. During his search Agent McCoun was severely assaulted by a man with a club in his hand, who sprang upon him from behind a clump of trees. Agent McCoun, although seriously injured by his assailant, fired two shots in self-defense, mortally wounding him.

Disposition of the case: An information was filed in the circuit court, Union County, S. Dak., October 27, 1925, charging Agent McCoun with murder. The court directed a verdict of "not guilty" be returned May 7, 1926.

Houston Harris

Facts of the case: On February 16, 1925, Prohibition Agents Bowdoin and Davis, accompanied by two citizens, were searching for an alleged still near Careyville, Fla. While engaged in this search Bowdoin found a scow which was anchored in a river. On the scow was a 10-gallon keg of liquor. In a short time a small rowboat came down the river, and as it drew near the scow the occupants of the boat fired on Agent Bowdoin. Agent Bowdoin returned the fire. As the result of the shooting, Houston Harris, one of the occupants of the boat, was killed and the other two occupants wounded and Agent Bowdoin was killed.

Disposition of the case: In view of the fatal outcome of the shooting no prosecution was instituted.

Clarence Jones

Facts of the case: On August 25, 1924, Prohibition Agent Hopper and United States Commissioner Ermey apprehended one Clarence Jones operating a still 6 miles southeast of Hot Springs, Ark. When Jones discovered the presence of the two officers he drew his revolver in a threatening way and at the same time attempted to seek shelter. Agent Hopper in self-defense then fired at Jones wounding him. Jones was immediately removed to a hospital at Hot Springs, where he died the following day.

Disposition of the case: The prosecuting attorney for the State filed an information charging Agent Hopper with manslaughter. Subsequently the Garland County grand jury investigated the case and failed to indict Agent Hopper. Prosecution has not been instituted under the information filed, and it is not expected that any further action will be taken in the case.

John Kelly

Facts of the case: On January 8, 1925, Prohibition Agents Griffin, O'Rorke, and Burgess drove in an automobile to a point near Newport News, Va., where it was believed a still was in operation. Arriving at the place in question, the agents separated and proceeded to the locality of the alleged still from different directions. Agent Griffin came across two men carrying a still, and followed them to a point where they started to set it up. After the still had been set up, Agent Griffin ordered one of the men to throw up his hands. The man, seeing Griffin was alone, started toward him and put his hand in his pocket. Agent Griffin, believing that he was reaching for a revolver, fired and shot him. The second man escaped. The wounded man, who it was ascertained was John Kelly, died before medical attention could be given him.

Disposition of the case: On January 8, 1925, Agent Griffin was exonerated by a coroner's jury. The coroner's jury decided that the facts of the case justified his shooting in self-defense.

Bee Lilly

Facts of the case: On April 1, 1925, Prohibition Agent Simmons, accompanied by three State police officers, surrounded a still on the headwaters of Beaver Creek, near Beckley, W. Va. Two men were seen operating the still. Upon these men ascertaining the presence of the officers they started to run. One of them carried in his hand what appeared to be a rifle, and it was apparent he was seeking the shelter of a tree. The officers believed he was about to fire upon them from ambush, and shot at him. He was instantly killed.

Disposition of the case: Agent Simmons was indicted on the charge of murder by a grand jury of Raleigh County, W. Va., in the June term, 1925. Trial in Federal court resulted in a "hung jury." Simmons has since been killed in State prohibition service, and the case probably will never come to trial.

Jesse Martin

Facts of the case: On April 29, 1925, Prohibition Agents Pearson, King, and Dettor went to the home of one Jesse Martin, at Burnt Chimneys, Va., for the purpose of buying moonshine whisky as evidence. After the purchase of the whisky Martin and J. G. Cauldin, who was with him, were advised that they had made a sale to Government officers and that they were under arrest. After Martin had been placed under arrest he took a revolver from his pocket and aimed it at Agent Pearson, being about to fire at the latter when Agent Pearson in self-defense fired at him, killing him instantly.

Disposition of the case: The county coroner, sheriff, and Commonwealth attorney of Henry County, Va., investigated the death of Martin and decided that an inquest was unnecessary, for the reason that the facts showed Agent Pearson had shot Martin in self-defense while acting in the discharge of his official duties.

Fred Mauney

Facts of the case: On May 17, 1925, Prohibition Agent Pearson, accompanied by his brother, went to the vicinity of the home of one Robert Mauney, an alleged bootlegger, near Lenois, N. C., about 9 p. m., for the purpose of observing the place. When a short distance from the home of Mauney, Agent Pearson observed Mauney make a sale of whisky outside the house. Agent Pearson then took Mauney into custody and seized the whisky. Agent Pearson then started walking from the place with the prisoner in his custody. After he had gone a short distance he was accosted by a brother of the prisoner, one Fred Mauney, who drew a revolver, cursing Agent Pearson, and ordered him to turn the prisoner loose. In self-defense Agent Pearson then fired at the man, killing him.

Disposition of the case: Grand jury, Coldwell County, N. C., indicted Agent Pearson on the charge of murder. Jury returned verdict of "not guilty" April 21, 1926.

Charles Mills

Facts of the case: On April 5, 1925, Prohibition Agents Taylor, Watkins, Lambert, Ferguson, Cressey, and Hawks were searching for certain moonshiners who had escaped from the officers the day previous. The officers surrounded the home of one Harvey Mills, near Peterstown, Monroe County, W. Va., and shortly afterwards Sherman and Charles Mills ran from the back door. As Charles Mills ran from the house he fired at Agent Watkins. The officers returned the fire and Charles Mills was killed.

Disposition of the case: The case was reported to the county officers of Monroe County, W. Va., but in view of the fact that the officers fired in self-defense and in the discharge of their official duties no prosecution on the charge of homicide was instituted against them.

Dave M. Orr

Facts of the case: On December 15, 1924, Prohibition Agents Beacham and Palmer apprehended a car on the road 2 miles south of Ora Grande, N. Mex., transporting liquor. The occupants of the car acted in a hostile manner toward the officers and were ordered by them to hold up their hands. One of the men pointed a gun at Agent Beacham. Agent Beacham ordered Orr to drop the gun several times, but Orr refused, and in self-defense Agent Beacham shot and wounded him. He died before medical attention could be given him.

Disposition of the case: Agent Beacham was indicted by a grand jury at Alamogordo, N. Mex., on the charge of murder January 8, 1925, and was acquitted by a jury of this charge January 12, 1925.

J. G. Pittman

Facts of the case: On May 24, 1925, Prohibition Agent A. B. Seabrook, accompanied by Constable F. J. Harrington, acting on information that a certain boat that was anchored near Charleston, S. C., was about to unload a cargo of liquor, had the same under surveillance about 11 p. m. Agent Seabrook and Constable Harrington quietly crawled aboard the boat. After they had reached the deck their presence became known to a man who came out of a rear cabin of the boat. The officers immediately ordered him to hold up his hands. The man ran back into the cabin, and as the officers flashed a light upon him he pointed a revolver at them from behind a locker and fired. The officers returned the fire, killing the man, who was ascertained to be one J. G. Pittman and who had been engaged in coastwise illegal liquor traffic with his boat.

Disposition of the case: Agent Seabrook was indicted on June 27, 1925, by a grand jury of Beaufort County, S. C., on the charge of murder and carrying concealed weapons. The case was removed from State court to Federal court and a jury returned a verdict of not guilty October 17, 1925.

Filmore Sexton

Facts of the case: On November 6, 1924, Prohibition Agent Irwin, accompanied by a number of county officers, was searching for a still said to be operated by one Filmore Sexton near Huntsville, Scott County, Tenn. Upon the approach of the officers to the home of Filmore Sexton a number of men near the house began firing at the officers with high-powered rifles. As the officers had no guns except pistols, they were obliged to leave the place. The officers returned with rifles and with an additional number of county officers. The men at Filmore Sexton's place again fired on the officers. The officers returned the fire. During the firing Filmore Sexton was killed. A still in full operation was found adjacent to the house.

Disposition of the case: In view of the fact that the officers were fired on by the operators of the still, who were all desperate characters, and consequently were obliged to shoot in self-defense, no prosecution on the charge of homicide was instituted against the officers.

Jim Sneed

Facts of the case: On February 14, 1925, Prohibition Agents Day and Taylor, accompanied by a State officer, went to the home of one Jim Sneed, an alleged moonshiner, near Roderfield, W. Va. When the officers approached the home of Sneed he offered no resistance. A search of the house was made, which failed to disclose any liquor. However, the officers then went to a near-by house and, when attempting to gain entrance, Sneed left the officers without any warning, killing Agent Day. He then fired at Agent Taylor, who returned the fire, wounding Sneed. State officers came to the assistance of Agent Taylor, and during an exchange of shots Sneed was instantly killed.

Disposition of the case: In view of the fact that the officers concerned were obliged in self-defense to shoot Sneed, who had already killed one officer, no prosecution was instituted against them on the charge of homicide.

L. E. Storey

Facts of the case: On December 21, 1924, Prohibition Agent Burns, accompanied by State officers, attempted, near Cottonwood Corners, Ark., to stop a Ford automobile with three occupants believed to be transporting liquor. The car was speeded up, however, and shots were fired at the officers, who returned the fire. As a result of the shooting, L. E. Storey, one of the occupants of the car, was killed.

Disposition of the case: In view of the fact that the killing of L. E. Storey resulted from the officers firing in self-defense, no prosecution was instituted against the officers on the charge of homicide.

Leon M. Sweat

Facts of the case: On March 27, 1925, Prohibition Agents Crumbley, Hancock, Murrill, and Standau came upon one Leon M. Sweat at the latter's still at a point in Polk County, Fla. Sweat, without warning, fired and shot Agent Standau when about 10 feet from him. Agent Standau, notwithstanding his being wounded, returned the fire and killed Sweat.

Disposition of the case: A coroner's jury found that the act of Agent Standau was justifiable homicide.

Carl Thernes

Facts of the case: On March 26, 1925, Prohibition Agent Tucker, accompanied by two local officers, went to a farm where it was believed a still was being operated, 6 miles from Britton, Okla. Upon arrival at the place the officers found one Albert Berry and one Carl Thernes operating two stills. After the moonshiners were placed under arrest, Thernes started to run away, at the same time stooping over to pick up what was believed to be a revolver. Agent Tucker, believing that Thernes intended to fire at him from the near-by bushes, shot and killed him.

Disposition of the case: On March 28, 1925, a coroner's jury found that the shooting was justifiable homicide and recommended that no prosecution be instituted against Agent Tucker.

Bill Tilghman

Facts of the case: On November 1, 1924, Prohibition Agent Lynn attempted to search the Murphy dance hall at Cromwell, Okla., to ascertain if intoxicating liquors were sold there. Before he could enter the dance hall he was accosted by one Bill Tilghman, who grabbed hold of Lynn and told him he would kill him. Tilghman and Agent Lynn engaged in a scuffle, during which time Tilghman pressed his revolver against Agent Lynn's side. Agent Lynn in self-defense then shot and killed Tilghman.

Disposition of the case: An information was filed November 8, 1924, at Wewoka, charging Agent Lynn with manslaughter. A verdict of not guilty was returned by a jury May 26, 1925.

Albert R. Van Sickle

Facts of the case: On the night of November 8, 1924, Prohibition Agent Curry and a local officer executed a search warrant on the premises of one Albert R. Van Sickle, an alleged bootlegger, at Laramie, Wyo. When the officers requested admission to the house Van Sickle fired on the officer accompanying Agent Curry. Agent Curry then went to the assistance of the State officer and Van Sickle fired on him. The bullet passed through his clothing and inflicted a slight wound. Agent Curry then in defense of himself and the other officer fired and fatally wounded Van Sickle, who died as a result of his wounds the following day.

Disposition of the case: The coroner's jury found that this was a justifiable homicide and accordingly no prosecution was instituted.

Lawrence Wenger

Facts of the case: On November 19, 1924, Prohibition Agents Barton, Ely, Ford, and Stevens were searching for a still near Madonna, Md. They found what appeared to be a still in the process of construction. The agents then placed themselves in hiding near the still to see if anyone would approach the place. After some time a man came to the place. Upon ascertaining the presence of the agents he fled. The agents pursued him, firing their revolvers in the air in an effort to stop him. However, he escaped from them. A short time later, when leaving the place, they found the man who had fled, who was ascertained to be one Lawrence Wenger, lying dead from revolver wound.

Disposition of the case: Agents Barton, Ely, Ford, and Stevens were indicted by the Harford County grand jury, February term, 1925, on the charge of manslaughter. Agents acquitted March 6, 1927, in Federal court, Baltimore, Md.

Jose Alverdi

Facts of the case: On February 15, 1926, Deputy Administrator George W. Brady, with Agents P. E. DeBois, T. W. Goodwin, and C. E. Zumalt, raided an illicit distillery about 34 miles from Reno, Nev., in an extremely isolated region. Two men were at the still and upon seeing the agent fired three shots with a shotgun and ran up the gulley. The agents returned the fire and Jose Alverdi was killed.

The bullet was extracted and ascertained to have been fired by Agent T. W. Goodwin.

Disposition of the case: Agent Goodwin was indicted February 24, 1926, on a charge of manslaughter. Motion for change of venue granted. Case pending August 23, 1928.

Adam Ballinger

Facts of the case: On July 24, 1925, Prohibition Agents V. E. Grant, Owens, and J. M. Colt gave chase to one Adam Ballinger on the Asheville and Greenville Highway, North Carolina, in apprehending rum runners. The officers demanded twice that the car stop, stating they were Federal officers. Ballinger was driving a Ford roadster and he turned into the Lake Summit Road where he began shooting. One shot went through Grant's hat and the right headlight of the agent's car was hit. The agents returned the fire in self-defense. About 3 miles farther on Ballinger jumped from his car and ran. A search was made but he could not be found. Seven gallons of whiskey was found in his car. On July 27, Ballinger's brother reported that he had not returned home. Another search was made and his body was found about 150 or 200 yards from the car.

Disposition of the case: Agent Grant was indicted October term State court and case removed to Federal court. Case stricken from the docket on account of death of the defendant, Agent Grant.

John Buongore

Facts of the case: On August 1, 1925, Prohibition Agent Joseph A. Furbershaw arrested John Buongore in Havre de Grace, Md., for bootlegging. Furbershaw alleged that Buongore reached for his hip pocket and he believed he was reaching for a gun and he shot in self-defense, killing Buongore immediately.

Disposition of the case: Agent Furbershaw was arrested on August 1, 1925. Acquitted March 3, 1926, charge of murder.

Jacob Carter

Facts of the case: On April 1, 1926, Prohibition Agents J. S. Epley, Ray, Howe, Cooke, and Deputy Sheriff Dick Barker raided a still about 15 miles south of Jacksonville, Fla. When the agents and deputy sheriff approached the still Joseph Carter saw them, and when Agent Epley told him they were officers and to put up his hands, Carter started toward the mash barrels, where a rake handle was protruding, which resembled a gun. Agent Epley commanded him a second time to put up his hands, and when he refused to do so and continued toward the barrels, Agent Epley shot him in the right leg. Carter walked to the car which carried him to the hospital, and it was a great surprise to everybody when he died four days later, April 5, 1926.

Disposition of the case: At coroner's inquest the jury returned a verdict of "justifiable homicide." No criminal proceedings instituted.

John Danley

Facts of the case: On April 29, 1926, Prohibition Agents L. F. McGlothlin and C. A. Hood, with State Prohibition Agent T. M. Graveley and County Officer W. H. Vane, raided a still near Falls Mills, Tazewell County, Va. The still was located in a hollow and the officers separated. Agents McGlothlin and Hood walked to the top of the ridge, and just as they started down into the hollow they heard two shots. Thinking this was signal from the others, they started in the direction from which the shots came. They met Graveley and asked him if he had his man and he said he had. They found Vane standing near the still, and, on being questioned why he had rushed them so soon without the others having time to get to their places, he replied that the operators saw him first, and as soon as he saw some one running from the still he fired two shots. They destroyed the still, and on investigating a noise found a boy, John Danley, lying wounded about 300 to 400 yards from the still. He was rushed to a hospital, but he died before reaching it.

Disposition of the case: Agents Hood and McGlothlin were indicted on charge of murder May 8, 1926. Case nolle prossed October 28, 1927.

Stephen Kobalski

Facts of the case: On or about March 25, 1926, Prohibition Agent Ralph M. Pierce, with other agents, discovered a bootlegger and transporter of Canadian beer who had landed with his cargo on the River Rouge, Detroit, Mich. The agents undertook to arrest him and he jumped into his boat and started across the river. Agent Pierce fired upon him, several shots penetrating his boat and one striking him, from which he died. The man was found to be one Stephen Kobalski.

Disposition of the case: An information was filed March 30, 1926, charging Agent Pierce with manslaughter. "No bill" returned November, 1927, term.

Henry Nestor

Facts of the case: On September 5, 1925, Prohibition Agents Rodman Russell, O. B. Wells, and J. M. Wood raided a camp on the Ohio River near Ludlow, Ky., and arrested Robert Venn, Jerome O'Leary, Volley Soards, and Henry Nestor. Agent Wood had his pistol in his hand pointed at the ground and not at the man. Agent Russell left the camp to telephone for the patrol, leaving Agents Wells and Wood in charge. Henry Nestor struck Agent Wood in the back, knocking him down and falling on top of him. While on the ground, Nestor attacked Agent Wood, kicking him several times on the leg and attempting to secure possession of Agent Wood's pistol. Agent Wood fired a shot which penetrated Nestor's chest. Nestor again attempted to secure the pistol and Agent Wood shot him in the left temple causing death.

Disposition of the case: Coroner rendered a verdict that Agent Wood was justified in killing Henry Nestor in self-defense. The Kenton County grand jury at October term heard testimony of 10 or 12 men who had seen what occurred at the killing and rendered a verdict that Henry Nestor was shot in self-defense.

William Risk

Facts of the case: On August 14, 1925, Prohibition Agents Giles, Mitchell, Funstan, Gibbs, and Deputy Sheriff R. W. Jackson raided a still located north of Divide, Teller County, Colo. About an hour after their arrival W. M. Williams came to the still and was placed under arrest and despatched to Colorado Springs with Agent Gibbs and Deputy Sheriff Jackson. Later in the evening William Risk and N. W. Calmes came to the still. Calmes was taken into custody by Agents Mitchell and Funstan. They heard Giles order Risk to drop his gun. Agent Funstan ran to Giles's assistance. A shot was fired, Giles says, by Risk. Agent Funstan saw Risk backing into a clump of aspens and fired at him and a third shot was fired by Agent Giles. The agents at all times called on Risk to drop his gun. Risk fell fatally wounded and died within a short time.

Disposition of the case: A coronor's inquest was held August 15, 1925, and its verdict was that William Risk "came to his death from a gunshot wound at the hands of a Federal prohibition officer in the discharge of his duty."

Frank Sears

Facts of the case: At 3.30 in the afternoon of August 21, 1925, Prohibition Agent Roy V. Miller, Deputy Clarence Gossett, R. S. Young, and J. S. Fox went to the premises of Frank Sears, near Daniel Boone, Hopkins County, Ky., for the purpose of searching for stills. Sears and a girl, Mable Stanley, were there and Sears made no objection to the proposed search until he saw R. S. Young, from whom he had stolen some goods. He sprang to his feet and ran about 20 steps, drawing a revolver from his clothing and putting the barrel of the revolver over his left arm. Gossett immediately fired five or six shots and Agent Miller, hearing them, turned and fired one. Sears fell to the ground. He was taken to Hopkins County Hospital, Madisonville, Ky., and died August 21, 1925.

Disposition of the case: Indicted October 12, 1925, by grand jury of Hopkins County charged with manslaughter. Indictment dismissed at April, 1928, term of court at Paducah.

Homer Studivant

Facts of the case: About noon, February 15, 1926, Agents Epley, Ryals, and Cooke were about 9 miles northwest of Jacksonville, Duvall County, Fla., searching for stills, Agents Epley and Ryals saw a truck come to the edge of the swamp and three negroes got out, changed their clothes, and put up hip boots, and carrying two 5-gallon jugs and some wood, entered the swamp. The agents saw the smoke from the still and when within a short distance therefrom Agent Epley shouted that they were revenue men and to put up their hands. Albert McNair threw up his hands but Homer Studivant put his hand into his sweater and turned around several times to locate the sound. Both agents thought Studivant was armed and fired at the ground near him. He fell to the ground and the agents went to him immediately and discovered he had been shot in the hip. He was taken to the hospital at Jacksonville where he died the morning of February 16, 1926.

Disposition of the case: The coroner's jury made no findings as to the identity of the officer who fired the shot, but found that the agents in killing the deceased acted in the performance of their official duties.

Ronde Wade

Facts of the case: On April 17, 1926, Prohibition Agent G. C. Henson and Deputy Sheriff J. T. Alderson went to Burvin Turner's place at Owensboro, Ky., to purchase some evidence. Alderson bought one-half pint of white whisky from Burvin Turner, and G. C. Henson immediately stepped between Burvin Turner and the door leading outside and presenting his United States badge said, "Do you know that you have sold whisky to a prohibition agent?" Turner sprang forward and clinched Alderson, forcing him to the wall, searching his hip pockets, and holding his arms down on each side with his hands in his coat pockets. Alderson states he drew his pistol from his right coat pocket, believing he was in great danger of bodily harm, and fired at Turner to release and protect himself. At the same time he saw Ronde Wade pointing a revolver at Agent Henson, while Henson had his hands up and open. He states he shot Wade to save Henson's life. Wade dropped the pistol and walked out of the house to his automobile, which was parked on the opposite side of the street, fell at the side of the car, and died a few minutes later. Turner was removed to the Owensboro Hospital.

Disposition of the case: Grand jury failed to indict Agent Henson, but indicted Alderson June 22, 1926. Accordingly the case is closed so far as the prohibition agent is concerned. Verdict of not guilty as to Alderson returned May 8, 1928.

J. B. Walling

Facts of the case: On February 4, 1926, Prohibition Agents Bee Cowen and Stewart G. Davis raided an illicit still at Bunns Bluff,

Orange County, Tex. Agent Cowen observed a white man and two colored men near the still. He called to them and ordered them not to move. One negro jumped toward some guns leaning against a tree, and Cowen shot, intending to put the bullet between the negro and the tree. The bullet struck the tree and inflicted a wound in the chest of J. B. Walling, who was standing or leaning against the tree. The tree had shielded Walling from Cowen's view.

Disposition of the case: Agent Cowen was arrested February 8, 1926, charged with murder. The grand jury, Orange County, Tex., failed to indict, April 26, 1926.

Elvin Wilson

Facts of the case: At 1 p. m., September 14, 1925, Prohibition Agents Roy W. Easley, Guy Tuggle, W. C. Thompson, Albert Ransdell, and Edward Statton went to Mount Sterling, Ky., and obtained guides to take them to three moonshine stills. Agents B. F. Unthank and W. C. White joined them at 10 p. m., and the guides took them to a still about 250 yards from Elvin Wilson's home. The agents proceeded to Wilson's home to arrest him. On the way they discovered 35 gallons of whisky in smokehouse. The agents surrounded the house and stated they were Federal prohibition agents. The father of Wilson let them in and both he and Wilson's wife stated he was not there. As they looked into a dark room Wilson shot, just missing Agent Thompson, who fired one shot. Agent Easley also fired a shot. Wilson fell to the floor, fatally wounded, and died within a few minutes.

Disposition of the case: Agents were taken before a county judge and exonerated. Later the matter was investigated by a grand jury of Bath County, Ky., which grand jury failed to render a true bill.

J. A. Brinson

Facts of the case: On August 5, 1926, Prohibition Agents W. M. Simmons, C. F. Standau, A. C. Givhan, and J. H. Shirley were returning to Miami, Fla., in two automobiles after having investigated certain stills in that section. When near Homestead a car came up from the rear and occupants of the car fired into the rear car occupied by the agents. The car in which the attacking party rode and the car occupied by the agents came to a stop close together. The firing from the attacking party continued at this point, and in self-defense the agents returned the fire, killing three members of the attacking party, J. A. Brinson, M. P. Merritt, and Clyde Parrish.

Disposition of the case: On August 9, 1926, the coroner's jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to their death "at the hands of Federal prohibition agents in pursuit of their duty" and "justifiable homicide." The State attorney dropped prosecution of the agents.

Algie Carrier

Facts of the case: On January 6, 1927, Prohibition Agents Pat M. Needham and John Elliot accompanied by several county officers raided a moonshine still near Amite, La. When the officers approached the still they took into custody one man, and arriving at the site of the still they found another man, one Algie Carrier. Carrier attempted to escape from the officers and jumped over a small stream of water. Upon reaching the bank opposite to the officers who were pursuing him he drew a revolver, and in self-defense the officers fired at him, killing him instantly. It was ascertained that death resulted from shotgun wounds. Inasmuch as Agent Elliot and two county officers were armed with shotguns and fired at Carrier, it was not possible to definitely ascertain who had fired the fatal shot. Carrier had a reputation for being a dangerous character, and at the time of his death was a deserter from the United States Navy and was wanted by the authorities for alleged arson.

Lawton Carroll

Facts of the case: On March 7, 1927, about 5 a. m., Prohibition Agent R. L. Hudson, sr., of Valdosta, Ga., with his son, R. L. Hudson, jr., aged 17, and V. N. Hall, aged 20, son of the deputy sheriff of Lowndes County, went out on Lock Laurel public road to search and seize the car of Lawton Carroll (known to be implicated in liquor operations), having previously been informed that he would come over that road early the morning of March 7. When Carroll passed in his Ford roadster, Hudson, sr., recognized him, and, turning their car about, the Hudsons and Hall gave chase, overtaking him, called to him to stop. Instead, however, he continued his tortuous flight through the outskirts of the city of Valdosta, the Hudsons and Hall following. Young Hudson was standing on the running board of their car and fired three shots. The first two of them were seen to strike the ground in the rear of Carroll's car. However, a sudden lurch of their car caused the third shot to go wild, and it is presumed that this shot inflicted the fatal wound. Carroll was found speechless in his car a mile and a half farther on. He was taken to a hospital in Valdosta, where he died March 26, 1927. Two 1-gallon glass jugs of colored whisky were found in his car, and two had been thrown from the car after the shooting.

Disposition of the case: The Hudsons were committed to jail on a charge of murder and the case transferred to Federal court. Case to be heard September 19, 1927. (Agent Hudson resigned June 15, 1927.) Hall was discharged. Case against Hudson continued by order of court April, 1928. Both of the Hudsons were acquitted October, 1928.

F. M. Ferguson

Facts of the case: On October 25, 1926, Prohibition Agent Mack B. Lilly was patrolling the Piedmont Road, Huntington, W. Va., when one Earl Best, a well-known bootlegger, passed him in an automobile at a high rate of speed. Agent Lilly pursued the violator in his car, and while attempting to pass a truck his automobile struck and fatally injured one F. M. Ferguson, who was crossing the road at that point. The accident occurred at approximately 6 p. m., after darkness had set in, and it was made further unavoidable, due to the fact that it was not possible to see Ferguson until it was too late to stop the automobile. It was stated that Agent Lilly bears the reputation of being a careful and expert driver. Ferguson died October 26, 1926, as a result of his injury.

Disposition of the case: Agent Lilly's first trial resulted in a "hung jury." Convicted at second trial on charge of involuntary manslaughter. Fined October 3, 1927, $100 and costs of both trials. Case appealed. November 8, United States Court of Appeals reversed the decision of the lower court and ordered a new trial for Agent Lilly.

Oliver Gill

Facts of the case: On April 2, 1927, Agents Wright and Edgar J. Jones and A. S. Campbell left Clarksdale and went to Lake View, Miss., to investigate a still anonymously reported to be owned and operated by John Kirkman and Oliver Gill. After getting past three negro lookouts and wading a branch, they were within 10 or 15 feet of the still. They commanded all the men to surrender and throw up their hands. Three of the white men, George Henry Williams, R. L. English, and Mike Lombardy, surrendered; the other white man, Oliver Gill, attempted to make his escape by running. Agent Jones pursued him for about 50 yards, rapidly gaining on him, at which time Gill, the moonshiner, seeing that Jones was about to overtake him, attempted to shoot Agent Jones with a pistol, at which time Jones fired on him with a shotgun, two bullets taking effect in the right side. Gill fell on the spot and lived only a short time, 10 or 15 minutes. Gill was a notorious moonshiner, and at the time of his death was under an injunction bond of $500.

Disposition of the case: Agent Jones indicted May 15, 1927, in State court. Quashed April 18, 1928, upon motion of United States attorney.

Lewis Gregory

Facts of the case: On November 7, 1926, Prohibition Agent W. B. Stone, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff Thompson Cornwell and one J. E. Russell, searched the premises of Alex and Lewis Gregory near Graveltown, Ky., where a quantity of liquor was found. The officers came upon Lewis Gregory on the road near his home, and when the officers attempted to place him under arrest he resisted them and hit Agent Stone with rocks. In self-defense Agent Stone shot and wounded Gregory, the shot taking effect in his leg. Loss of blood due to the wound resulted in Gregory's death within a short time.

James Thomas Hall

Facts of the case: On May 5, 1927, Prohibition Agent W. H. Gillespie went, at the request of Sheriff W. C. Holbrook, of Elmore County, Ala., to assist him in a raid on a still located about 12 miles west of Tallassee and 12 miles east of Wetumpka, Ala. They were accompanied by State Officer H. L. Nelson and Chief Deputy Sheriff A. W. Varner. Arriving early at the side of the still, they concealed themselves and waited for the operators to arrive. James Thomas Hall and Arthur Oliver arrived about 5.30 a. m. and started operations. Oliver was carrying a Winchester pump shotgun. The officers surrounded the still and waited until about 9 o'clock to close in on them. Sheriff Holbrook was discovered when about 30 feet from the still. He commanded them to surrender. Oliver grabbed up the Winchester and fired. Holbrook fired at Oliver, part of the load striking him on the left side of his face. With the other operators he then started to run. Officer Nelson commanded them to halt and commanded Oliver to drop his gun; at the same time Nelson fired at him, striking him in the chest. Hall who was directly behind Oliver was fatally wounded, though it is not positively known who fired the fatal shot. James Thomas Hall died on the way to Wetumpka, Ala. Oliver was rushed to a hospital in Montgomery, Ala., where his condition was pronounced serious. Herbert Hall was placed in jail at Wetumpka, Ala.

Disposition of the case: It is the information of this office that this is a closed incident and there will be no prosecution of the officers in the State court.

Wade Hampton

Facts of the case: On the night of September 25, 1926, Prohibition Agents A. G. Sutterfield and P. T. Graves, accompanied by several local officers, entered a negro dance hall near Chestang Station, Mobile County, Ala., for the purpose of searching the place for liquor. During the search a negro was seen to leave the hall and stand outside a window, acting in a suspicious manner. Agent Sutterfield approached him and attempted to search him. The negro, one Wade Hampton, pulled a revolver and fired at the agent. In self-defense, the agent returned the fire, killing him instantly.

Disposition of the case: The matter was presented before a grand jury of Mobile County, which body did not return an indictment, thereby exonerating Agent Sutterfield.

J. J. Howard

Facts of the case: On March 18, 1927, Agent W. S. Newman, acting upon information of under-cover operatives, went to a point 4 or 5 miles west of Canton, Madison County, Miss., where the delivery of 10 gallons of whisky was to be made by one J. J. Howard, a notorious bootlegger, whom the county sheriff was anxious should be apprehended. Shortly after Newman's arrival Howard came up in an automobile. He alighted and came around to the car in which Agent Newman sat, placed a shotgun beside the car and a revolver was in scabbard in plain view on his person. He offered a pint of whisky as a sample, stating that he had moved his still over the Madison County line. Agent Newman got out of the car and covered Howard with his revolver, showing him his badge and stating that he was a Government officer and that he was under arrest. Howard refused to submit to arrest and in a fraction of a second had drawn his pistol and attempted to fire on Agent Newman. At the same time Agent Newman fired, the bullet taking effect just above the collar bone. Three other shots were fired entering Howard's chest. Howard was instantly killed. The examining physician stated that the first shot was fatal.

Disposition of the case: Agent Newman was exonerated by a coroner's jury, as he shot purely in self-defense.

E. P. Ingmire

Facts of the case: On April 7, 1927, Agent George H. Hudson and Informant Farley were detailed on duty at San Pedro, Calif. Agent Hudson was not familiar with the roads, but Informant Farley was, so he was assigned to drive the car. Farley had been working around in this vicinity and had developed a number of "leads," which is was desirable to close up. At 12.55 on the morning of April 7, 1927, continuing these investigations, Agent Hudson, accompanied by three marines, Farley (who was driving the car), and a Mrs. McAggister, riding on the seat with Farley, had a slight collision with a Ford coupé at a point on the San Perdo-Wilmington paved highway, near the Union Oil Co. office and plant. A tire on the Ford coupé blew out, attracting some attention, and immediately after the Government car started it struck a Dodge touring car in which were a Mr. E. P. Ingmire and wife, of San Pedro, Calif. Mr. Ingmire was killed and his wife seriously injured.

Disposition of the case: Grand jury of the county indicted Hudson and Farley and the other occupants of the car on a charge of first-degree murder; Farley held without bond, Hudson on a bond of $25,000. Farley plead guilty involuntary manslaughter September 14, up for sentence September 19, 1927. Farley sentenced to a period of from one year to life in San Quentin prison. Case against Hudson dismissed in Federal court at Los Angeles September 7, 1927.

Millard Jamerson

Facts of the case: On the morning of June 15, 1927, at 2 a. m., Prohibition Agent W. H. Wright, Deputy Sheriff Elzie Carr, and Jack Ballard made the second trip to a still in operation about 3 miles east of Troy, Pontotoe County, Miss. About 50 yards from the still they stopped and listened, and in a few moments heard a great deal of talking at the still. The officers concealed themselves about 30 steps from the still and there remained for some time. Five men were at work at the still. As daylight approached the officers rushed the still. Carr at the left, Ballard at the right, and Agent Wright to enter at the center. Crossing an open space the moonshiners discovered the officers coming, and some of them fled, disregarding the command of the officers to halt. Millard Jamerson turned a 32-20 special Smith & Wesson pistol in his hand and attempted to fire at Agent Wright, at which time Wright fired on him with a 32-38 Winchester rifle, striking him on the right temple, the bullet coming out on the opposite side of his head, killing Jamerson instantly. John Lee Coleburn and J. T. Ernest were wounded and Reese Coleburn made his escape. It was found that the killing took place in Chickasaw County, just about 100 yards from Lee County line.

Disposition of the case: Case removed from State to Federal court. Agent Wright gave bond for appearance before Federal grand jury at Aberdeen, Miss., first Monday in October, 1927. No action taken by Federal grand jury.

Thomas Johnson

Facts of the case: On March 4, 1927, Eugene S. Forsythe, a customs border inspector and prohibition agent, in company with Deputy United States Marshal S. A. Johnson, left Pensacola, Fla., about 1 p. m. for the purpose of raiding a still in a swamp near Eleven Mile Creek. A mile from the still the car bogged and they got out and walked. A man standing near a small fire ran toward the still as soon as he saw the officers. Agent Forsythe pursued him. On approaching the still, two other men started running through the swamp. Forsythe fired his gun once to let Johnson know the still had been found and continued pursuing the two men who had been at the still. After running about a quarter of a mile the men split, one running to the left, the other to the right. Forsythe followed the one who turned to the right, and a short distance ahead, the man, Thomas Johnson, plunged into a creek. Forsythe had fired his gun twice in the air. Upon reaching the bank of the creek Forsythe called to the man to come back. At the second call he said he would. As he swam toward Forsythe he sank. Forsythe made an effort to save the man, almost being overcome by the cold himself. He was not successful, and came to the conclusion that the man had drowned.

Disposition of the case: At the coroner's inquest Forsythe was acquitted, but upon his return to Escambia County, Johnson's father swore out a warrant charging him with manslaughter. He was arrested and placed under $1,000 bond. Not yet had his preliminary hearing, March 22, 1927. April 17, 1928, evidence thought to be insufficient upon which to present such a charge.

James Lee

Facts of the case: Killed May 14, 1927, at Detroit, Mich., when a prohibition patrol boat crashed into a launch. (Details not yet available.) The case involving Prohibition Agent August Lottner pending in United States district court, October 1, 1927.

Disposition of the case: Agent Lottner dismissed from the service May 14, 1927.

Mildred Lee

Facts of the case: Killed May 14, 1927, at Detroit, Mich., when a prohibition patrol boat crashed into a launch. (Details not yet available.) The case involving Prohibition Agent August Lottner, pending in United States district court, October 1, 1927.

Disposition of the case: Agent Lottner dismissed from the service May 14, 1927.

Walter Lorance

Facts of the case: On the morning of June 23, 1927, Agents Clay Conaster and W. B. Stone, accompanied by Deputy Sheriff J. C. Walker and Sheriff S. D. Holmes, made a raid in Coffee County, Tenn., about 12 miles from Manchester, Tenn. The still was located about 5 a. m., and the officers soon saw two men working at the still. Agent Conaster rushed the still and commanded the men to surrender. Instead of complying they started to run and Agents Stone and Conaster gave chase. As the agents gained on the fleeing men one of them, Walter Lorance, turned on them with an open knife in his hand, refusing to halt and swearing and threatening to fight it out. Several shots were fired, and as Agent Stone came nearer Lorance he stumbled and fell. Lorance started toward Stone, but one of the shots had pierced Lorance's breast, killing him instantly. W. E. Stacey, the other violator, was captured by Sheriff Holmes. Lorance was known as a desperate character and had openly made threats to fight if any officers attempted to arrest him.

Disposition of the case: Preliminary hearing set for July 16, 1927, at Manchester, and if the agents are indicted in State court, the case will be removed to Federal court. August 22, 1928, jury returned a verdict of not guilty.

Cecil McClure

Facts of the case: On July 21, 1926, Prohibition Agents J. C. Crisp and Charles Branton, accompanied by a deputy United States marshal, proceeded to Tomotla, Cherokee County, N. C., to search the premises occupied by a family named McClure, alleged moonshiners. While engaged in the search of the premises, Cecil McClure and Charles McClure attempted to carry off the whisky that had been found on the premises by the officers. When prevented from doing this, they rushed into the house, where Cecil McClure obtained a shotgun and pursued Agent Crisp to the front of the house, where he drew the gun on the agent. The agent, in self-defense, fired at McClure, killing him instantly.

Disposition of the case: Agent J. C. Crisp was indicted July 21, 1926, on the charge of murder. The case was transferred from the State to Federal court. Acquitted November 28, 1927, by Federal grand jury at Asheville, N. C.

M. P. Merritt

Facts of the case: On August 5, 1926, Prohibition Agents W. M. Simmons, C. F. Standau, A. C. Givhan, and J. H. Shirley were returning to Miami, Fla., in two automobiles after having investigated certain stills in that section. When near Homestead a car came up from the rear and occupants of the car fired into the rear car occupied by the agents. The car in which the attacking party rode and the car occupied by the agents came to a stop close together. The firing from the attacking party continued at this point, and in self-defense the agents returned the fire, killing three members of the attacking party, M. P. Merritt, Clyde Parrish, and J. A. Brinson.

Disposition of the case: On August 9, 1926, the coroner's jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to their deaths "at the hands of Federal prohibition agents in pursuit of their duty" and "justifiable homicide."

Burrell Morris

Facts of the case: On November 23, 1926, Agent George H. Wentworth, accompanied by Agent D. D. Magnan, arrested Burrell Morris in the act of delivering a load of liquor in Berkeley, Calif. They started for the police station in the agent's car, with Agent Wentworth driving and Morris seated between him and Agent Magnan. After going some distance Morris placed his gun at Wentworth's side and commanded him to stop the car. When Wentworth did not comply Morris shot him through the side. Morris then grappled with Agent Magnan and during the scuffle the car was stopped and all got out. Although wounded, Agent Wentworth pulled his gun and shot Morris through the heart, killing him almost instantly. Agent Wentworth was fatally wounded and died the next morning.

Disposition of the case: The coroner's jury found that Morris died from a wound in the heart, inflicted by a Federal prohibition agent, who himself was killed, in the performance of his official duties.

William Niedermeier

Facts of the case: On December 3, 1926, Prohibition Agents Ernest L. Benway and George R. Pratt were assigned to patrol work in the vicinity of Silver Creek and Huron River, Mich. While watching the course used by smugglers a motor boat came into view which appeared to contain kegs of beer. The boat was hailed and told to come in. Two men in the boat failed to pay attention to the officers and Agent Benway then fired across the bow of the boat three times. After the third shot one of the occupants of the boat, who was ascertained to be one Crooks, shut the motor off and advised that they would come in. Crooks then called to the other man in the boat, who it was afterwards learned was Neidermeier, to hand him one of the guns that were visible in the front part of the boat. Neidermeier made a motion as if to reach the guns back to Crooks. At the same time Crooks leaned forward as if to receive the guns. These actions caused Agents Benway and Pratt to anticipate that Crooks was going to fire upon them; therefore they fired at the boat simultaneously, resulting in Neidermeier being hit and fatally wounded. He was taken to a hospital where he died December 21, 1926.

Disposition of the case: Benway and Pratt arrested December 24, 1926. March 30, 1927, Pratt was dismissed by the court. Benway found guilty of assault and battery, sentenced to six months to three years with recommendation for the minimum term. District attorney's office requesting authority of Attorney General to appeal case. Agent still under suspension August 6, 1927, awaiting outcome of appeal of case. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed conviction of Agent Benway May 16, 1928.

Clyde Parrish

Facts of the case: On August 5, 1926, Prohibition Agents W. M. Simmons, C. F. Standau, A. C. Givhan, and J. H. Shirley were returning to Miami, Fla., in two automobiles after having investigated certain stills in that section. When near Homestead a car came up from the rear and occupants of the car fired into the rear car occupied by the agents. The car in which the attacking party rode and the car occupied by the agents came to a stop close together. The firing from the attacking party continued at this point, and in self-defense, the agents returned the fire, killing three members of the attacking party, M. P. Merritt, Clyde Parrish, and J. A. Brinson.

Disposition of the case: On August 9, 1926, the coroner's jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to their deaths "at the hands of Federal prohibition agents in pursuit of their duty," and "justifiable homicide." The State attorney dropped prosecution of the agents.

Jeff Pitts

Facts of the case: On September 23, 1926, Prohibition Agent W. S. Newman, accompanied by several local officers, proceeded to raid a still near Wesson, Miss. The still was surrounded by the officers. The officers commanded two men, who were found at the still, to hold up their hands, but instead of complying they attempted to run away. Agent Newman fired and fatally wounded one of the men, ascertained to be Jeff Pitts, who died soon after he was removed to the hospital. Both Jeff Pitts and Oliver G. Waldrop, who was with him at the still, bear the reputation of being notorious moonshiners.

Disposition of the case: No prosecution (criminal) instituted.

Alex Tidwell

Facts of the case: On May 26, 1927, Agents O. H. Warren and G. P. Armour left Jackson, Tenn., accompanied by Sheriff J. O. Dixon and his deputy, R. B. Rinks, of Savannah, proceeded to a point in Hardin County about eight miles east, and destroyed a still there on the property of Jim Jerrold, sr. Jerrold was apprehended and taken to Savannah and given a hearing and released on bond. They then went to another point eight miles southeast in Hardin County, where they located another still. No one was there and after waiting a short time they seized and destroyed the still and continued their search for other stills in the same locality. As they were returning to the livery some one began shooting in the woods about 500 yards ahead of them, and in their best judgment at or near the still they had just destroyed. Going on to this point, found two white men at the still site; one escaped in the undergrowth, but Alex Tidwell did not run but walked away with a six-shooter in his hand. At the second call to halt, he turned to Sheriff Dixon and began shooting at him and at Agent Warren. Both Agents Warren and Armour shot at Tidwell once, and Warren wrested his gun, a 32–20 Colt six-shooter, from his hand. At the same time Tidwell showed that the shots were fatal, and died without saying anything. Sheriff Dixon looked after the body, the agents reporting the affair at the Memphis office. Tidwell had a reputation of being a dangerous character and a fugitive from justice for many years.

Disposition of the case: It appears that there will be no criminal prosecution against the agents.

Mack Turner

Facts of the case: On the afternoon of April 28, 1927, a raiding party, which consisted of Deputy Sheriff Felix Lee, Gus Dixon, chief of police of Prichard, Ala., and Prohibition Agents P. T. Graves and Harvey T. Hughes, proceeded to a point about 32 miles north of Mobile, in Mobile County, Ala., and 5 miles east of Gulf Crost. A still had previously been located by Agents Sutterfield and Ford. The men in the party took up positions which would make it impossible for anyone to escape. Agent Sutterfield went near enough to hear talking and see three white men and one negro working at the still, Mack Turner, Eph Lewis, E. Newburn, and Robert Williams, the negro. Turner had a shotgun in his hand. When they finally sat down, Sutterfield rushed toward the still and commanded the operators to surrender in the name of the law. They did not heed, but started to run in different directions. Lewis and Newburn ran in the direction of Agent Hughes location and he captured both of them. Sutterfield fired two shots in the direction of the negro. Other shots were heard, probably fired by Agent Graves and Deputy Lee. The still was destroyed, prisoners taken into custody, and two days later news of finding Mack Turner dead in the location of the still was brought to the officers. It is not known just how Turner came to his death. Doctor Hale, the coroner of Mobile County found six bullet wounds in the body of Turner. It is thought neither Agent Graves or Hughes were so stationed as to have participated in the killing. Case is being investigated by the State grand jury and will be removed to Federal court if the officers are indicted.

Disposition of the case: "No bill" returned against Agent Graves by State grand jury.

Arnold Wise

Facts of the case: On the morning of April 29, 1927, having received information that a still was being operated at Horse Pen Cove, about 20 miles from Welch, McDowell County, W. Va., a party composed of Prohibition Agents Taylor and Dillow, of the sixth district, Prohibition Agent McGlothlin, of Virginia, State Prohibition Agent Watkins, and Sid and Will Bane, deputy sheriffs of Tazwell County, Va., proceeded to the vicinity of Horse Pen Cove. Upon their arrival they divided into two squads, Agent McGlothlin, Watkins, and one of the sheriffs forming one squad, and the remainder of the party the other. McGlothlin's squad found a trail which they followed leading them to a still in operation. They surrounded it and ordered the men to put up their hands. Arnold Wise, one of the operators, ran from the still pursued by one of the officers who commanded him to stop. The other man, whose name is Spriggs, complied with the request to put up his hands. McGlothlin states that he saw Wise draw a revolver and rest it on his left arm as though taking aim and at that time several shots were fired and Wise fell mortally wounded, from which wound he died in a short time.

Disposition of the case: No action taken.

Albert Edmunds

Facts of the case: On June 10, 1928, about 9.40 p. m., Prohibition Agent Grady Cobb of Columbus, Ga., and Policemen A. L. Carroll and D. C. Bland of Phenix City, Ala., went to the Huckaby Grocery Store at 311 Sixth Street, Phenix City, Ala., for the purpose of making an investigation. The back room of this building is used as a bar room where whisky is sold at all times. Albert Edmunds was in the front part of the store as the officers entered and called out a warning to those in the back room. The officers found two soldiers in civilian clothes in the back room. One of them was drinking whisky from a pint bottle. Agent Cobb took the bottle away from him, and told both the soldiers and Edmunds that they would have to come with him. While looking for a cork to put in the bottle, Edmunds grabbed the bottle from Agent Cobb and ran from the back room, pouring out the whisky as he ran. He then threw the bottle down and attempted to climb the high fence which incloses the premises. Agent Cobb caught him by the coat and pulled him back. In the encounter which ensued Cobb struck at Edmunds' head with his revolver, but in the darkness hit his shoulder and the gun was discharged by the impact. The bullet severed the jugular vein and Edmonds died while being taken to a local hospital.

Disposition of the case: Cobb was given a preliminary hearing June 14 and 15 at Phenix City, Ala., before Mayor Floyd of that city, who refused to release Agent Cobb on bond. He is confined in jail, at Seale, Ala., until the grand jury convenes about September 15, 1928. Indicted in State court for second-degree murder; case removed to Federal court in September, 1928.

Elmer Fulton

Facts of the case: On August 4, 1927, Agent Charles T. Warner, accompanied by O. T. Mason, J. C. Pane, Lon Wilson, and W. Haskins, went to Pilcher, Okla., to make a buy from W. Johnson and Elmer Fulton. Haskins, observed by Warner and Mason, purchased 2 half-pints of liquor which was put in his car, and Johnson offered to sell him all the liquor he wanted. Haskins said they would take 5 gallons, but would have to come back for it later. Johnson got his partner, Fulton, and proceeded to dig up five 1-gallon jugs of whisky which were concealed in a tailing pile back of Johnson's home. The jugs were put in two sacks, Johnson carrying one and Fulton the other. As they went to Haskins's car, Warner drove up and, jumping from his car, said, "Boys, you are under arrest, we are Federal officers," and went toward Fulton, who started to strike him with the sack containing the jugs of whisky. Warner said, "Boys, don't do that," and Fulton dropped the sack and ran. Warner gave chase, firing three shots in the ground. In going over an embankment he slipped in the mud and fell, his pistol being discharged as he did so. This shot hit Fulton in the left shoulder blade and passed out through the right breast. A doctor and an ambulance were called. Fulton died on the way to the hospital.

Disposition of the case: State prosecution in progress August 6, 1927. Released by United States court on application of habeas corpus proceedings August 29, 1927. Judge Kennamer discharged the agent October 21, 1921, saying the act was justifiable.

Charles P. Gundlacht

Facts of the case: On September 16, 1927, Agents Dano M. Jackley, John T. Fisher, Robert F. Cornett, and Joseph R. Brewer proceeded to the farm of Charles P. Gundlacht, about 3 miles from Leonardtown, Md., to make an investigation of a reported still and home-brew manufacturing plant. When the agents started toward the house to notify the occupants of their purpose, Gundlacht came out of the house armed with a shotgun. He was told that they were Federal prohibition agents, and he replied: "I know who you are, and I don't give a ——." After telling Agent Fisher he was going to shoot him, he aimed with the shotgun and wounded Agent Fisher, and fired twice later with a revolver he had in his hip pocket. Agent Brewer then fired the shot that killed Gundlacht.

Disposition of the case: Agent Brewer acquitted February 17, 1928. Cases against Jackley, Fisher, and Cornett nolle prossed.

Lee Prudman

Facts of the case: On or about January 9, 1928, Agents Charles F. Cooley and R. N. Wilson, assigned to the eastern district of Arkansas, raided a large distillery near Julius, Crittenden County, Ark. One white man and five negroes were operating the still. All escaped except Lee Prudman, negro, who had a shotgun and refused to surrender, and was killed. Coroner's jury rendered a verdict that Prudman came to his death by resisting officers attempting to arrest him.

Mike Soytick

Facts of the case: On May 10, 1928, Agent James C. Capen and his assistant, Percy Epperson, armed with a search warrant, went to the ranch of Mike Soytick, near Cumberland, Wyo. They found a still and destroyed it and then placed Soytick under arrest. Soytick asked permission to go into the house and get his coat and hat, and when he reappeared he had a rifle with which he shot Agent Capen through the abdomen. Epperson and Soytick then engaged in a duel, in which Epperson sent six shots into the body of Soytick. Epperson then placed Agent Capen and Soytick in Capen's car and took them to the hospital at Kemmerer, Wyo., but both men died just as the hospital was reached.

Disposition of the case: Epperson exonerated at Coroner's inquest.

Douglass Smith

Facts of the case: On or about 3 p. m., January 28, 1928, Agent George T. Griffin, armed with a search warrant and accompanied by Agent S. M. Statton and Investigator E. A. Larkin, called at the home of Douglass Smith, a colored man, living at 1506 Arthur Street, Louisville, Ky. Receiving no response to their knocks, though faces had been seen at the window, Investigator Larkin forced an entrance. Smith immediately drew a Luger pistol. Larkin protected himself by grabbing the pistol and turning the muzzle from the line of his person. In the struggle which ensued Larkin was knocked down by a blow from the pistol. Smith then fired at Larkin, but as Larkin was moving about on the floor, the bullet missed him and went through the floor. Agents Griffin and Statton gained entrance about this time and both opened fire—Statton firing one shot and Griffin two. It is assumed that Statton missed but that both of Griffin's shots took effect and resulted in Smith being killed. It was found, upon examination of Smith's body, that he was armed with an additional pistol, loaded, a 5-inch dirk knife, and two other large pocketknives.

Disposition of the case: Agents Griffin and Statton and Investigator Larkin were exonerated of the manslaughter charge on the ground of self-defense; trial held in Louisville, January, 1928.

Ben Bailey

Facts of the case: On August 31, 1928, during the afternoon Agents R. W. Graham and J. T. Wilson, accompanied by Deputy Marshal F. B. Lister, went to Florence County, S. C., to arrest a negro, Ben Bailey, who with three other negroes about August 17 had resisted arrest for having liquor in an automobile. They assaulted Marshal Lister and three of the negroes escaped, but Ben Bailey was recognized by Marshal Lister and Bailey's brother, John, was arrested at that time. It was in connection with this assault that the prohibition agents assisted Lister. The officers proceeded to Bailey's house and asked him to come out, informing him who they were and that they had a warrant for his arrest. Bailey dashed wildly about the house, and out a rear door. He ran down a road leading from the house and the agents gave chase. Agent Wilson fired a shot in the air to stop Bailey and as he did so he stumbled and fell. As Agent Graham approached, Bailey, with his hand in his pocket and swearing, was coming toward Agent Wilson, whereupon Agent Graham fired at Bailey fatally wounding him. Bailey died as the agents and deputy marshal were carrying him to a hospital.

Disposition of the case: A coroner's inquest was set for September 5, 1928.

Bernard Cottrell

Facts of the case: On July 20, 1928, Agents Ezra Zirkle, V. L. Skeen, and T. L. Cox left Charleston, W. Va., for Clendenin; there Constable Wells joined them and they proceeded to Little Blue Creek in Kanawha County, about 5 or 6 miles from Clendenin where some moonshine mash had been located the day previous. The agents reached the scene about 10.30 a. m. and saw two men operating a still. When about 20 steps away the men saw the agents and ran, the agents gave chase. In the chase five or six shots were fired, one striking Bernard Cottrell, one of the fleeing moonshiners. He fell on his face seriously wounded and lived but a short time—the agents and the other moonshiner, Opie Hershberger, doing all they could for the dying man. At the coroner's a bullet was extracted from Cottrell's back, which had been fired from a 32–30 caliber pistol. Agent T. L. Cox was the only one carrying a gun of that kind. Cox was arrested charged with murder and confined in the Kanawha County jail. A few days later he was released on $5,000 bail and bound over to the grand jury at the October term.

Disposition of the case: Agent Cox was acquitted December 20, 1928.

John Hysler

Facts of the case: During the afternoon of September 26, 1928, in response to a telephone call from Customs Inspector Pete Hopkins, Agents Hope King and Tim Eason went to the vicinity of the Jacksonville Bridge near Jacksonville, Fla., to stop a Chrysler roadster, alleged to be a liquor car, which had eluded the inspector. In the events which followed, Agent King was so seriously injured, it was not possible to obtain a statement from him. John Hysler, one of the occupants, and the driver of the car, was mortally wounded. An eye-witness, a man who was painting the clock on the bridge, stated that Jerry McInarnay, the other man in the car, threatened Agent King with an iron tool, as he, King, stood on the running board of the car. Hysler was pointing his gun at Agent King directly in line with the position of the witness, on the bridge. Agent King was either thrown or knocked from the running board, and as the car proceeded, Hysler pointed his gun at Agent King from the back of the car, Agent King drew his revolver from the holster and both men fired simultaneously. Both shots took effect, Agent King being shot through the torso. The firing continued. Hysel's second shot evidently broke both bones in Agent King's ankle. Jerry McInarnay, who ran from the car during the exchange of shots, returned and attempted to drive on. He was stopped, the car and Hysler, who was almost unconscious, searched. Liquor was found. McInarnay was arrested on a charge of illegal transportation and violation of section 65, United States Penal Code.

Disposition of the case: Agent King exonerated by State grand jury, November 24, 1928.

Jess Hughes

Facts of the case: On August 2, 1928, at 11.30 a. m., Agents Charles F. Cooley, McBurns, and Dave F. Brown, and Deputy Sheriff Virgil Landers, of Saline County, Mo., went to a still 1 mile north of Owensville, in Saline County, where they found two men operating a still. Jess Hughes, an ex-convict, was one of the men. It was agreed that Agent Brown would rush the still and call to the men to surrender. When he did so Jess Hughes attempted to shoot Agent Brown with a .38-caliber automatic pistol. Just as Brown pulled his gun he was shot and killed by Agent Burns, who shot for the purpose of saving Brown's life, whom he saw Hughes was intending to shoot. The other operator at the still was apprehended.

Disposition of the case: A coroner's jury at Benton, Mo., exonerated Agent M. C. Burns, saying the shooting was justifiable.

Jim Ratliff

Facts of the case: On August 15, 1928, Agents L. B. Moreley and Sam Carden, assisted by five State officers, went to the neighborhood of Clarks Creek, Washington County, Tenn., as it had been reported that moonshine whisky in large quantities was being manufactured and transported from that section. Upon approaching a place where dense smoke was rising in the woods the officers came upon three men operating a still. They were commanded to surrender, but instead opened fire, which the officers returned. In all, 20 to 25 shots were fired, and when the firing ceased one Jim Ratliff was found to be severely wounded and bleeding profusely from a severed artery. Every aid was given him, but he died a short time after reaching the hospital in Johnson City, Tenn. E. M. Ratliff, a brother of the dead man, and J. C. Forester, the other moonshiners, were captured. They were arraigned and plead guilty to conspiracy and bound over to the United States court under $1,000 bonds each.

Jose Villegas

Facts of the case: On the afternoon of July 14, Agent Robert L. Knight, assisted by Pete Cook, an informer, proceeded to Santa Maria to work out a lead concerning Jose Villegas, a Mexican, living near Guadalupe, Calif., reputed to be leading liquor violator in that section. Agent Knight and Mr. Cook contracted with Mr. Jose Villegas to deliver 20 gallons of liquor to them. He refused to deliver it in Santa Maria. The point of delivery was decided to be about 2 miles north of Nipsomo, Calif., the exact spot being just 12 miles north of Santa Maria. At 7.30 p. m., on the night of July 14, Agents Knight and Cook proceeded to the meeting place. Villegas and his stepson drove up and deposited the kegs of whisky on the ground near the side of the road. Gomez, the stepson, drove the car down the road about 100 feet; Villegas remained with the whisky. Agents Knight and Cook drove to the spot where Villegas was awaiting. After the whisky was turned over to him, Agent Knight exhibited his badge and placed Villegas under arrest. They then started to walk toward Villegas's car when he started to run, calling in Spanish to Gomez, who was sitting in the car; upon reaching the car Gomez handed a shotgun to Villegas out of the left-front door of the sedan. As Villegas turned to Agent Knight with the leveled gun the muzzle caught in the open door of the sedan and momentarily checked the action, giving Agent Knight time to draw his pistol, and at the same time he ordered Villegas to drop the shotgun. This order was not heeded and Villegas continued to wheel around toward Agent Knight with the leveled shotgun. Agent Knight then fired his pistol and Villegas dropped to the ground, the gun flying from his hands. The wounded man was rushed to the hospital in Santa Maria, where he was immediately operated on. The operation was unsuccessful and Villegas died about 11 p. m. Agent Knight reported to Chief of Police Feland, who refused to place him under arrest. The subsequent investigation brought out the fact that Villegas had been convicted of liquor violations, both in Santa Barbara and San Luis Obisbo, Calif., that he was considered a dangerous character, and that Agent Knight had been warned to be exceedingly careful in dealing with him.

Disposition of the case: Agent Knight was completely exonerated, as the coroner's jury rendered a verdict to the effect that Agent Robert L. Knight was acting in the performance of his official duties when he fired the fatal shot.

Joseph O. McGuire

Facts of the case: On February 3, 1929, Agent Charles F. Peterson was deputized by Sheriff Edwin A. Baily, of Laramie, Wyo., to assist in capturing Joseph O. McGuire, who had committed a murder and was resisting arrest. Armed with tear gas bombs and guns the party proceeded to 168 North Railroad Street, Laramie, Wyo., which was the place where the murder took place. In the action which followed Agent Peterson shot through a door which McGuire slammed in his face and the bullet struck McGuire, inflicting a wound from which he later died. (A quantity of liquor was found at this place which also had a reputation as a gambling resort.)

Disposition of the case: At the coronor's inquest February 6, 1929, Agent Peterson was absolved from all blame. A verdict was rendered to the effect that Agent Peterson was acting in the discharge of his official duties and was protecting his own life when he fired the shot which resulted in the death of McGuire.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the part of the House on the bill H. R. 1 may have until midnight to-night to file their report.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. I have been asked the question by Members on this side and I have been unable to answer. I will ask the gentleman if it is his purpose to call up the conference report to-morrow in case the Senate acts upon it this afternoon?

Mr. TILSON. That is my hope.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman hopes to bring it back to-morrow?

Mr. TILSON. I am not sure that it will be ready, but in case it is ready I have asked permission so that we may be able to consider it to-morrow.

Mr. HASTINGS. If it were agreed to by the Senate it would not be necessary to have action on the part of the House.

Mr. TILSON. Yes; it would be necessary to have action by the House.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the Senate receded this afternoon it would not necessitate any further action on the part of the House.

Mr. TILSON. The conference report will have to be acted upon by the House before the Senate can take any action.

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection to unanimous consent, but I would like to ask the gentleman to take us into his confidence on this side as well as on that side as to what will be done to-morrow and the rest of the week?

Mr. TILSON. For to-day I know of none other than the unanimous-consent bills to be called up. Now that there is a full attendance in the House there may be a number of unanimous-consent requests concerning different matters.

Mr. GARNER. Is there anything in contemplation for the balance of the week?

Mr. TILSON. Unless we receive something from the Senate, I have no knowledge of anything else.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that the conferees on the agricultural relief bill may have until midnight to-night in which to file their report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOWARD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. HOWARD. For the purpose of preferring a unanimous-consent request for permission to speak before the House for 15 minutes to-morrow morning following the time allotted to one of my colleagues.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the address to-morrow of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] he may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech that I expected to deliver, with some comments of one of the home papers, on my attitude with the farm organizations in support of President Hoover.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, the same being some observations with reference to the debenture plan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, there are two phases, and only two, of this debenture question. One is political, the other is economic.

The political phase revolves around the question as to whether or not the enactment of some form of a debenture scheme of handling agricultural exports is necessary in order to carry out pledges made by the party platform and the party candidates in the last campaign. It may be best answered by quoting from the platform adopted at Kansas City June 14, 1928, one year ago, to a day. I shall not read the entire agricultural plank of that platform because the major portion of it is not at all pertinent to the question immediately before us, inasmuch as it was a recital of what the Republican Party had already done in behalf of agriculture. The pledges for the future were contained in the following paragraphs:

We promise every assistance in the reorganization of the marketing system on sounder and more economical lines, and, where diversification is needed, Government financial assistance during the period of transition.

The Republican Party pledges itself to the enactment of legislation creating a Federal farm board clothed with the necessary powers to promote the establishment of a farm marketing system of farmer owned and controlled stabilization corporations or associations to prevent and control surpluses through orderly distribution.

We favor adequate tariff protection to such of our agricultural products as are affected by foreign competition.

We favor, without putting the Government into business, the establishment of a Federal system of organization for cooperative and orderly marketing of farm products.

The vigorous efforts of this administration toward broadening our exports market will be continued.

The Republican Party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which will place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industries to insure its prosperity and success.

There is not a thing in those words which could be construed either as an actual or an implied promise of the party to put into effect any plan involving the principle of the debenture scheme of financing agricultural exports.

The agricultural relief measure as passed by the House, and again, as agreed upon in the conference committee and reported back, carries out every pledge made in the party platform relative to the creation of a "Federal farm board clothed with the necessary powers to promote the establishment of a farm-marketing system of farmer owned and controlled stabilization corporations or associations to prevent and control surpluses through orderly distribution.

It contains all the necessary provisions to redeem the pledge of the party platform, set forth in the paragraph—

The vigorous efforts of this administration toward broadening our exports market will be continued.

It contains all the necessary provisions, in so far as the promotion of cooperative and orderly marketing is concerned, to redeem the pledge of the party platform contained in the following words:

The Republican Party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which will place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industries to insure its prosperity and success.

Nowhere in the platform may be found any words which can be construed, even by doing violence to their legitimate meaning, as a pledge of the party to enact a law embodying the principles and practices of the debenture scheme. Furthermore, neither of the candidates nominated at the Kansas City convention for the office of President and Vice President at any time during the campaign, either in a set speech, extemporaneous remarks, or statements issued to the press, made any pledge which could be distorted into a promise to support a plan involving the principles and practices of the debenture scheme.

I do not question the sincerity of those who now advance the debenture scheme as a remedy for the ills of agriculture, disastrous as I believe its effects would be, so long as they do not seek to show that the Republican Party is committed to a proposal so out of keeping with its constructive record.

As against such would-be party spokesmen as now would have the country believe that somehow or in some way the debenture proposal was implied or involved in the Republican platform pledge, or that it developed even remotely as a party commitment in the campaign that followed the adoption of the platform, I take my stand with the authorized spokesman for the Republican Party in that campaign, who, speaking with the conviction of truth and the knowledge of highest responsibility, said on this point two days ago:

The conferees' bill carried out the plan advanced in the campaign in every particular. Every other plan of agricultural relief was rejected in that campaign, and this plan was one of the most important issues in the principal agricultural States and was given as a mandate by an impressive majority in these States. Subsidies were condemned in the course of the campaign, and the so-called debenture plan—that is, the giving of subsidies on exports—was not raised by either party nor by its proponents.

So much for the political phase of the problem.

The other phase of this question is economic. It certainly should not be difficult to prove that the debenture scheme is uneconomic. It would not help the agricultural producer. To the contrary, it would positively injure him. Furthermore, it would injure practically every other legitimate producer in the United States. This proposition can be demonstrated so easily that it is a matter of considerable wonderment why it has obtained its support of otherwise straight-thinking men.

The debenture plan provides that there shall be issued to actual exporters of agricultural products coming under the provisions of the plan an export debenture. This debenture is a bankable and negotiable certificate for the payment to its holder of a sum equivalent to the quantity of the article exported multiplied by one-half the tariff on that article. For example, an exporter of 100,000 bushels of wheat would, under the debenture scheme, receive certificates worth on their face $21,000; this is arrived at by the process of multiplying 100,000 bushels by one-half the tariff on wheat; that tariff is 42 cents; 100,000 times one-half of 42 cents is $21,000.

A debenture certificate possessed by an importer of any kind of goods is worth its face value to him, being taken at its face value at the customhouses in lieu of cash in payment of import duties.

Now, let us see how it works. In the first place, the issuance of debentures are confined to the actual exporters. The farmer, as an individual, is not an actual exporter. Between the time the products of his soil—be they grain, livestock, or dairy products, or what else—have left his hands and reach the hands of the actual exporter they have, as a rule, passed through the hands of several middlemen. Therefore the farmer, in whose behalf support of the debenture plan is invoked, would never see one of these debenture certificates. He would never get his fingers upon a single one of them.

Throughout the entire debate of the debenture proposition and particularly at this time because of the low price wheat is bringing, this scheme has been urged as a relief to the wheat farmer. No living man can demonstrate how the actual farmer who raises and sells wheat would receive one cent benefit from the plan. The debenture, paying 21 cents a bushel, would be issued to the actual exporter, and there is no way under the sun to compel the actual exporter to pass any part of this 21-cents bonus or subsidy which he receives back to the farmer.

Let us continue to trace the course of the debenture. The actual exporter of 100,000 bushels of wheat receives a debenture certificate with a face value of $21,000. That certificate is of value only to an importer. Except upon rare occasions the exporter of wheat is not an importer. He therefore seeks to market his debenture certificate to an importer. He has received the market price for his wheat, plus $21,000, which every one must admit is a pretty slick commission on that amount of wheat. It represents to him "pure velvet." He can well afford to sell his debenture certificate for much less than its face value of $21,000, and he undoubtedly would do so. He could afford to sell it for half its face value and still reap a good commission on his transaction. But let it be understood the sole market for his certificate is confined to importers.

Now, let us see what happens. He sells his debenture certificate to an importer for less than its face value. We will say, in order to speedily dispose of it and obtain the ready cash, he sells his certificate for $15,000. This transaction marks the end of the debenture scheme in so far as it affects exporters and farmers. From here the history of the debenture deals with importers and the United States Treasury. At this particular point the farmer, the agricultural producer, passes completely out of the picture, if he ever was in it, and no one can adduce the slightest evidence that up to this point the actual farmer would receive one penny's benefit from the debenture plan. Up to date it has enriched only the commission men and speculators.

Now, the importer has the debenture certificate, worth on its face value $21,000, for which he paid $15,000. He presents this certificate at the customhouse in payment of tariff upon his goods, and the customhouse must, under this scheme, accept it at face value. So the importer has paid $21,000 of tariff duties at an actual cost to himself of only $15,000. This is exactly the equivalent of lowering the tariff, which immediately and inevitably results in an increase of imported articles of all kinds.

Under this scheme it would make no difference how high the tariff was raised, for the higher the tariff on wheat the higher would be the value of the debenture certificate which, when purchased by the importer at a discount, would enable him to import articles upon which there had been an increased rate upon the same basis as if there had been no increase. This operates to the injury of every other producer in the United States, whether he be a producer of manufactured articles or a producer of agricultural products, the like of which are imported. Why, under this proposition, the importer of butter or dairy products could buy debenture certificates from exporters of wheat at a discount sufficient to enable him to import dairy products and undersell the dairy interests in this country.

There is not the slightest feature of the proposed debenture scheme which would operate to benefit actual agricultural producers. However well it may sound in theory, in actual practice the dirt farmer would be completely out of the picture. The financial benefits of the debenture plan would not begin to be apparent until after the agricultural product had left the farmers' hands. If the debenture scheme were properly labeled, it would be entitled, "An act to enrich commission men, exporters, and speculators in farm products, to enrich importers, lower the tariff and increase imports to the detriment of our American industries."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the debenture plan, in view of the fact that we have no opportunity to debate the matter this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the debenture proposition. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPEECH OF HON. JOSEPH W. BYRNS

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] on the occasion of the dinner of the Jefferson Democratic Association of the District of Columbia to the Hon. Jouett Shouse.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an address recently delivered by the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. BYRNS. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the speech of Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, chairman of the Democratic national congressional committee, at dinner given in honor of Hon. Jouett Shouse, chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic national committee, by the Jefferson Democratic Association of the District of Columbia, the night of June 10, 1929.

The speech is as follows:

Democrats were greatly gratified when it was announced by the able chairman of our national committee that it was his intention to maintain permanent headquarters in Washington. The greatest handicap under which the Democratic Party has labored in past years is either the lack of information or the actual misinformation of the people concerning the conduct of their public affairs. The opposition party—the party of privilege, which, as a distinguished Democratic nominee for President said a few years ago, always has something to sell to those whom it serves—has controlled and continues to control most of the avenues of publicity, and hence the accomplishments of the Democratic Party under the leadership of that great Democrat, Woodrow Wilson, and likewise those things for which it has stood and fought during eight years of Republican misrule, have never been fully understood and appreciated. And so I am sure that I speak the sentiment of Democrats generally when I say to Mr. Raskob that he has rendered a real service to the cause of Democracy in the action which he has taken. It has given to the Democrats of the Nation not only a hope but a promise of success in the elections to come. And need I say to you who know him that the chairman displayed that excellent judgment and wise discrimination that has characterized him in the conduct of his private affairs when he chose for the head and active leadership in the headquarters which he has established the honored guest of the evening, the Hon. Jouett Shouse. A product and citizen of the South and the great Middle West, which he at one time ably represented in Congress, possessing an intimate knowledge of the great and constructive work of Woodrow Wilson's administration, of which he was an important part, thoroughly familiar with the history of our party, and imbued with an earnest belief in its underlying principles, his appointment was an ideal one, and we rejoice in the selection in the confident belief that active control has been placed in the hands of the right man, and we pledge him our earnest cooperation in the important work before him.

No one can be wholly satisfied with conditions as they exist in our National Government to-day. Congress was called into extra session we were told because agriculture needed immediate relief. It was declared that a farm relief bill would be passed and that there would be a limited revision of the tariff with the primary, if not the only, purpose of relieving agriculture from its distressed condition. But it appears that this was made the excuse for bringing about a general revision of the tariff upward on commodities already highly protected and in which special interests are deeply concerned. The House has passed a tariff bill imposing higher tariff rates than were ever carried in any bill in the entire history of the country. It raised rates on certain products of industry which will cost the consumers from six to eight hundred millions of dollars a year. The increased duty on sugar will cost the homes of the country three hundred and forty millions a year. Instead of carrying out the declared purpose of equalizing the tariff benefits on agricultural and industrial products it has increased the difference by raising the rates on industry over 1 per cent more than it did on agriculture. Under its provisions the constitutional prerogative of Congress to levy taxes are surrendered to the President by giving him the authority to change the tariff rates to the extent of 50 per cent. We have proceeded entirely too far in the centralization of power here in Washington to such an extent as to threaten the foundation of our institutions and now Congress proposes to give into the hands of the President the most important privilege of the people—the power to impose and levy taxes.

The South and the country expected that the distinguished engineer in the White House would have some plan for the prompt utilization for the Government's enormous investment at Muscle Shoals which a Republican administration has permitted to lie practically idle for 10 years. But we are told that this is not to be considered at this session, although there is ample time to do so.

The agricultural West and the country expected that some concrete plan for farm relief would be proposed. But if Mr. Hoover had a plan it was never submitted and Congress was left to work out its own plan. A bill is about to be passed which has had the support of members of both parties in the hope that it will be of some relief, but many farm organizations, as well as many Members of Congress, have declared that it does not go far enough and will not afford the fullest measure of relief that is possible.

And now with the tariff bill pending in the Senate and with business in suspense on account of the uncertainty; with agriculture still suffering the Republican leaders are planning for Congress to take a recess of several months with the tasks for which it was actually called uncompleted. An unusual and really distressing situation confronts the country. A Republican President, a Republican Senate, and a Republican House do not seem to be able to agree upon anything. Neither is willing to trust the judgment of the other in solving the problems confronting them. Leadership no longer exists. They are floundering in a sea of doubt and uncertainty. What can we expect for the future prosperity of our country under such circumstances? They do not know what to do or which way to turn and now they propose to go home for a season with the Micawber-like hope that in the meantime some idea will suggest itself or some one may think of a solution for the problems which have arisen under Republican rule to plague the body politic.

Is it surprising that evidences of the dissatisfaction of the people have been clearly manifested in the only two elections which have occurred since Mr. Hoover was inaugurated? One in Kentucky where a Republican majority of 4,000 last November was turned into a Democratic majority of over 1,000 a few days ago and the other in a Pennsylvania district which is over two to one Republican, but where the Democratic candidate was defeated on the face of returns by only 1,000 votes out of over 60,000 cast, and where a contest is to be instituted because of alleged frauds and the corrupt use of large sums by the Republican machine—a practice which seems to have become a habit in Republican elections in Pennsylvania.

The Democratic Party, although in the minority in both branches of Congress, has an opportunity to render a splendid service to the country and if it renders that service faithfully and intelligently it is certain to be swept into power by a people who are already disappointed by the procrastination, the failure, and the uncertainty of the present administration and Congress. Let us not waste our energy in wrangling over issues which do not involve the fundamental principles of our party. Let us rather exert ourselves to create a constructive program in the interest of the prosperity of the country and stand together on those principles in which we all believe and which have preserved our party during all the years of our Republic. Why bother now about who will be the candidate and what will be the issues three years hence? No one can say three years in advance who our candidate will be or what the issues will be in the next campaign. Our leader in the last campaign has recently declared that the issues will be made by the Democrats who are in Congress. The democracy will choose its candidate when the time comes.

Many were led away in the last campaign on issues which had no proper place in that contest but which were magnified by a subtle opposition and an unfriendly press. We have had and still have lines of cleavage in our party, but true followers of Thomas Jefferson should forget these differences in the fight against the common enemy. The Democratic Party is big enough; its record is glorious enough to embrace among its following everyone who loves his Government and who believes that it should be administered for the benefit of all the people and not alone for the favored few. To everyone who believes in popular government; to everyone who believes in its orderly processes and that all laws on the statute books should be enforced; to everyone who is opposed to the further centralization of power at Washington; to everyone who believes as did Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson, that the benefits of government should be impartially bestowed and that one class of our citizenship should not be preferred over another, the call is insistent to lay aside any prejudices we may have and forget any differences which may have swayed us in the past. The restoration of democratic policies and principles in our Government is too important to be jeopardized by a division in our ranks as we stand facing the common foe. If we resolve to follow this course, then we may confidently look forward to the triumphant success of a united and militant democracy under the leadership of the honor guest of the evening.

ARTICLE BY HON. JOHN W. M'CORMACK OF MASSACHUSETTS

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an article entitled "Bring Them Back to the Constitution," written by my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. MCCORMACK, and published in the Jewish Advocate of April 25, 1929.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, what is the article about?

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. It is a patriotic article on the Constitution, expressing devotion to it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Not denouncing the proposed department of education?

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely impossible to know what the request is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DOUGLASS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an article written by his colleague, Mr. McCORMACK. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On what subject?

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. The title of the article is "Bring Them Back to the Constitution." It is an article praising the patriotic efforts of those who have helped to build up this country and is a preachment for tolerance under the Constitution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And it is an article written by whom?

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. By my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. McCORMACK.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLASS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include an article entitled "Bring Them Back to the Constitution," written by Hon. JOHN W. McCORMACK, of Massachusetts, and published in the Jewish Advocate of April 25, 1929:

[From the Jewish Advocate, April 25, 1929]

BRING THEM BACK TO THE CONSTITUTION

The Constitution of the United States, which is the mouthpiece of the sovereign power of America, and which is the people collectively, not only established a framework of government, with its three coordinate departments, defining their powers, but also stated therein the rights and privileges of all citizens and inhabitants of our country. It was only a few years before the drafting of the Constitution that the thirteen Colonies had emerged successfully from the conflict for independence. The supermen who sat in the Constitutional Convention from which emanated our fundamental law realized that the underlying motive of the colonists seeking independence was to secure for themselves and their posterity the blessings of a free government which recognized human rights and liberties.

In the dark and trying days of the Revolutionary War the inspiration to endure the trials and hardships that history records, and to "carry on," was the realization that success meant "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness, equality under the law, the freedom of speech and of the press, and many other inherent rights, the greatest of all being the right of religious freedom." The records of the war of independence show that men of all nationalities fought and died shoulder to shoulder that the blessings of liberty and freedom under the law might be attained. It was only natural that the framers of the Constitution should and did incorporate into our fundamental law those ideals and principles of democracy. They are the foundation of our Government; the inspiration of Americans of all generations. As long as Americans love and respect those great human truths, not only in theory, but in fact, so long will our institutions exist. The future of America is safe so long as there is love and respect on the part of all for the Constitution.

It is those guaranties of a free and sovereign power to its individual citizens that has properly entitled our country to be called "the land of freedom." It is those principles that have prompted the enslaved and persecuted people of all lands and of all generations to seek "this haven of freedom," where all are equal in the eyes of the law, and where all are necessary and component parts of the sovereign power. It is those guaranties of personal liberty that are the origin and cause of our great growth; from 4,000,000 souls in 1790 to 120,000,000 souls in 1929; from the weakest nation in the civilized world in 1790 to the most powerful in 1929. In every great crisis that has confronted our country, the War of 1812, the Civil War, Spanish-American War, the World War, all nationalities have responded to the call for service. In the colonization and development of the great West, in our progress along political, social, and commercial lines, and in every other respect, men and women of all nationalities and descents and of all religious creeds, imbued with a love of the Constitution, have contributed toward our great progress.

America's progress is due to the contributions of men and women of all nationalities and descents. The test of an ideal American citizen is not nationality, descent, or religion, but is love of Constitution, country, and flag. To love the Constitution means that one must adhere not only to its spirit, but to its letter. One can not deny or desire to deny to others the rights and privileges that the Constituion guarantees to all and be an ideal American. As intolerance is prohibited by the Constitution, the converse is equally true, that tolerance is one of its requirements to ideal citizenship. Unfortunately, the real meaning of the Constitution has been and will continue to be misunderstood and misapplied by some. Racial and religious intolerance has been and is still, to some extent, the curse of the human race. If, and wherever, it exists in America it is contrary to the teachings of our fundamental law.

It therefore follows that the Constitution, commanding tolerance and respect on the part of all of the rights of others hereunder, that no person is an American in the eyes of that "sacred document" who would directly or indirectly deny or attempt to deny to others because of race, color, or creed the rights guaranteed by our fundamental law. There is no justification, either in law or in fact, for the existence of intolerance anywhere, particularly in America, because of racial or religious differences.

Intolerance wherever it exists usually follows ignorance as to the intent and motives of those against whom the prejudice is entertained. In some few cases it is the deliberate attempt to exploit and capitalize for one's personal gain the ignorant but honestly entertained narrow and perverted views of others. In the case of intolerance through ignorance, to classify such for descriptive purposes, it is necessary in part to remove that honestly entertained but misguided feeling through education and in part through the exercise of the privilege of suffrage along American lines by the election of those who are imbued with the spirit of America and tolerance. The exploiters of prejudice and intolerance should be met with open contempt and shown no mercy or sympathy by decent American citizens. In any event intolerance, if it exists, should not be met by intolerance. The old saying "that two wrongs do not make one right" applies to such a situation. However, all elements are justified in preserving their rights under the Constitution, pursuing methods under and within the law. To this extent all other broad and tolerant members of American society should assist them in their efforts. Resistance within the law to the formation of unjust and hostile opinion against a racial element or creed is a public duty.

There is no reason why there should be any racial or religious feelings directed by some toward other Americans. The commands of the Constitution and the history of our country justify that assertion. There should be no such citizen as Jew, Irish, English, German, French, Italian, or other nationality; while we are all of varied racial descents, of which we should be proud, we are all Americans. Therefore, there should be only one type of citizen in the minds of all; the American type. When that becomes an established fact in America racial, and in the main, religious differences, will disappear. So long as we refer to each other as some nationality other than American, racial prejudice and intolerance is bound to exist. While some of our racial elements, which reference is made descriptively, are more to blame for racial intolerance in America than others, nevertheless all of our elements are to some extent to blame, at least to the extent of referring to themselves or others, or permitting others to refer to them, as belonging to some nationality other than American. No matter what may be the land of the birth or whatever may be the race of our forbears, we are Americans. That does not mean that we should not have a regard for the land and race of our forbears, or not to assist them or to be charitable toward them in time of need or distress, but it does mean that in case of conflict of any kind with the best interests of America that our regard sinks into oblivion.

The progress of civilization and of mankind is due to the contributions of all races. History records that the contributions of the Jewish or Hebrew race is second to none. It is not my intention to refer to the contributions of other races but to confine myself briefly to some of the great contributions made by the Hebrew race.

Long before the Christian era the Jewish race fought idolatry. History records how their own "Lord of Hosts" guided them in their wanderings and fought with them in battle against their enemies, and how He wisely advised them to govern themselves. It also records how they created for themselves and transmitted to other races a superb literature in both prose and poetry, and later contributed to the preservation and transmission to modern times of the literature of other nations, such as Greece, Rome, and Arabia. From the earliest time to the latest the Hebrew race has been a literate people, passing down from father to son and from generation to generation the art of reading and writing, the love of letters, and the strong belief in education. On down the centuries the synagogue has been a school for children and adults, and the rabbis have been teachers of morality, social order, and domestic honor and love.

They, like other races, particularly the Irish, have undergone vicious and unwarranted persecutions. The moral teachings which have come down through the Jewish race have not and never will be forgotten. Those teachings, with the teachings of Christianity, constitute modern civilization.

The part that they played in the discovery, settlement, and development of the United States has been great and should not and can not be underestimated. The whole history of the Jewish race has been one of constructive contribution, under the greatest of difficulties, to the progress of mankind and civilization.

Inoffensive, lovable, sincere, charitable, frugal, imbued with love of free government, their contributions to American progress occupies prominent pages in the history of our country.

Wherever intolerance exists in America the remedy is to "Bring them back to the Constitution."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes following the special order for the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that following the address of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] he may proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the gentleman from Oklahoma addresses the House, I may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that following the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] he may address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 108

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a joint resolution which I introduced to-day to create a joint congressional committee to investigate and study the methods of Federal officials enforcing prohibition laws, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a resolution introduced by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following joint resolution introduced by me to-day to create a joint congressional committee to investigate and study the methods of Federal officials enforcing prohibition laws, and for other purposes:

House Joint Resolution 108

Joint resolution to create a joint congressional committee to investigate and study the methods of Federal officials enforcing the prohibition laws, and for other purposes

Whereas article 4 of the Constitution guarantees "The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures"; and

Whereas article 5 of the Constitution guarantees that no person "shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law"; and

Whereas the excessive toll of human lives taken by Federal officers charged with enforcement of prohibition laws, culminating in the assassination of Henry Virkula near International Falls, Minn., has caused the citizens of the Republic to become fearful that their lives may be snuffed out at any time they traverse the public highways: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be created a joint congressional committee to be composed of three Senators appointed by the President of the Senate and four Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker. The committee is authorized and directed to conduct an investigation and make a study of prohibition enforcement, particularly with reference to the many fatal shootings by Federal enforcement agents, and to formulate recommendations and submit proposed legislation to Congress which would protect the lives and liberties of the American people as intended by the framers of our Constitution.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to select a chairman and to hold such hearings while Congress is in session and during any recess; to sit at such times in the city of Washington; to employ such clerical, stenographic, and other assistance; to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; and to have such printing and binding done as it deems necessary.

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this resolution the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated. All expenses of the committee shall be paid upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, during the vote upon the farm bill I was necessarily absent. I desire the RECORD to show that if present I would have voted "yea." [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes to-morrow after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table at the conclusion of the address by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALMON. And, Mr. Speaker, I make the further request to insert in the RECORD a brief statement giving the amount of available power at Muscle Shoals Dam during the last month, and the amount sold, taken from the Government records.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. To that request I object.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the names of the deceased World War veterans of the State of Alabama buried in American cemeteries in France.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

THE TARIFF

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, a tariff is a scale or table of charges, such as insurance tariffs, railroad tariffs, and customs tariffs. As I use the term "tariff," it is synonomous with customs tariffs. A tariff act is a law which provides duties or rates on articles of import.

The origin of the term "tariff" it is said can be traced to the little Spanish coast town of Tarifa, from which in the long ago the boats of the feudal lord went forth to demand toll from every passing ship. This is now what happens in every harbor the world over. Tariff in the familiar sense has come to mean: "The toll demanded of foreign goods before they enter domestic markets."

Foreigners have no right to trade in the United States, except by comity of nations. The tariff in the United States is to be considered and weighed as it affects the interests of the Nation. Generally, a tariff is based upon both the economic and political conditions of a country. It is a compromise between the interests of the producers and the consumers.

A tariff is levied under the authority of the Constitution to lay and collect duties and imposts. The history of tariff legislation is interesting. The First Congress passed a tariff act in 1789, to collect revenue and to stimulate manufactures. Alexander Hamilton was the first Secretary of the Treasury and was the spokesman of the manufacturing and commercial interests of his time. He submitted A Report on Manufactures and suggested a bounty to encourage agricultural production. The embargo acts growing out of the events leading up to the War of 1812 and the Napoleonic wars, together with the tariff act of 1816, resulted in growth and prosperity to the manufacturers of the country. It is worth while to observe that statesmen frequently change their views on public issues. Gladstone began his career as a Tory or Conservative, and concluded his service to his country as a Liberal, while Disraeli started out as a Liberal, and ended as a Conservative. In 1824, John C. Calhoun advocated a protective tariff, while Daniel Webster opposed it. Later Webster became an advocate of protection, while Calhoun in 1828 opposed a high protective tariff. The tariff of 1846, known as the Walker tariff, brought great prosperity to the country and resulted in a large surplus in the Treasury. It promoted manufacturing and industry, with average duties of 25 per cent.

For a long time American statesmen maintained that the tariff could not be used in the aid of agriculture, and that its aim was to promote manufactures. William McKinley was probably the first to advocate the use of the tariff to protect agriculture.

A tariff may be primarily for revenue or primarily for protection. After the war between the States the tariff was utilized primarily for the protection of the manufacturer. It has been so used ever since. Wars led to national political and economic independence. The successful Franco-Prussian War in 1870 led to high tariffs in Germany. The World War has led to still higher tariffs in all of the leading countries.

POLITICAL PARTIES AND THE TARIFF

Prior to 1928 the Democratic formula generally accepted was, "The levy of duties that will insure the maintenance of competition between foreign and domestic producers." The Underwood tariff of 1913 adopted the competitive formula. Its aim was to promote legitimate industry, and rates were based upon careful and scientific study.

The Republican Party had adopted the principle that the rate of duty should be the difference between domestic and foreign costs of production. The underlying principle of the Payne-Aldrich tariff was the equalizing of the costs of production. This was the principle of the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922. The flexible provisions of the act of 1922 adopted as the measure of the rate the difference between the costs of production in the United States and abroad.

It may be said, therefore, that prior to 1928 both the Republican and Democratic Parties stood for the protective theory and for the protective tariff as opposed to free trade, or a tariff for revenue only. As a matter of fact, there is but little difference between the competitive tariff of the Underwood bill and the equalization of costs of production in the Fordney Act. The principle underlying both is to enable domestic producers to compete on even terms with foreign producers. Fairly and consistently applied, there is no essential difference between a competitive and an equalizing cost of production tariff.

It is frequently said that the Underwood tariff of 1913 broke down completely. Conditions following the World War are cited in support of the charge. The greatest war in history undoubtedly affected economic conditions. Both political and economic changes were necessary. However, the test is, the fair comparison is, the difference between conditions in the United States and conditions in other belligerent countries following the World War. Unemployment, losses in agriculture and manufacturing were not all due to the tariff act of 1913. It was the inevitable reaction following the greatest of all wars. Readjustments under the Underwood Act were necessary, however. No tariff act is perfect. All are subject to change. Then, too, there must be economic as well as political independence.

PLATFORMS OF 1928

Since the war agriculture has been discriminated against. Manufacturing has made adjustments following the period of deflation. Both political parties have recognized the inequalities of tariff legislation between manufacturing and farming. The Democratic platform of 1928 declared that the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, with an adequate safeguard for the wages of the American laborer, is the correct measure of the tariff rate, and that in its tariff policy there would be equality of treatment between agriculture and other industries. The Republican platform declared for a protective tariff for both agriculture and manufacturing. It also declared that the home market belonged to the American farmer, and that he was entitled to the home market to the extent of his ability to supply it. Differences between foreign wages and foreign costs of living are to be considered in agriculture as well as in manufacturing.

Moreover, President Hoover asserted that the tariff is a major factor, if not the basis, in legislation for farm relief. While James G. Blaine, John Sherman, James A. Garfield, and their contemporaries asserted that the tariff could not be used to protect agriculture, Herbert Hoover and his contemporaries advocate the tariff as a means to remove the inequalities between agriculture and manufacturing.

Henry Clay advocated the tariff for the benefit of manufacturing industries on the infant-industry theory. John Stuart Mills, a great free trader, admitted that there was an exception in favor of the infant industries to promote manufacturing. It is well to keep in mind, however, that Adam Smith said, more than 150 years ago, that no government has ever given equal protection to agriculture and commerce. No one now advocates a protective tariff in the aid of infant industries.

STANDARDS OF LIVING AND HIGHER WAGES

The theory of a tariff to promote infant industries was discarded long ago. The favorite plea of those who advocate protective tariffs now is to safeguard and promote standards of American labor. This is bolstering high protection by mere claptrap. Other countries have higher tariffs than the United States. Their standards of living are lower than in the United States. Before the World War, England had free trade and yet England paid the highest wages in the world except the United States. Higher wages and higher standards of living result from better production. They do not follow higher tariffs. They are the result of the efficiency and the genius of the laborer. The use of machinery has much to do with the standards of living. The well informed, the intelligent, those who think for themselves, do not now repeat the assertion that protective tariffs provide higher standards of living. This argument is without solid foundation and is not even a feeble prop upon which to base a claim for high protection. Laboring classes are not maintained by high tariffs. Their standards are promoted by production. The standard-of-living fallacy has been repeated ad nauseam. It is a bald error. Labor organizations are responsible for higher wages and better standards of living.

Economists are in general agreement that the fundamental cause for high wages is the high productiveness of labor. The theory that high protection promotes higher standards of living anrong laborers is rejected by all respectable economists and all candid statesmen.

Furthermore, it may be said that unfair protection leads to antiquated and inefficient methods of production. May not this be the trouble with the shoe manufacturing of New England? May this not also be the difficulty with the textiles of New England? Nothing is more deceptive or ignorant than the claim that wages are higher because of protective tariffs. If this were true, there would be higher wages in other countries than in the United States. The pauper-labor argument, like the infant-industry theory, has been completely discarded. We now hear of vested interests and home markets. There are reasons for agreements with other countries. In passing, it might be observed that it was formerly maintained that a protective tariff was necessary in the United States because wages were high. It was asserted in the early days of manufacturing in the United States that high wages handicapped American manufacturers.

AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

One of the dangers of high tariffs is monopoly. It is easy for manufacturers to organize. Trusts and monopolies follow dishonest tariffs. It is universally acknowledged, however, that a tariff on agricultural commodities that are sold within the United States as cheaply as abroad is of no consequence or direct benefit to the producer.

A tariff on an agricultural commodity of which we produce an exportable surplus is of no benefit. It is a mere gesture. It is used as a cloak for those who are specially benefited to perpetuate their claim to special favors. The world price of a world crop controls. The tariff can not be of benefit to the grower in the domestic market, and certainly it can not influence the world market. A tariff on short-staple cotton, wheat, or corn is worse than an empty gesture. It is bold deception. The American farmer is hoodwinked into supporting a tariff act that enriches industry and pauperizes farming. There is pauper labor on foreign farms as well as in foreign factories. The agricultural unrest and dissatisfaction in the United States will never be removed until the Government of the United States has extended to agriculture benefits that are comparable to the tariff benefits now extended to manufacturing.

The domestic trade of the United States amounts to $90,000,000,000 annually, while the foreign trade is approximately one-tenth of that amount, or $9,000,000,000. This includes both imports and exports. There is undoubted merit in the claim that to the average producer, whether he is a manufacturer or a farmer, the American market is desirable. The manufacturer, by organization, can secure a monopoly. The grower of limited crops can be benfited, but the grower of world crops receives no direct or comparable benefits under a protective tariff.

TARIFF ACT OF 1929

The tariff rests upon the power of Congress to levy and collect duties upon imports. The tariff act of 1929 gives us a new formula. The flexible provisions are intended to adjust the difference in competitive conditions in this country and abroad in order to give the American producer and the American laborer a proper opportunity in the American market. This formula is nebulous. It is nothing like as definite or certain as the difference in the costs of production formula. Moreover, it is a rank abdication of Congress in favor of the Executive. It is the most gigantic step toward further bureaucracy since the World War. It is fraught with much danger to the principle for which this Government was founded. There must be no taxation without representation. Congress, in the flexible provisions of the tariff act of 1929, has surrendered to the Executive the power to tax. The power to tax is also the power to destroy. Again, the middle or laboring classes will bear the burdens. The customs duties under the tariff act of 1929 will come very largely from the necessities of life. More than one-third of the total annual duties now collected of $600,000,000 is now paid direct by the consumers on imported sugar. The consumer will largely bear the burdens, while agriculture will secure but few benefits under the tariff act of 1929.

It was said that the tariff and farm relief must go hand in hand. It was argued that the tariff is primarily in aid of agriculture. As is always the case, however, the special interests obtain the advantage. It may be called a readjustment instead of a revision. It is a readjustment, however, in the aid of manufacturing. It is but little comfort to the farmers of the land who are now in distress.

PROTECTION

It matters but little what our theories on the tariff are. There must be protection for all, or there should be protection for none. We are face to face with conditions to-day, not theories. Forty years ago, it looked as if free trade would dominate the world. England had free trade before the World War. She was the great creditor nation of the world, but the war has changed the situation. The leading nations of the world have gone to protection. Both of the great political parties in the United States recognize that the protective theory now obtains. It is not a theory or a principle, so much as a condition that the United States faces to-day. There are too many trade agreements. There are too many favored-nation clauses in tariff acts in other countries for the United States to reverse suddenly its protective policy.

I advocate necessary or reasonable tariffs. I oppose favoritism. I advocate an honest tariff. I oppose a dishonest tariff. I maintain that there is substantially no difference to-day between the Democratic and Republican principles of the tariff. The difference is in the application. A Democratic tariff would permit imports on a competitive basis. A Republican tariff would keep out imports. A Democratic tariff would promote trade and commerce. It would place the domestic producer, with his unexcelled and undisputed efficiency, on equal or better terms with his foreign competitor. It would promote effective competition, which is the life of all trade and commerce.

It is sometimes said that a protective tariff will promote domestic competition as an important factor in determining prices paid by the consumer. Yet protection has its evils. It leads to substitutes. It may prevent prosperity to the laborer by denying a market to the product of the laborer.

Economic isolation is followed by political isolation. The world is jealous of America to-day. We occupy a political isolation. I know that there have been important economic as well as political changes throughout the world. I know that industry in the United States has been built up on the basis of high tariffs. This fact must be kept in mind. There must be no revolution, but at the same time there should be an extension of the policy of protection. Conditions are changing more in agricultural production than in manufacturing. Lands are being depleted. Soils are being impoverished. Conditions are reversed from what they were 100 years ago in the United States. Then manufacturing was difficult. Farming was easy. Lands were new. Now the situation has changed. There must be equality for agriculture to-day.

EFFECTS

The advocates of high protection point to the fact that the export trade of the United States has increased since 1922. This increase, however, was not because of the tariff but in spite of it. It follows the expansion of trade and the increase in population. It is significant when we consider the effect of the tariff, that the American share in world trade has declined slightly since 1922, although imports and exports have increased in volume. Mr. E. Dana Duran, Chief of the Division of Statistical Research, Department of Commerce, made the statement on May 18, 1929, that the American share in the world trade had decreased since 1922. It is not a question of whether our export trade has increased or not. It is a question of whether our share has increased.

The leading business men of the United States are only asking that American business men have an equal chance in American markets. They are only asking that measure of protection which will represent the difference in living standards and wage scales between America and its competitors. Growing and enlarging American business men to-day will be satisfied with a competitive tariff. They are in favor of the principle of protection, but they suggest caution in the application of the principle. They want the Congress of the United States to adopt a fair and honest principle of tariff, and they expect Congress to stick to it. They do not want the case to be overstated. They know that a prohibitive tariff will end in reprisals.

The effects of tariff legislation are frequently overestimated. The country can accommodate itself to almost any reasonable tariff system, but it has the right to ask that that system be definite and settled. Business wants certainty.

It by no means follows that the producer will receive the benefit of the tariff.

It seldom increases the price by the amount of the rate, but a prohibitive tariff can destroy trade.

Since the great World War the United States has become the creditor nation of the world. Our allies owe us $10,000,000,000. We have made investments abroad aggregating $15,000,000,000 or $16,000,000,000 more. Our income is around $90,000,000,000 annually. Our creditors can only pay in goods or in services. Prohibitive tariffs will prevent the collection of our foreign debts.

High protective tariffs will hinder our foreign trade. It will retard commerce with Canada, Mexico, and Central and South America. It is important to remember that we entered the foreign fields in the Western Hemisphere when Great Britain, France, and Germany retired because of the World War. We assert the Monroe doctrine. We need the friendship of our American neighbors. Canada is our best customer. We export twice as much to Canada at the present time as there is imported to us from Canada.

The fine effects of President Hoover's South American tour will be more than offset by prohibitive tariffs. Labor is certainly no cheaper in Canada than it is in the United States.

I oppose free trade. I oppose a tariff for revenue only. I know that new conditions require new treatments. I stand for a reasonable and effective tariff that will foster agriculture and manufacturing at home and promote trade and commerce abroad.

SUBSIDIES

The tariff of 42 cents a bushel on wheat is retained, and the tariff on corn is increased from 15 to 25 cents a bushel. All statesmen, however, are agreed that the tariff on agricultural products of which we produce an exportable surplus is not effective.

Agriculture is discriminated against. The lack of equality between agriculture and manufacturing is glaring. Some method must be devised to give the farmer the equivalent benefits of the tariff. It may be by bounty. Those who advocate the tariff for manufacturing oppose a bounty for the farmer. In the last analysis they are both subsidies. The manufacturer profits by a tariff, while the farmer, with other consumers, pays the price. The farmer now pays more for his food, clothing, implements, and supplies than he did in 1914. The debenture has been suggested so that the farmer may appear in the tariff picture. The purpose is to utilize a part of the customs duties collected on imports to pay a bounty to the farmer on cotton, wheat, and corn exported. The idea is to make agriculture a part of the tariff system. The proposition, as an independent one, is indefensible. The theory with proper safeguards against overproduction and reimportation, provided the grower receives the direct benefit and provided the bounty on cotton is sufficient, may be the solution.

Not only does the tariff discriminate against the farmer but the railway structure of the country is unfair to him. I am not at all frightened when the industrial representatives denounce a bounty when it is invoked for the benefit of the farmer. The discrimination in freight rates in favor of manufacturers who export is indefensible, unless the benefits are extended to agriculture.

The protective tariff preserves the home market for the domestic manufacturer. If labor is cheaper in manufacturing in other countries, it is also cheaper in agriculture. The American farmer has the additional handicap of buying his supplies in a protected market.

FREIGHT RATES

The freight rates on agricultural implements from Chicago to New Orleans in carloads, when intended for export to Europe, is 47½ cents per hundred pounds, while the domestic farmers pay 73 cents per hundred pounds. The rate from Chicago to San Francisco, when the implements are to be exported, is $1 per hundred pounds, while, if the implements are to be used by American farmers, the freight rate is $1.93 per hundred pounds.

Again, the freight rates on manufactured iron and steel articles from Chicago to San Francisco, when they are intended for export is 40 cents per hundred pounds, whereas, if they are for domestic use, the rate is $1 per hundred pounds.

Again, if passenger automobiles are bought by American farmers, the freight rate from Cleveland, Ohio, to New Orleans, La., is $2.42 per hundred pounds, while if the competitor of the American farmer in foreign countries buys an American automobile, the rate is $1.74 per hundred pounds.

I know that the rate structure of the country is an intricate one. Recently, however, the railways of the country have voluntarily reduced the prices on wheat intended for export. This is a step in the right direction. Fair play demands that agriculture be accorded the same rights in freight rates given to steel and automobiles. Cotton and other agricultural products must now pay the export premiums accorded to steel and automobiles. The railways are entitled to a reasonable income. If there is a reduction on one commodity, the aggregate income required on railways must be made up on another commodity. If the rates on cotton intended for export were materially reduced, the farmer would get the benefit. The world price in cotton controls, and the result would be reflected in a higher price to the farmer for his product.

The agricultural problem is national. Manufacturing can not prosper permanently without agriculture.

The textile interests admit that they have a vital interest in the prosperity of the American cotton grower. They manifest much concern about his welfare. The suggestion is made that Egyptian cotton would deteriorate but for the importation of American long-staple cotton. The proposition is advanced that the prosperity of the American cotton grower could be promoted by denying the right to export cottonseed. This is strange economics. Cotton is a world product. Its prosperity can be promoted by cooperation.

Again, if the textile manufacturer knew anything about the growth of cotton, he would know that the constant use of any one kind of seed without change results in a deteriorated staple. Can the American grower maintain his staple without according his competitor a similar chance?

In his zeal to aid the farmer the textile representative who appeared before the Agricultural Committee and the Committee on Ways and Means suggested that the Government should eliminate the boll weevil. The solution was advanced that standardizing the seed would result in prosperity to the cotton grower. If the textile manufacturer were not so selfish, if he were familiar with conditions in the Cotton Belt, he would know that the cotton grower is constantly perfecting his seed. Marvelous progress has been made in standardizing. I admit there is further room for improvement. As to Government aid in the fight against the boll weevil the textile manufacturer betrays his ignorance. The Government has fostered every known method to eliminate the boll weevil. When pressed for a solution the textile manufacturer is utterly without a suggestion as to how the Government can eradicate the boll weevil. His advocacy of Government aid in standardization and boll-weevil elimination is a smoke screen. It was advanced to divert attention from the argument that a tariff on long-staple cotton would be effective. The manufacturer asking for increased duties on the manufactured products of long-staple cotton threw out a decoy to prevent the domestic grower from getting the equivalent benefits of the tariff.

I have no patience with such sophistry. It is passing strange that the petitions of growers are unheeded, while the deceptions of those who enjoy special favors are harkened. When Congress grants a tariff to the manufacturer, it is based upon the request of the manufacturer. Justice and fairness demand that the conclusions of the growers shall be considered in the enactment of legislation. If this had been done, the House would have granted a tariff on long-staple cotton.

AGRICULTURE AND INDUSTRY

In the older countries agriculture has been subordinated to industry. The protective tariff in the United States promotes industry at the expense of agriculture. Industry is promoted by a tariff. When the farmer asks for equality of treatment, he is told that economic laws must run their course and that the price of farm products is governed by the law of supply and demand. This is rank hypocrisy. There is unjust discrimination when the manufacturer demands protection and insists upon free raw material.

I am thinking of the tariff act of 1929 and its effect upon the people of Mississippi, where cotton is the chief product. Refrigeration and modern transportation have made possible increases in prices on vegetables, fruits, and perishable crops, by the use of the protective tariff. The tariff can not be used for price control of the cotton market. I did not support the tariff bill as passed by the House. There are no benefits to the cotton grower by way of the tariff, while the costs of growing cotton are enormously increased. There is no equality in the treatment of cotton and the manufactured products of cotton. The one is free, the others are protected. I oppose the pending tariff bill because additional burdens are imposed upon the cotton grower. The costs of the necessities of life are increased. Lumber, glass, shingles, brick, cement, hoes, leather, and many other articles are transferred from the free list to the dutiable list. There have been additional increases in the duties on furniture, the necessities of life, including food, clothing, and medicine, glassware, tables and kitchen furniture, rope, carpets, woolen, cotton, and rayon cloth. The tariff on sugar has been increased. The act carries a small duty on hides, but an unconscionable compensatory duty on shoes and leather. A tariff on long-staple-cotton would have helped. It would have been of benefit to the district I represent. It is denied in the House bill.

THE SOLUTION

What is the solution? A tariff on short-staple cotton, wheat, and corn is not effective. The prices of these commodities can not be controlled by tariff. There is a tariff to-day of 42 cents a bushel on wheat and yet wheat is now selling at 96¼ cents a bushel, which is the lowest price since 1914. In Canada, without a tariff on wheat, the price is 10½ cents more per bushel than in Chicago, the greatest American grain market. Growers of these crops must compete with the farmers of the world. There should be a national tariff policy that is fair to both industry and agriculture.

Many of the rates in the proposed bill are prohibitive. Retaliatory tariffs will result and our world trade will suffer. The remedy is a reasonable tariff. As a matter of theory, every article that is imported should pay a reasonable duty. Foreign manufacturers and foreign producers should contribute to the expenses of the Government. However, the interest of all the people is frequently promoted by the goods and products, and especially raw material, not produced or raised in this country, coming in duty free. We need coffee, rubber, and a vast percentage of the hides used in the manufacture of shoes. Sixty to seventy-five per cent of our cotton is exported. We need the markets of the world. Some 500,000 bales of cotton are imported annually. In the long run it is difficult to see how a tariff on short-staple cotton would be of much benefit to the grower. We have some twenty-five or thirty millions of dollars invested abroad. Our late war allies owe us $10,000,000,000. As I have said they can only pay us in goods or services.

High tariff walls mean further reduction in foreign debts. These reductions, if the high-protection policy continues, will be of benefit to cotton growers, who must sell their raw cotton abroad. As far as possible, the American market must be preserved to the domestic grower and manufacturer. It is the best market in the world. Embargoes and prohibitive tariffs in the long view are short sighted. The remedy is, the fair thing is, as between the manufacturer and the producer of the great agricultural commodities, a reasonable tariff, an honest tariff, a tariff that will not be too burdensome to the consumer. The solution of the problem is a just and necessary tariff. It is important to the Nation that there should be a thriving agricultural population. At the same time there must be a fair and just protection for American wage scales and standards of living, coupled with provisions for international trade that will benefit America as well as other countries.

There should be no unnecessary trade barriers. I believe that there should be reasonable protection for American industries subject to destructive competition from abroad where there is benefit to any considerable section of the country.

President Hoover advocated a limited revision of the tariff, primarily in aid of agriculture. The House bill, now pending in the Senate, is a monstrosity. There are tariffs that will benefit certain farmers, but the benefits are more than offset by the increased costs of living and production. Costs of living will probably be increased some $600,000,000. For every dollar the pending tariff bill increases the farmer's price it will take from him from ten to fifty dollars.

It was conservatively estimated that the Fordney-McCumber Act increased the price of farm products some $30,000,000, while it added to their cost of production some $330,000,000. These are the figures of the American Farm Bureau Federation. The losses under the pending bill will be double the losses under the tariff act of 1922. A prohibitive tariff, an unjust tariff, is now one of the greatest obstacles to an economically sane and balanced agriculture.

FALLACIES

I have already referred to a number of fallacies that obtain with respect to the tariff.

While a high tariff will enable the employer to pay a higher wage, the chief benefit is to the employer. American standards of wages have always been higher than in the old country. Adam Smith, writing in 1773, said that the wages of labor were higher in America at that time than in England. The versatile Sidney Smith, the first editor of the Edinburgh Review, in speaking of the Book of Fallacies, by Jeremy Bentham, said:

> There are a vast number of absurd and mischievous fallacies which pass readily in the world for sense and virtue, while in truth they tend only to fortify error and encourage crime.

Labor organizations have promoted working conditions. American workmen receive higher wages because of labor unions and not because of the tariff. The highest wages in the United States are not paid by the industries that enjoy the highest tariff protection, but in lines of trade not directly or indirectly related to the tariff. Bricklayers, carpenters, and stonemasons receive among the highest wages. These workmen are not protected by tariff laws. At the same time the American workman receives almost twice as much as the European workman engaged in the same trade that is not protected by a tariff.

Again, under the lowest tariff in the United States wages have always been higher than they were in Europe. America receives higher wages, and, by reason of superior intelligence, greater efficiency, and vision of the American laborer and manufacturers, they will ultimately achieve a world-wide mastery in the domain of industry and ultimately largely control the markets of the world, whether or not we have a high or moderate tariff system.

In the United States we have not the overpopulation; there is not the supply of labor that there is in Europe. We have restricted immigration now.

SPECIAL INTERESTS AND LOGROLLING

I oppose the pending tariff bill because it grants to manufacturing special favors. It increases the cost of living. It is carrying the doctrine of protection to unreasonable extremes. It is for the benefit of the classes rather than of the masses. It is the result of trading and logrolling. The special interests agree to enough duties to pass the bill, and on articles that do not interfere with their profits.

The first tariff act of 1789 carried an average ad valorem rate of 8 per cent. The tariff act of 1922 carried a rate of 37.67 per cent. It is estimated that the tariff act of 1929 carries a rate of approximately 48 per cent. The purpose is no longer to equalize costs or to promote competition. The aim is the prevention of imports.

There are vast increases in the rates in the present bill. The tariff wall is raised. The argument is that the manufacturer will be made prosperous and that prosperity will trickle down to the wage earners and farmers of the country. This has always been the argument of aristocracy. This has always been the claim of the classes.

The tariff act of 1929 increases the duties on every article, from the cradle to the grave. The dresses of the baby, the dolls and toys of the child, the clothing and necessities of life are vastly increased. Duties on tombstones are higher than ever before.

I wish that wages might be increased throughout the world. High wages do not always follow protective tariffs. Russia has protection, with low wages. England, with free trade, had higher wages than Germany with high tariffs. The remedy for inadequate wages in all countries it not higher tariffs but increased efficiency. Higher wages mean greater buying power.

America won the war, and if our tariff walls are further increased, America is likely to pay the remaining cost of the war. A nation can not be enriched by its own taxation. Permanent prosperity can not result from enriching the few at the expense of the many. The tariff act of 1929 embodies the principle of the Irishman at Donnybrook Fair: "Whenever you see a head, hit it; whenever you use a commodity, tax it."

With increased tariffs on manufactures, the added duties on farm products are in reality a delusion. The pending bill can not be stripped of its injustice and inequality by giving to the farmer a stone when he asks for bread.

If the manufacturer is entitled to a tariff, the farmer is entitled to a bounty, or its equivalent. The American people seem to forgive robbery if that robbery be indirect. We illustrate Shakespeare's theory:

> He who's robbed but knows not of it,
> Is not robbed at all.

NATIONAL EQUALITY

The view of Alexander Hamilton, the father of protection, was that the protective policy would cause the price of goods to be lower and not higher than they would be if no protection had been accorded. The fundamental purpose of a constructive protection is to stimulate domestic production by eliminating foreign competition or rendering it less effective. The raising of prices is a resulting aim. The extreme protectionist may demand the practical elimination of foreign competition supplemented by the raising of domestic prices to the full extent of the duty. I maintain, however, that such is not the general view of the American people. Price raising is only a proximate aim. The primary aim is to stimulate domestic production, so that prices will not continue to be raised as much as at first, with the eventual purpose that prices may be lower than if no protection were accorded.

Industrial tariffs should be aimed to increase the volume and variety of manufactures, rather than the prosperity of the manufacturers themselves. The policy of protection is being distorted. Tariff aims are being subverted. Prosperity in different industries does not depend upon the amount of tariff protection or upon the amount of protective duties. The rubber and automobile industries, with but little protection, have prospered, while textile manufactures, with high protection, are lagging behind.

Equality between industry and agriculture means the elimination of prohibitive duties, the promotion of competition, and the encouragement of trade and commerce that will promote the progress of both manufacturing and agriculture.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FIFTY-NINE YEARS OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, the tariff law is our international trade law. It vastly affects both our domestic and foreign commerce. It may create or destroy markets. It may powerfully promote, regulate, restrict, or prohibit the international interchange of commodities. Nearly every country in the world is on a protective-tariff basis. By this means the nations choose what imports they shall permit from other nations and give legal protection to their own industries by restricting or prohibiting foreign competition. Whether they encourage or prohibit imports of any given product, the motive is the same—their own welfare. This means that American products enter the other markets of the world on terms prescribed by other nations. Their laws in following that practice are based upon the same rightful foundation as our own.

STATISTICAL TABLE

In 1921 I placed in the RECORD a comparative statistical history of the principal tariff acts since 1870. Under leave granted, I am now placing in the RECORD a similar table covering all the principal tariff acts of the last 59 years. This table has been brought to date by the Tariff Commission and the complete table has been rechecked and verified by experts of the commission and I am sure it gives the most reliable statistics available.

This table shows the state of our trade under each of the principal tariff acts of that period. It should be observed that it deals primarily with the periods under the various tariff acts rather than with any particular year.

It is, of course, recognized that while the tariff is a very great factor in foreign trade, it is nevertheless only one of many influential factors that determine price levels and trade movements at any given period or as to any given product. The object of presenting the table is to show the general results rather than to reach any dogmatic conclusion as to the causes.

Certain general standards have been commonly accepted which may aid us in determining the state of health of our foreign trade. We naturally inquire as to the trade trends, the volume of our foreign commerce, the balance of trade, the relation of exports to imports, the percentage of free imports, the average rates of dutiable imports, and the revenue collected. This table is intended to give a perspective view of some of these fundamental facts under the tariff acts of the last 59 years. During the period covered there have been nine general tariff revisions. The average duration of a general tariff act has been six and one-half years. Changing economic and political conditions have resulted in readjustment of rates at frequent intervals. Political convenience, as well as stability of trade, has resulted in a practice of general rather than piecemeal revision. The denial of piecemeal revision has hastened general revision.

[1] Imports for consumption never agree exactly with general imports, which were used in obtaining the average annual volume of trade. For this reason, the average annual balance of trade can not be derived exactly from the first two columns, but the lack of agreement is inconsequential.

NOTE.—Trade statistics are for fiscal years prior to Jan. 1, 1918; for calendar years 1918 to 1928, inclusive. Data for invisible items, net interest, and increase on foreign investments are subject to revision.

The first column of the above table designates principal tariff acts according to the year of their enactment.

PRINCIPAL TARIFF ACTS

The principal tariff acts of the last 50 years have been enacted as follows:

July 14, 1870; June 6, 1872; March 3, 1883; October 1, 1890 (McKinley Act); August 27, 1894 (Wilson Act); July 24, 1897 (Dingley Act); August 5, 1909 (Payne Act); October 3, 1913 (Underwood Act); and September 22, 1922 (Fordney-McCumber Act).

VOLUME OF TRADE

The above table shows that under the tariff act of 1870 our average annual volume of trade was $1,000,000,000. This table discloses the general upward trend of the volume of trade through the tariff acts from 1870 to the present time. The one exception in this trend was the Wilson Act of 1894, under which our average annual volume of trade decreased $40,000,000. The average decrease under the Wilson Act was due to a drop of imports from a level reached under the McKinley Act of 1890. Imports were on an average $18,000,000 per year less under the Wilson Act than under the McKinley Act. The volume of exports under the Wilson Act was greater than under the McKinley Act. The result under the Wilson Act was a decreased volume of trade but an increased balance of trade.

The great average increases in our volume of trade have occurred under the acts of 1897, 1909, and 1913, covering the period from 1897 to 1922. During this 25-year period our trade increased from less than $2,000,000,000 a year to more than $8,000,000,000. An enormous jump was made under the Underwood Act, manifestly primarily due to war conditions. The average volume of trade under the Payne Act of 1909 was $3,753,000,000. The average volume of trade under the Underwood Act of 1913 was $8,102,000,000. The average annual volume of trade under the Underwood Act was 115 per cent greater than under the Payne Act, which preceded it.

The peak volume of trade was reached in the fiscal year 1920, when our foreign trade amounted to $13,347,000,000, with a balance of trade amounting to $2,870,000,000. Within one year this volume of trade had fallen $3,177,000,000. From 1921 to 1922 it still further fell $3,790,000,000, which left us a volume of trade of $6,379,000,000, the lowest for the last 10 years. Then the present act went into effect.

The exports for the fiscal year 1920 amounted to over $74 per capita and the imports to $47 per capita. In other words, we enjoyed an excess of exports over imports of $27 per head for every man, woman, and child in America. In 1921 our exports amounted to over $39 per capita, with imports amounting to $23. In 1922 our exports amounted to $33.75 per capita and our imports to $27.55, or a net balance of $6.20 per capita.

This tremendous drop in our volume of trade within 24 months amounted to over $6,960,000,000. It was not induced by the inability of America to produce and sell. It was the result of the inability of our customers, particularly Europe, to buy. This abrupt and tremendous slump in our foreign market is a sufficient reason, and perhaps the main reason, to account for the beginning of our economic depression of eight years ago. American agriculture, with its market cut off, found itself the first to suffer from the depression. Agriculture received the shock of a greatly curtailed market without a concurrent reduction in production—a decrease in prices without a corresponding decrease in costs.

The total balance of trade in favor of the United States under the Underwood Act during the nine years it was in effect was about twenty billions of dollars. That tremendous volume and balance of trade largely resulted from American financing during and following the war, both by Government and private loans. The Government financed Europe with war supplies on specific condition that funds should be used for purchases in America. Private capitalists found it advantageous to loan money to our foreign customers in the same way. This vast expansion of credit and the resulting trade made America the creditor nation of the world. The financial supremacy of America originated in this tremendous balance of trade under the Underwood Act, not predominantly produced by that particular law but out of the economic conditions under which the trade originated.

Since 1922 American business men have continued to finance our foreign trade by making foreign loans and investments aggregating over $1,000,000,000 per year. We still have a large volume of trade, materially induced and financed by loans. An interchange of commodities is a natural and most substantial foundation for healthy trade, and we can not regard our present large volume of commerce, so largely dependent on current loans, as affording the most secure foundation for the continuance of this favorable volume of trade.

Our average annual volume of trade under the present tariff act is $700,000,000 per year greater than the average volume of trade under the Underwood Act, an increase of 8 per cent.

IMPORTS

The minimum imports under the tariff acts of the last 60 years occurred under the act of 1870. The imports have increased under every tariff act since that time, except the Wilson Act of 1894 under the Cleveland administration. The average annual decrease of imports under that act, as compared with the preceding McKinley Act, was $18,000,000.

The big increases in imports have occurred under the acts of 1909, 1913, and 1922, being the three last tariff acts. Under the act of 1909, 7 per cent more commodities came in free than under the preceding act and the average duty was over 6 per cent less. Under the Underwood Act the free list was increased 16 per cent, and the average duty was decreased about 14 per cent. The average volume of trade increased $4,350,000,000, and consisted of an increase of $1,250,000,000 imports and $3,100,000,000 exports.

Under the act of 1922 the dutiable rates were raised 10.87 per cent, 63 per cent came in free, there was an 8 per cent increase in our volume of trade and a decrease in our balance of trade as compared with the act of 1913. The $700,000,000 average in our balance of trade for the period of the present act is made up of increased imports and decreased exports.

Under the present tariff law, average imports have increased $1,150,000,000 per year and average exports have decreased $450,000,000 per year.

This does not fully tell the story, however. The first year of the present act was at the low swing of our trade pendulum. It went into effect under depressed market conditions and comparing its first year with 1927 we find that exports have increased $1,000,000,000 and imports $470,000,000.

The highest average annual imports were reached under the present act, $4,022,000,000 per year or $34.13 per capita of our population. These imports aggregate $1,150,000,000 more per year than the average under the Underwood Act. They represent imports of practically $6.85 per capita for every person in the United States per year in excess of the imports under the Underwood Act. The average per capita balance of trade under the present law has been $5.35, as compared to $21.21 under the Underwood Act. The per capita balance of trade under the last year of the Underwood Act was $6.20.

From the standpoint of protection, the question is whether or not we are adequately preserving the American market for the American producer. Considered from this general standpoint, the question is not so much the question of the amount of imports as the relation of imports to exports. We sell when it is to our advantage, we buy when it is to our advantage. We gain in both transactions. If our sales exceed our purchases, we secure a larger market for domestic labor and materials than we surrendered to our foreign customers. We gave a market to our imported products; we enjoyed a greater market for our exports. If our imports are large and our exports correspondingly larger, the fact that we have large imports must be regarded as a favorable instead of an unfavorable condition of trade. When imports displace domestic industry to the aggregate reduction of American industry, we face a situation that makes protective legislation a necessary remedy.

BALANCE OF TRADE

The first 52 years of the country, up to about 1842, produced an adverse balance of trade. For the succeeding 52 years, we had an adverse or a comparatively small balance of trade. Under the last year of the Wilson Act we had a balance of trade of $286,000,000, the largest in our history up to that time. That year may be said to mark the beginning of the period of large balances of trade. Under the Dingley Act, which was in effect for 12 years following the Wilson Act, we had an average balance of trade of $506,000,000. We have had no adverse balances of trade for any year since the McKinley Act. The last adverse balance of trade occurred under that act in 1893 and amounted to $18,000,000.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, following the enactment of the Underwood Act on the 3d of the preceding October, the balance of trade in our favor was $470,000,000. This balance was $8,000,000 less than the average balance under the Payne law and was over $182,000,000 less than the balance of the preceding year and represented increased imports amounting to about $81,000,000 and decreased exports amounting to about $101,000,000. The balance of trade under the last year of the Payne Act was $102,000,000 greater than any former balance of trade in the history of the country up to that time.

The second year of the Underwood Act, the first year of the World War, produced a balance of trade in our favor of $1,094,000,000.

The balance of trade in favor of the United States under the last year of the Underwood Act was $1,160,000,000. Under the first year of the present tariff act the balance was $175,774,000. This balance represented an increase of imports over the last year of the Underwood Act amounting to $570,000,000 and increased exports of $185,000,000. During the second year of the present law, the imports decreased about $226,000,000 and exports increased about $355,000,000, resulting in a balance of about $758,000,000.

The average annual balance of trade under the Underwood Act for the eight years of its existence was $2,279,000,000. The average annual balance of trade for the seven years under the present tariff act has been $689,000,000. Thus, the average balance of trade under the Underwood Act was $1,590,000,000 greater than under the present tariff act. Last year we had exports of a little over $5,000,000,000 and imports of a little over $4,000,000,000.

This difference in the balance of trade under these two acts is reflected in the imports per capita under the two acts. The average imports per capita under the Underwood Act were $27.28, while the average imports per capita under the present act are $34.13. The present act shows we still have a balance of trade as favorable as healthy conditions of international trade would suggest as desirable. The enormous balance of trade under the Underwood Act reflected an unhealthy, abnormal condition of trade, too favorable to be placed on an enduring foundation. Even our present balance of trade and volume of trade, so largely induced by foreign loans, reflect abnormal conditions that lack that stable, enduring foundation which we should desire on which to rest a successful foreign trade over a long period of years.

"INVISIBLE" AND OTHER INTERCHANGES

The Tariff Commission has also furnished an estimate of the total invisible items consisting of tourists' expenditures, ocean-freight payments, and immigration remittances that affect the actual trade balances between this and foreign countries. The earliest statistics available are for 1919 to 1921, inclusive, and are based on studies made by Harvard University. It is estimated that these items of foreign expenditures for that period average $660,000,000 per year. It is further estimated that from 1922 to January 1, 1928, the average annual expenditures of that class amounted to $765,000,000 per year.

It is estimated that from 1919 to 1921 the average annual net interest on foreign investments amounted to $60,000,000 per year, and since that period—up to 1928—the interest on foreign investments has averaged $449,000,000 per year.

It is still further estimated that the average annual net increases of long-term American investments abroad amount to $734,000,000 per year.

These items are based on estimates as contrasted with certain specific information, but are of such reliability as to largely demonstrate a greater equality of interchange between these other nations than the mere statistics of trade disclose.

FREE IMPORTS

The fourth column of the above table shows the average per cent of imports admitted free of duty under these various tariff acts. There has been a rather steady trend of free imports from 8.19 per cent under the act of 1870 to 66.28 per cent under the Underwood Act. The percentage of free imports under the present act is 63.23. This percentage of free imports under the Underwood Act was the highest of the last 60 years. It was only 3.5 per cent higher than under the existing tariff act.

This table shows a strong tendency to increase free imports ever since 1872. Notable increases of 21 per cent were made under the act of 1872, over 19 per cent under the McKinley Act of 1890, and about 14 per cent under the Underwood Act of 1913. Percentage decreases of free imports occurred only under the Wilson Act, the Dingley Act, and the present law. Thus decreases of free imports occurred only under three of these nine tariff acts.

Approximately two-thirds of all imports into the United States during the last 16 years have been admitted free of duty. Free imports exceeded dutiable imports first under the McKinley Act in 1890 when 52.45 per cent were admitted free. In other words, over half of our imports came in free of duty under that act; 49.45 per cent came in free under the Wilson Act; free imports were reduced to 45 per cent under the act of 1897, and beginning with the act of 1909 over half of all imports have come in free of duty.

AD VALOREM RATES

The ad valorem rates of duty on dutiable imports maintained a substantial level from 1870 to 1913, a period of 43 years. The average duty under the various acts covering this period was 43.95 per cent. The lowest duty collected under any act of this period was under the Payne Act of 1909 and amounted to 40.77 per cent. The next lowest duty collected was under the Wilson Act in the Cleveland administration, when the average duty collected was 41.58 per cent.

The rates of duty collected under the tariff act of the Cleveland administration, as compared with other tariff acts, are particularly interesting, inasmuch as that act has received widespread denunciation as a "free trade act." Even to this day, 32 years after that act was repealed, politicians describe it as a "free trade act," under which imports "flooded" American markets to the exclusion of American products. The facts give little support to this charge. The average duties under this act were only 2.37 per cent lower than the average under the acts of the 43-year period following 1870.

The average imports per capita under the Wilson Act were lowest of any tariff act of the last 60 years, being only $10.72 per capita. The average imports per capita for the 43-year period was $12.55, or $1.83 higher than the average imports under the Wilson Act.

The Dingley Act, following the Wilson Act, increased rates 6 per cent and decreased free imports 4 per cent. During the 12 years of its existence there was an average balance of trade of $500,000,000 per year.

Then followed the Payne Act, under which rates were reduced over 6 per cent and free imports were increased about 7 per cent. Under this act our volume of trade increased $1,200,000,000 and our imports increased $620,000,000. The average balance of trade was $28,000,000 less per year than under the former act.

Then in 1913 came the Underwood Act, under which dutiable rates were decreased 14 per cent and free imports increased 14 per cent. The war came and our volume of trade increased $4,450,000,000, imports increased $1,200,000,000, and our average balance of trade became $2,280,000,000.

Under the act of 1922 we increased the dutiable rate 11 per cent and decreased free imports 3 per cent. Our average volume of trade increased $700,000,000 per year over the average of the Underwood Act and our imports increased $1,150,000,000. Our average balance of trade has been $450,000,000 less than the last annual balance of trade under the Underwood Act. During the last year the balance of trade was over $1,000,000,000, or about $100,000,000 less than the last year of the Underwood Act.

The highest tariff act of the last 60 years was the McKinley Act, under which the average duties were 48.63. The next highest act was the Dingley Act with duties at 46.62. The McKinley Act was in effect during a period of depressed prices. The Dingley Act was in effect under more favorable economic conditions. These two acts, substantially the same in rates, furnish a contrast as to results in favor of the Dingley Act.

Under the act of 1909, with its decreased duties and increased free imports, our volume of trade expanded greatly and left our balance of trade substantially the same as under the former act. The Underwood Act, with its greatly reduced rates and increased free imports, is so closely associated with the war period as to be unsatisfactory as a basis of comparison. Its generally favorable volume of trade and balance of trade were beyond what could be hoped for in any tariff act under normal conditions.

Ad valorem rates under the present tariff act have been equivalent to 37.84 per cent. This is the lowest rate collected under any tariff act of the last 50 years, with the exception of the Underwood Act. This rate is 6 per cent lower than the average rate of all tariff acts of this period prior to 1913. We have heard frequent references to the existing tariff act as being "the highest in our history," but this statement is not supported by the facts, as eight of the last nine acts have had higher rates than the present law.

A large volume of trade and large balance of trade have resulted under our present tariff act. Last year we had $5.000,000,000 of exports and $4,000,000,000 of imports. This status of our trade is itself still largely affected by the abnormal conditions growing out of the war.

An examination of these rates of duty in comparison with the trade during the last 40 years indicates that notwithstanding these high and fluctuating rates, economic conditions have powerfully influenced our international trade.

POLITICAL CONTRASTS

Of the nine general tariff acts written in this 59-year period, seven were enacted under Republican administrations and two under Democratic administrations. The first Democratic measure was enacted under Cleveland in 1894 and was in effect for three years. The second was the Underwood Act, enacted under the Wilson administration in 1913, and was in effect for nine years. The statistical history of the operation of these tariff acts fails to show decisively different results that the average American would expect to find. If there is any surprising contrast between results under Democratic and Republican tariff legislation, it is in the fact that a higher percentage of the American market has been enjoyed by the American producer under Democratic than under Republican tariff laws. In other words, there has been a higher percentage of imports under Republican than under Democratic tariff laws. Considered as a whole, the first Democratic tariff act was a high-tariff measure. It was in effect during the last half of a trade depression. The second Democratic tariff act prescribed the most moderate rates of all tariff acts of the last 60 years. Abnormally favorable balances of trade occurred under that act, even up to the last year of its existence.

Many will contend that a larger import trade would induce a still larger export trade with a corresponding advantage to American enterprise. That is what happened under the Underwood Act, but under such conditions as to neither prove nor disprove such contention. The abnormal conditions under that act preclude any safe basis of comparison of the effect of its general rate level on trade as contrasted with similar rate levels under peace-time conditions of commerce.

We deal upon a protection tariff plan of prices. Any revision of our tariff must have regard to our established industries. The value of trade expansion involving increases of both exports and imports must depend upon the prudence with which a line is drawn between legitimate and uneconomic industries. The value of the trade must be measured by the general public interest and accordingly encouraged or restricted.

It seems safe to assume that any general lowering of rates sufficient to induce largely increased imports, though correspondingly increased exports might result, would, during the period of readjustment, involve discouragements to industries built up under and dependent upon the protective system. The more radical the changes that might be made, the greater would be the economic disturbance by tariff readjustments.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

In 1913 the total international commerce moving between the nations of the world amounted to $41,000,000,000. In 1922 this world commerce amounted to $46,000,000,000. In 1927 international trade was $65,000,000,000. America has about $9.000,000,000 of this commerce. In 1913 the United States had about one-tenth of the world trade. In 1920 we had about one-fourth of the world trade and now we have about one-seventh. The relative gain in our proportion of the world trade in 1920 was undoubtedly due to the economic impairment of our competitor nations during and following the World War. During the last seven years, though we have had an increased volume of exports and imports, our relative position in world trade has been decreasing in view of the rapid economic recovery of Europe. The large market America is furnishing for imported products, $4,000,000,000 per year, has contributed materially to that economic recovery. At the same time, the large exports we have marketed with them has contributed to our favorable advance in trade.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS PER CAPITA

Columns showing exports and imports per capita give a more concrete and understandable index to our international trade. These two columns reduce the question of international trade to its simplest terms. We trace exports from $13.53 per capita in 1890 to $39.48 per capita under the act of 1922. We contrast that with imports of $11.73 per capita in 1890 and imports of $34.13 per capita under the act of 1922 and we get a good understanding of the increased extent to which we have become a market for foreign products, the increased extent to which other countries are taking our products in proportion to population and the increased balance of trade that has resulted to our country. We find that the least per capita imports of the last 60 years were under the Wilson Act and amounted to $10.72 and that the greatest average imports per capita were under the present act, amounting $34.13.

We find that under the first of these acts, the balance of trade per capita was only $1.80 and under the second of these acts the balance of this trade per capita was $5.33. Therefore, we conclude that nothwithstanding the much greater imports per capita, on the whole America gained by the increased trade.

DUTIES COLLECTED

This table shows that the least duties collected under any of these tariff acts was under the Wilson Act, and amounted to $150,000,000 per year. The greatest amount was collected under the present act, amounting to an average of $559,000,000 per year.

With the adopting of the income tax 16 years ago, followed by the World War, customs duties ceased to be a major source of Federal revenue, yet the present income is over $200,000,000 greater than in any former act. A change in these revenues is not a motive for the present revision.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for one minute to make a statement preliminary to making a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, there was messaged over from the Senate a bill (S. 1452) now on the Speaker's table. It is a bill authorizing the State of West Virginia to take over two bridges authorized by the last Congress to be constructed by private parties and to complete their construction as State bridges. Authority was given by the last Congress to private individuals to construct the bridges, and the State desires to finish their construction and make them free bridges as soon as possible. This bill authorizes the State so to do.

I think it is a matter of public interest that the bill should be passed. I have submitted it to the other members of the subcommittee on bridges in the last Congress, and it is agreeable to them. I have also submitted it to the majority and the minority leaders and informed them of the contents of the bill, and it seems to be agreeable to them. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be taken from the Speaker's table and considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, this is not an omnibus bill, but it is for the two bridges mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. DENISON. It authorizes the State to take over the two bridges and finish their construction.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, has construction commenced on these bridges?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; they are being constructed or are to be constructed by private concerns; they are to be toll bridges, and the State wants to make them free bridges as soon as possible.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Has sufficient investigation been made to determine whether or not the State will be held up by these private concerns who received the franchise at the last session?

Mr. DENISON. The State officials of West Virginia are purchasing these bridges, and I assume that they know what is just and what is right, and they merely want the authority to do this in order to complete the bridges and make them free as soon as possible.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Has the committee consulted the Member of Congress representing the district where these bridges are to be constructed?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; he is right by the side of the gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES. One of them is in my district, and the other is in the district of my colleague [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman does not think there will be any undue exploitation by the parties who had the franchise?

Mr. HUGHES. No; there will not be any exploitation. It is perfectly satisfactory all around.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman for information—Has Congress heretofore at any time incorporated the provision for maintenance as part of section 5 which relates to the method the State of West Virginia shall pursue in case tolls are charged and in wiping out the cost by amortization or otherwise? Have they enacted similar provisions in previous legislation?

Mr. DENISON. That provision is put in every bridge bill coming from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was not the practice several years ago.

Mr. DENISON. No; since the gentleman has been out of Congress this provision has been inserted in all such bills and is now the customary provision.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This bill, if I understand the gentleman, has been examined and has the approval of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS]?

Mr. DENISON. I have spoken to each of those gentlemen, and they approve it.

Mr. GARNER. And they constituted in the last Congress the subcommittee on bridges?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Has this matter been submitted to the Bureau of Roads?

Mr. DENISON. I am unable to advise the gentleman in that particular. This is a Senate bill, and it is on the Speaker's table. The bill authorizes the State of West Virginia to take over these bridges and complete their construction and make them State bridges.

Mr. DOWELL. And then they are to become free bridges upon the payment of the cost?

Mr. DENISON. Exactly.

Mr. DOWELL. And both of those, as I understand it, are to be taken over by the State of West Virginia?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. And when the State completes them, when the money is returned again to the State, they are to be free bridges.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. And that is the provision in the bill?

Mr. DENISON. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of West Virginia, by its State bridge commission, be, and is hereby, authorized to acquire, maintain, and operate the bridge being erected over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek and the approaches thereto in said State, and that said bridge shall be deemed a lawful structure if constructed in accordance with the plans and location approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War under dates of April 20, 1928, and April 23, 1928, respectively, and in accordance with an act approved May 1, 1928, authorizing the construction of said bridge by the Cabin Creek Kanawha Bridge Co., its successors and assigns.

SEC. 2. The State of West Virginia, by its State bridge commission, is authorized to acquire the right to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge over the Kanawha River at St. Albans, in said State, and the approaches thereto under an act approved May 1, 1928, authorizing the St. Albans Nitro Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate said bridge, and said bridge shall be a lawful structure if constructed in accordance with the plans and location approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War under dates of May 14, 1928, and May 19, 1928, respectively, and in accordance with the last mentioned act.

SEC. 3. Both of said bridges shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, other than those requiring the approval of plans, specifications, and location by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War before the commencement of construction.

SEC. 4. The times for commencing and completing the construction of the said bridge at or near St. Albans are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 5. If tolls are charged for the use of said bridges, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridges under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid by the State for the bridge at or near Cabin Creek and the cost to the State of constructing the bridge at or near St. Albans, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion of the bridge at or near St. Albans. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, the two bridges shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridges and their approaches under economical management.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DECEASED ALABAMA SOLDIERS IN PERMANENT EUROPEAN CEMETERIES

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the names of World War veterans of the State of Alabama who are buried in the cemeteries of France.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama renews his request that he may print in the RECORD the names of World War veterans of the State of Alabama who are buried in France. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection made a moment ago.

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, no single act of Congress has been so universally approved as the one directing the Secretary of War to arrange for the mothers and widows of members of the military forces of the United States who are buried in permanent European cemeteries to make pilgrimages to such cemeteries at Government expense during the period from May 1, 1930, to October 31, 1933.

I wish to insert the names of those immortal sons of Alabama who made the supreme sacrifice for their country and whose remains are interred in the American cemeteries abroad.

NEW YORK SOLDIERS BURIED IN OVERSEAS CEMETERIES

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the names of World War veterans of the State of New York who are buried in France.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, under leave given me by the House, I am presenting herewith a list prepared by the Quartermaster General of the Army, which was asked for by me, giving the names, organizations, and grave locations of members of the American forces, enlisted from the State of New York, whose remains are now interred in the cemeteries of Europe.

The list is as follows:

KEY TO NAMES OF PERMANENT AMERICAN CEMETERIES IN EUROPE

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CLARKE] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a speech delivered by himself, together with certain newspaper comments on the attitude of the farm organizations toward Mr. CLARKE's support of President Hoover.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the printing of newspaper articles.

Mr. CANNON. They are just a few small paragraphs.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the addresses enumerated already I be permitted to address the House to-morrow for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes to-morrow at the conclusion of the other addresses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 50. Joint resolution to provide for the observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table another bill with reference to the construction of bridges. Last week the Senate passed a bill, which I may call an omnibus bridge bill, which extends the time for beginning and completing the construction of a number of bridges that were authorized during the last Congress.

Under the general bridge law, where Congress grants a franchise to build a bridge, the franchise expires by law unless the construction of the bridge is begun within one year and completed within three years from the approval of the act. Sometimes it requires several months to present the plans for a bridge and have them approved by the War Department, so that the time may expire before they have opportunity to begin construction of the bridge. In such cases they have to come back to Congress and get the time for beginning the construction extended for a year.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, has this bill been considered by a committee of the House?

Mr. DENISON. This bill was considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce, and as a matter of convenience they passed this omnibus bill extending the times for beginning and completing several bridges. The bill is now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. DYER. What is the emergency about this before next December?

Mr. DENISON. I am told by Members of the Senate who are interested in these bills that they are anxious to begin the construction of these bridges, and they want to do that this summer while the weather is good. They can not do it in the wintertime. I have no personal information regarding the local conditions connected with any of the bridges.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. VINSON of Georgia, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two weeks, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Flag Day, which falls on to-morrow, I may extend a portion of my own remarks on Flag Day in the RECORD; my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his own remarks on the subject of Flag Day. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

FARM RELIEF

Mr. O'CONNOR of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object—the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] the other day in a conversation suggested that before unanimous-consent requests to address the House are granted an inquiry should be made as to what subject, by me on this side and by the gentleman from Connecticut on that side.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that I was unavoidably detained, and I desire to announce that if I had been present when the motion to instruct the conferees on the farm relief bill was voted on I would have voted "aye." I was unavoidably detained.

LISTS OF AMERICAN SOLDIERS BURIED IN EUROPE

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter containing the names of West Virginia soldiers and sailors who are buried in the cemeteries in Europe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that there will be numerous requests from Members from various States to insert such lists. Will there be duplication of such lists presented by Members of either body, or will Members from each State submit such lists?

Mr. BACHMANN. I have not made inquiry as to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I can see that there will be other requests coming from Members representing other States to print these lists, and if objection were to be made here they no doubt would be inserted in the other body. The Members and Senators should act in unity and prevent a duplication.

Mr. BACHMANN. I do not know of any Member from my State who is making such a request.

Mr. GARNER. Why not ask for every State in the Union? I understand there have been a considerable number of requests for the preparation of such lists. I think the lists should be set out in the shape of a public document or published in the RECORD, including all the States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. PARKS. May I ask the gentleman if that is a list of those who died overseas?

Mr. BACHMANN. Yes.

Mr. PARKS. The department told me this morning that they were making up lists requested by individual Members.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this should be done in the shape of a public document. I was about to ask permission to submit a list for the State of Georgia, but I think it would be to the interest of the country at large to have the lists published all in one document.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That can hardly be done until we know what the expense would be.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me that we might well wait until the whole list is prepared. It is a good idea, but it ought not to be authorized until all the lists are completed.

Mr. BACHMANN. I want to insist on this list being placed in the RECORD at this time because I have made arrangements to have copies sent to people in my State. I have no objection to the suggestion of the gentleman as to the general matter of public policy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

LIST OF DECEASED SOLDIERS FROM WEST VIRGINIA BURIED IN AMERICAN CEMETERIES IN EUROPE

Mr. BACHMANN. Mr. Speaker, during the Seventieth Congress a law was passed making provision for pilgrimages to the European cemeteries by mothers and widows of the members of the military and naval forces of the United States whose remains rest there. These pilgrimages are to be made at the expense of the United States Government.

The Quartermaster General of the United States Army, Maj. Gen. B. F. Cheatham, has furnished me a list of the deceased of the American military forces from the State of West Virginia, including the names, organizations, and grave locations of those who served in the World War and whose remains are interred over there.

The following is a list of the names of the soldiers, sailors, and marines, and the places of their burial:

[1] Kerfautras Cemetery, Brest, France.

The act referred to is as follows:

PUBLIC, NO. 952, SEVENTIETH CONGRESS

S. 5332

An act to enable the mothers and widows of the deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines of the American forces now interred in the cemeteries of Europe to make a pilgrimage to these cemeteries

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to arrange for pilgrimages to cemeteries in Europe by mothers and widows of members of the military or naval forces of the United States who died in the military or naval service at any time between April 5, 1917, and July 1, 1921, and whose remains are now interred in such cemeteries. Such pilgrimages shall be made at the expense of the United States under the conditions set forth in section 2.

SEC. 2. The conditions under which such pilgrimages may be made are as follows:

(a) Invitations to make the pilgrimages shall be extended in the name of the United States to the mothers and widows for whom the pilgrimages are authorized to be arranged under section 1.

(b) Upon acceptance of the invitation the mother or widow shall be entitled to make one such pilgrimage; but no mother or widow who has previous to the pilgrimage visited cemeteries described in section 1 shall be entitled to make any such pilgrimage, and no mother or widow shall be entitled to make more than one such pilgrimage.

(c) The pilgrimages shall be made at such times during the period from May 1, 1930, to October 31, 1933, as may be designated by the Secretary of War.

(d) For the purpose of the pilgrimages the Secretary of State shall (1) issue special passports, limited to the duration of the pilgrimage, to mothers and widows making the pilgrimages and to such personnel as may be selected to accompany and/or arrange for the pilgrimages, if such mothers, widows, and personnel are citizens of the United States, and (2) issue suitable travel documents if aliens. No fee for either of such documents or for any application therefor shall be charged. Such alien mothers, widows, and personnel shall be permitted to return and be granted admission to the United States without regard to any law, convention, or treaty relating to the immigration or exclusion of aliens, if the return is made within the period covered by the pilgrimage of the particular group or, in the case of personnel, within such times as the Secretary of War shall by regulation prescribe; except that in any case of unavoidable detention the Secretary of War may extend in such case the time during which return may be made without regard to such laws, conventions, or treaties.

(e) The pilgrimages shall be by the shortest practicable route and for the shortest practicable time, to be designated by the Secretary of War. No mother or widow shall be provided for at Government expense in Europe for a longer period than two weeks from the time of disembarkation in Europe to the time of reembarkation in Europe. In the case of any mother or widow willfully failing to continue the pilgrimage of her particular group, the United States shall not incur or be subject to any expense with regard to her pilgrimage after such failure.

(f) Vessels owned or operated by the United States Government or any agency thereof shall be used for transportation at sea wherever practicable.

(g) Suitable transportation, accommodations, meals, and other necessities pertaining thereto, as prescribed by the Secretary of War, shall be furnished each mother or widow included in any pilgrimage for the entire distance at sea and on land and while sojourning in Europe and while en route in the United States from home to port and from port to home. Cabin-class accommodations shall be furnished for all transportation at sea. No mother or widow shall be entitled, by reason of any payment made by or for her, to be furnished by the Government with transportation, accommodations, meals, and other necessities pertaining thereto different in kind from those prescribed by the Secretary of War for the pilgrimage of the particular group.

(h) All pilgrimages shall be made in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe as to the time, route, itineraries, composition of groups, accommodations, transportation, program, arrangements, management, and other matters pertaining to such pilgrimages.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act. The Secretary of War is directed to make an investigation for the purpose of determining (1) the total numbers of mothers and widows entitled to make the pilgrimages, (2) the number of such mothers and widows who desire to make the pilgrimages and the number who desire to make the pilgrimages during the calendar year 1930, and (3) the probable cost of the pilgrimages to be made. The Secretary of War shall report to the Congress not later than December 15, 1929, the results of such investigation.

SEC. 4. As used in this act—

(a) The term "mother" means mother, stepmother, mother through adoption, or any woman who stood in loco parentis to the deceased member of the military or naval forces for the year prior to the commencement of his service in such forces.

(b) The term "widow" means a widow who has not remarried since the death of the member of the military or naval forces.

Approved, March 2, 1929.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], a bridge bill. I find it is a matter of importance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think when a gentleman makes an objection he ought to stand by it until others at least can receive the information that he has. I object to the gentleman withdrawing his objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to renew his request?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. Now that the gentleman from Missouri has withdrawn his objection, I renew my unanimous-consent request to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 1453. I will say in explanation that this bill does not ask consent to build additional bridges. It only extends the time for beginning construction of bridges already authorized. In most cases the plans have been presented and possibly some of them been approved.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there are any private toll bridges included in this bill?

Mr. DENISON. There are.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I have about come to the conclusion to object to all private toll bridge bills coming before this Congress under unanimous consent.

Mr. DENISON. I will say to the gentleman that in all these cases both branches of the last Congress passed bills, and franchises have already been granted, and the plans have been presented to the War Department. I think it is not like the case of new bridge bills.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Can the gentleman inform the House whether any of these bridges are to be constructed under franchises granted to that notorious toll-bridge speculator, Mr. Elliott, or any corporation organized by him as a camouflage?

Mr. DENISON. I think I can assure the gentleman there is not one of them so involved.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman does not believe that any toll-bridge speculators are involved in these companies?

Mr. DENISON. I think I can assure the gentleman that is the case.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In view of the fact these are extensions and not new projects, I shall not object.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DENISON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. As I understand, the bill you now ask unanimous consent to consider is a bill extending the time for beginning construction as stated in bills that have already passed the Congress?

Mr. DENISON. That is true.

Mr. GARNER. In addition to that, there are certain amendments you hope to consider for certain bridges in the State of Tennessee?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And these matters have had the approval of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURTNESS], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PARKS]?

Mr. DENISON. I have consulted with each of those gentlemen in regard to the matter, and they say it is satisfactory to them.

Mr. GARNER. They understand the propositions to be offered and they approve them?

Mr. DENISON. That is true.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Assuming that to be true, what of it?

Mr. GARNER. "What of it" is this: I can not look over these bills. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is more industrious and, I presume, a little bit younger and has a disposition to know what is going on more in detail than the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Not at all.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know about this legislation. There is a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the Seventieth Congress composed of these three gentlemen, and when they have passed on a subject it is prima facie evidence to me it ought to have the consideration of the House, and that is the reason I do not object.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I can understand the gentleman's reasoning; but permit me to say to the gentleman from Texas, with all due respect and deference to the subcommittee, they have not kept abreast of the times. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. That may be true. I will let the gentlemen defend themselves about not keeping abreast of the times.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a brief question?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Do I understand amendments are going to be considered to this bill with the approval of the gentleman and his subcommittee after the unanimous-consent stage has passed?

Mr. DENISON. I ask unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill. The Senate bill contains only extensions of time in Senate bills. There are two or three Members of the House who have similar requests for extensions of time, and they have asked for the privilege of offering amendments. Of course, the House could vote down any amendment offered.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman and his subcommittee oppose all amendments that may be offered to the bill after it passes the unanimous-consent stage, which would include an authorization for new private toll bridges?

Mr. DENISON. Any amendments for new private toll bridges I will oppose.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. With that assurance, I shall not object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I understand this legislation is made necessary due to the provisions of the general bridge act?

Mr. DENISON. That is right.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How long has it been since the general bridge act was amended?

Mr. DENISON. It was passed in 1906. It has never been amended.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. There are a few Members here who are very anxious to get some amendment to the general bridge act, but we can not get the committee to bring in any such amendment.

Mr. DENISON. I may say to the gentleman that I have been spending a good deal of my time this session working on a bill amending the general bridge act, and I propose to have it in the Congress at the very beginning of the next session, and I will be very pleased to have the gentleman from Missouri give the bill consideration and help me get it through the House.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. With that assurance, I shall not object.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I trust the gentleman and the other leaders of the House will assist us in bringing in some other legislation which is very emergent for the States of the Southeast. The President of the Board of Managers of the Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers insist that they need an additional home for disabled volunteer soldiers. The Southeast is the place in which they desire to locate this home. This is an emergency matter, and I am simply mentioning this for the consideration of the gentleman.

Mr. DENISON. I will be pleased to help the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill referred to by the gentleman from Florida should not be considered at the present session without consideration by a committee of the House.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, now that the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Missouri and others have withdrawn their objection, permit me to point out that the most vicious thing about all these bridge propositions is the extension of time, because there you have the proof absolute that they have peddled these franchises around, have been unable to negotiate for them, and are asking for more time.

I am going to be consistent. There are nine propositions in this omnibus bill, and three of them are the very kind that some of us have been objecting to. If the gentleman wants to pass the six public bridges where permission is given to States or subdivisions thereof, I shall not object; and in order not to prolong the agony, Mr. Speaker, I object for the present.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—FARM RELIEF

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, the problem which to-day challenges the attention of this honorable body is as old as the industry itself, involving as it does 6,500,000 farmers representing a population of 30,000,000 of our citizens—an industry that is basic in its nature and means everything to the prosperity of our country. The President of the United States has given serious thought to the question as evidenced by the character of legislation he is urging. His attitude to-day is in keeping with the support by this legislative body offered to the other industries of this republic. They have been encouraged from the orderly beginning of our governmental progress. Farming is no exception to the rule.

We hear advocated by some a subsidy for the farming industry. It might be all well and good, Mr. Speaker, to vote the farmer a subsidy if the Congress of the United States were assured that the farmer needed this subsidy, and that he would get it after it was voted for him. President Hoover, for whom more votes were cast than for any other candidate for this great office, recognizes the need for a solution of the farmer's troubles, and for that purpose he called Congress in special session, not, in my judgment, with the hopes of effecting a complete solution, but to devise ways and means by which some immediate relief can be afforded.

We are in a measure steering our ship of state into uncharted waters, but happily we have the light of history, made so by the great economical giants of the past, and standing as we are to-day upon the shoulders of these giants we should be careful that we do not steer this ship of state too far out of its course. President Hoover recognized the existence of a national disorder. He expressed himself in this regard before his election. There is no expression that he has made since his election that is not in keeping with his every act and every word previous to his election. His message to the Congress impresses one that he wishes to approach the solution of this problem in a sane, rational way as others of like nature have been solved with soundness and discretion. It is not his purpose to treat symptoms, I am impressed; it is the cause he wishes to remove. It should be our high purpose and duty to provide him with the power which he asks for. When we shall have done this we will have discharged our duty as lawmakers. The responsibility is primarily with him. It should rest there, but it can not, unless we give to him a vote of confidence by passing the measure which he stands behind, as was given him by the American people in the election of November, 1928. When we give him this vote of confidence by passing the measure which he advocates we divest ourselves of any criticism that would properly be ours. Some of us are here no doubt because of that expression of confidence in him by the American electorate. The responsibility is lodged with us should we fail to respond to his mandate.

I feel it my duty, with my vote as a Congressman, to give the President what he asks in the way of legislation, and in no other way can the responsibility of the solution of this problem be placed with him. Should we adopt some other course which is not to his liking and not in keeping with his theory of governmental assistance in farm relief, we immediately become obstructionists in his administration by disregarding his ideals as he sees them and as he wishes to deal with them.

President Hoover was elected by the citizens of this Nation regardless almost of political affiliation. His great ability has been tried in the white-hot crucible of experience. Almost in every quarter of the earth and in every kind of emergency, under the most bewildering and trying conditions, he has proven himself the master even almost to the point of a miracle worker.

The debenture idea is a subsidy, and if there is any industry under God's canopy that impresses me as justifying a subsidy, it will be the farming industry of this country, but until the farming organizations are completed, until a farm board has been authorized, until money has been appropriated for the purpose of organizing cooperatives for the farmer's protection, and money advanced for his financial relief, no law, in my judgment, should be enacted until the farm organization has been developed to the point where we are assured that the producers of farm products will realize whatever subsidy is voted. I, therefore, Mr. Speaker, find myself, not only because I am here as a member of the party with which the President is affiliated but because of a just sense of duty which I owe to the protection of the farming industry, first voting for the law in keeping with Mr. Hoover's ideas which will carry out the first step of the farm organization, and then in succeeding Congresses, if it becomes necessary because of recorded experiences laid before this body by the agricultural board created under the farm-relief measure, we can add to this law, whether it be additional appropriations, a subsidy, or what not, I will be found if here casting my vote which will place the farming industry of this country upon a parity with other industries in keeping with the platform pledges of my party which elected Mr. Hoover President of the United States.

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, when this Congress convened on the 15th of April I, as a new Member, had high hopes that much would be done for the farming interests of this Nation. I regret that I have less hope now than then. I have observed the course of this legislation, and when the debenture feature of the farm bill was so overwhelmingly rejected by the vote registered I feel the object of our assembling, so far as the farmer is concerned, has been practically defeated. It seems to me the friends of agriculture are much in the minority, yet many voting to eliminate this feature of the bill profess to be friendly to agriculture. I have no right to impugn motives otherwise and can only marvel at their conception of relief. If they believe any substantial relief can be given the farmer unless he has the benefit of the debenture feature or a similar feature, and that a revision of the tariff upward will benefit agriculture, then I confess I am mentally incapable of conceiving such reasoning and fail to see how such could benefit the agricultural interests.

We assembled here in extra session by due proclamation of the President of the United States, discharging, as I understand, one of his pre-election obligations to the American people in promising that Congress would be so assembled for two main purposes. First, for the relief of the farming and the agricultural interests of the Nation; second, for limited revision of the present tariff law.

Certainly, if the President of the United States were not sincere in his declaration as to his wish to improve the agricultural condition of this country, and if he were not sincere in his opinion that it required a fair revision of the tariff arrangement before all would be well with the American people, any further efforts of this Congress will be in vain. My opinion is, had the President divorced farm relief from tariff and submitted only farm relief, much greater progress would have been made. I have witnessed two opposing interests undertaking to enact laws directly opposed to each other, and the result is only what might have been expected under such conditions. That interest supported by a majority of the Republican Party must of necessity be blessed and that by a minority must go unaided.

The tariff is sponsored by the industrial interests of the Nation and well has it been represented here. The heart and brains of the Republican Party have been with this expressed intention of this session. It is manifest to me the leaders of this party have given but little consideration to the agricultural interests. They have presented to this House the bill under consideration and demanded its passage. Their demands have been minutely executed. This, of course, is a wink at agriculture—a bashful flirtation.

The President was confronted early with the necessity of lending his great influence to either the farmer or the friend of industry. There was no escape for him. Had he been equally inclined my judgment is neither the industrial interest nor the agricultural interest would have been benefited at the expense of the other. The result would have been, as we Mississippi country boys used to say, "a dog fall." He declared early he would let this branch of the Government do the legislating, he would be the Executive. This was pretty, and I think was a correct position for him to occupy; but when the friends of agriculture seemed to have some chance to win by inserting in the bill the debenture feature, he was quick to express in strong and vigorous words his disapproval. It requires no special intelligence to know that after his suggestion as to this piece of legislation the friends of the farmer had no fair chance at this session. Was the President consistent? Has he legislated? Did he remain "hitched" to the duties of the Executive? I have an idea 30,000,000 Americans engaged in agriculture will answer, "He certainly has not."

Whether President Hoover has intentionally or unintentionally played into the hands of the industrial group at the expense of the farming interest, his course and expressions have irresistibly had such effects.

It is encouraging, however, to know that the progressive element of his party has joined with the majority of the Democrats and wisely sponsored the debenture feature for relief to the agricultural interest of the Nation. I voted for the farm relief measure written and sponsored by the leaders of the Republican Party in this House.

I realize, as do all Democrats, that under the rules of the House, dominated by the Republican leaders, it is impossible to secure the legislation actually placing agriculture on a parity with other interests. We were precluded under the rules from presenting for consideration the debenture feature without which, or a provision similar thereto, it is economically impossible to give agricultural interest the relief it should have. Yet, the bill passed by the House is the beginning of legislation which will ultimately evolve into enactments fair to this interest.

I thought, and still think, it is impossible under the wisest provisions of farm legislation to take care of the agricultural interest of the Nation wholly apart and disconnected from the application of the tariff law as passed by this House. When I heard so many Members of this House whose record in the past, I understand, have been outspoken and forcible against any proposed legislation in favor of the farming interest, and as many other Members who in the past have maintained that the revolving fund or the debenture feature was the only salvation of the agricultural interest meet on common ground and eloquently sponsor the bill on this floor, I was encouraged. Being a "tenderfoot," I did not know what it was all about.

When the Ways and Means Committee, or the Republican members thereof, brought forth this tariff bill my hopes vanished and my faith was weak. I wonder what the real honest-to-God thoughts of President Hoover were when he realized the attitude of the leaders of this party at this important epoch in an effort to secure the realization of his constructive promulgations. I wonder if he is wise enough to enjoy any real hope or to feel any encouraging breeze through the inconsistencies of the tariff proposals and agricultural relief.

A careful perusal and consideration of the tariff bill discloses that in a few instances agriculture and kindred products have small consideration at the hands of the Ways and Means Committee, and a like consideration of those affecting the industrial and already protected interests of the Nation will disclose clearly that where it is proposed to place one dollar in the pockets of agriculture and labor the industrial interest is permitted to extract seven or eight dollars from that same pocket.

I mention a few glaring proposals of the tariff bill, and it will not require a student of economic conditions or any expert of any interests to appreciate the inequalities of the bill, but "he who runs may read" and understand the craftiness of the leaders and manipulators.

Look at the sugar rate, whereby it is proposed to levy a heavy tax on this commodity. This is proposed under the guise of protecting an American industry. The facts are, only 17 per cent of the sugar consumed by the American people is produced at home, yet in order to enable the gigantic Sugar Trust of America to make its millions tribute is levied on the American consumer. Eighty-three per cent of the sugar consumed is imported, so this is the sugar schedule.

Look at the proposed tariff on finished cotton products. The major portion of the cotton crop of this Nation is exported to mills of foreign countries, and yet under the pretext of protecting American industry and American labor great tribute is sought to be levied on the American consumer by taxing the finished products of this commodity. The most stupid of us know this will tend to lower the price of cotton, and there are more cotton fabric than any other worn by the American people, and this is the relief to the cotton farmer.

Consider the tariff proposed on cement, and at the same time consider the great American need at the present for this necessary product. Much prating is made by the leaders of the present administration and by the champions of the proposed bill of the need of internal improvement. In every hamlet, district, county, and State of the American Union better roads are demanded; great building projects are proposed and desired and much under construction; and yet under the pretense of stimulating an American enterprise and to flirt with labor this form of taxation is proposed. So this is a part of the scheme to relieve the American consumer.

A careful perusal of the entire tariff bill from A to Z discloses very few deductions have been made in the tariff on industrial products, but many advances made. It may be that the fathers of this bill will be able to fool themselves, may have been wise and cunning enough to fool the Chief Executive himself, but certainly the masses and the millions of farmers and their families of this Nation are not fooled, nor will they be cajoled into forgetting the recent promises of the President and the high hopes entertained that this Congress would give the relief they know they are entitled to. This relief a large majority of the American people had a right to expect.

There are many glaring, unjust features of the proposed tariff bill. I shall not take time to call attention to many.

The whole structure bristles with advantages to the already protected interests and with injustice to the masses. One of the most ridiculous arguments made on the floor of this House by the proponents of this measure is, "If you place a tariff on sugar and other commodities, you will not enhance the sale price to the American public." If manufacturers and the favored few are benefited by the tariff, how on earth can they receive such benefits if the American consumer is not penalized? If there could be such, I would denominate this reasoning "mental legerdemain." It occurs to me that to accept the logic of such proponents would be to "knock the brains out of common sense and cut the throat of reason."

I represent a constituency comprised in about equal proportion of farming and industry. Therefore I could not consistently oppose a fair revision of the tariff law advantageous to business; neither could I consistently desire an undue advantage thereby in favor of the agricultural interest. I am happy to occupy such a position, for thereby I must cast my vote in the interest of American industry and in the interest of agriculture and labor at the same time. I feel if this Congress were composed of more Representatives in like position the disastrous condition could easily be adjusted. But when I witness the leaders and makers of this tariff law are inspired solely in the interest of the manufacturers and industry, without the slightest interest in the farmer and laborer, the small business and consumers, I have but scant hope that this session of the Congress will bless the American people to any great extent.

May we indulge in the hope that the President, somewhere and somehow in his own good manner, is demanding the leaders of his party to dismount from their high-handedness in perfecting the tariff bill and in some degree cause them to respect his promises, and at least may we hope they will assume some interest in the general American welfare?

Let us, though of small faith, take renewed hope in a partial surrender of the Ways and Means Committee upon hearing the plaudits of the American people on the position of the advocates of debenture and in the hope the present attitude of the leaders of this branch of the legislation be tempered and a desire to assist the agricultural interest be restored here when we again consider the tariff bill.

Pass your tariff measure as originally written; refuse to be fair, equitable, and just to the farmer and the agricultural interest; undertake to hoodwink American labor; repudiate the mandate of the American voter, reflected in the recent national election, by your creed of "might makes right"; with your tremendous majority here, continue upon your knees to pay homage to the special interests; and if you do, you but delay the blessed day when every American shall by the law of this land share an equal opportunity. There will then come that day when the indomitable American spirit will incite its manhood to arise from the ashes of your despoiled opportunity and demand its just consideration. Then when the ballots of the American people have been registered, on that day you will surely be relegated to the limbo of the past and be numbered among those who have been faithless to a solemn, majestic trust.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I represent a district in Ohio very fertile and the finest agricultural district in the State. It is the Corn Belt where corn is king and hogs a safe bet. It is also the home of the sugar beet, where the smoke of sugar refineries rises. It is also well blessed with diversification; that is to say, it has splendid crops of wheat, corn, and oats, and is the home of a numerous cow population, where beef and dairy cattle abound, and thoroughbred flocks of poultry are to be seen on every hand.

The farmers are my constituents, and are the important and predominant class, especially the German farmers. These thrifty people, as a rule, are not clamoring for farm relief. But there has been such extensive propaganda for years, promulgated by the wheat farmers of other sections of the country, and the professional farm agitators located in Washington and retained here by various farmer organizations at considerable expense, until the farmers of every section of the country regardless of conditions really think there is a necessity for "farm relief."

The Congress has for some time past regarded it as a necessary question to deal with. Within the last few days it seems to have become a political issue rather than an economic question, which it really is. My district belongs to neither Michigan nor Indiana, for the reason that it is composed of the seven northwest counties of Ohio. When I came to Congress I was placed upon the Agricultural Committee because of my location and the pronounced agricultural characteristics of the district, and not because I was a farmer, but because I was raised in that rural section and had published a newspaper there for a great many years and was thought to be farmer-minded.

For the past seven years I have been sitting as a member of the Agricultural Committee of the House, composed mostly of attorneys, listening to what the farmers really wanted for farm relief. I soon discovered that in reality the entire farm relief question, so called, was an economic proposition and that politics should not enter into it. At least the committee never practiced politics in consideration of its question, but seemed to be entirely nonpartisan. The committee, I think, realized that such was the condition and were unable to definitely determine just what the various farm organizations would agree upon. The nearest approach we ever came to solving the problem was when we reported out of the committee the McNary-Haugen bills; but these measures did not meet with the approval of the gamblers, the stockmen, much less the great army of consumers. The influence set to work to defeat these bills was so tremendous and powerful that while passed by Congress they were twice vetoed.

I followed the committee on all these occasions. I conscientiously tried to get farm relief legislation. Never at any time did I vote against the farmer, although realizing that none of the measures were perfect.

Now we have arrived at another crisis in this whole question. We must determine whether we want farm relief, or whether we shall split hairs over the question and never act. What this Congress needs is action and not an indeterminate haggling over comparative nonessentials. I for one am for action with a swift and heavy hand, and am prepared to act now by disagreeing to this conference report and by instructing that august body at the other end of this Capitol to remove from this farm-relief question their self-appointed political interference known as the debenture plan.

I said during the campaign that I was willing to trust the President. It was not idle talk then; I meant it, and I mean it now. The President is an Iowa man, born and bred, and is farmer minded. Coupled with it he is also commercial minded, and the two qualifications together should eminently fit him to work out this House plan as now enacted and as will best benefit the whole country. The House plan sets up the machinery of a board of eight members with great powers. This board is to look after the surpluses and the stabilization of prices on farm products through the agencies of cooperative and accurate marketing. He appoints the members of this board, and these gentlemen are to be responsible to him and to him alone. It seems to me that just now the merits or demerits of the debenture plan are not at issue and not to be considered. The question is: Shall we have or not have farm relief, and have it now?

I, therefore, assume the full measure of responsibility as a representative of my people and decide for them, as a true representative should decide, for the draft of this conference report bill with debenture left out.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks with respect to the debenture plan, undoubtedly the proposed debenture plan would in a degree benefit the farmers if applied and properly administered, but section 10 (a) provides:

EXPORT DEBENTURES

SEC. 10. (a) Whenever the board finds it advisable, in order to carry out the policy declared in section 1 with respect to any agricultural commodity, to issue export debentures with respect to such commodity, the board shall give notice of such finding to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon the receipt of such notice it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, commencing and terminating at such time as the board shall prescribe, to issue export debentures to any farmer, cooperative association, stabilization corporation, or other person with respect to such quantity of the commodity or any manufactured food product thereof or any product manufactured from cotton or tobacco, if the cotton or tobacco out of which it is manufactured if exported in the raw material would have been entitled to receive a debenture therefor, as such person may from time to time export from the United States to any foreign country. The export debenture shall be in an amount to be computed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, at the debenture rate for the commodity or product that is in effect at the time of exportation. Any such computation shall be final.

Note, the debenture may be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury only whenever the board finds it advisable to carry out the policy declared in section 1. A fair question is, in the event a board is established as provided in the bill, to be appointed by the President—a board responsive to the President—of course no one would accept of a position unless willing to carry out the policy of the President. The President at numerous times has made his position clear in respect to the debenturé plan. In his letter of April 20, 1929, to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, he gave 10 explicit reasons against the adoption of the debenture plan. At numerous times he has made it clear that he is not in sympathy with the debenture plan. Is it not fair to assume that the board appointed by the President and not in sympathy with the plan—a board responsive to the President—it would never find it advisable to give the required notice to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue the export debentures? If so, the only authority granted for the issuance of debentures would never be exercised; consequently no relief whatever could be afforded under the proposed debenture plan.

In all candor, if the debenture is practicable, workable, and beneficial, by all means it should be mandatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to issue debentures. If its aim is to make it of benefit to the producers there should be no ifs or ands about it. We should come out in the open and make it real, and not imaginary.

Further on, it provides, "Export debenture shall be issued not only to the farmers, cooperative associations, stabilization corporations, or other persons with respect to the quantity of the commodity," but, mind you, to "any manufactured food product thereof," or any product manufactured from cotton or tobacco if the cotton or tobacco out of which it is manufactured, if exported in the raw material, would have been entitled to receive a debenture therefor," and "such person may from time to time export from the United States to any foreign country * * * in an amount to be computed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury."

Evidently not a debenture altogether for the benefit of the producer, but more particularly for the manufacturer to reap the benefits therefrom.

Under it exporters of manufactured products would be entitled to the debenture. If also an importer, they might apply the debenture in payment on imports. For example, spinners of cotton, exporting in 1927, $959,616,000 of manufactures of cotton, now already protected by the tariff of from 30 to 40 per cent ad valorem, would receive in addition thereto 2 cents per pound, equivalent to more than 10 per cent. Manufacturers of cigars in addition to the debentures would receive from 53 cents to $2.75 per pound tariff protection, and manufacturers of cigarettes in addtion to the $4.50 per pound and 25 per cent ad valorem would also receive the debentures.

Take, for instance, an importer, also in the exporting business of such products, or who might arrange with the manufacturer to export in his name manufactured products of commodities, might draw debentures on the products exported and use them in payment of duty upon imports, and might in many instances absorb all the benefits without affecting the price paid to the producers.

Subsection (d) provides that the debenture rate shall be one-half of the rate of duty in effect and the rate on cotton, 2 cents a pound. There is no tariff on cotton of the type exported and no tariff is suggested. At the current rate of duty on exportable portions of the commodities debentures would be as follows:

Commodity	Exports	Tariff	Debenture rate	Total
Wheat (1928)	191,048,000	$0.42	$0.21	$40,120,080
Corn (1927)	19,410,000	.15	.075	1,455,750
Beef (1928)	24,000,000	.03	.015	360,000
Lard (1928)	783,000,000	.01	.005	3,915,000
Butter (1927)	5,048,000	.12	.06	302,880

The exports of cotton varies from year to year, and has ranged in value from 1910 to 1927, from $551,900,000 up to $1,137,000,000. The number of bales exported has ranged from 2,742,968 in 1923 to 4,897,063 in 1927, and at the rate of $10 per bale of 500 net pounds would be from $27,429,680 up to $48,970,630—in other words, a subsidy from twenty-seven to forty-eight millions to the producers and manufacturers in addition to the debentures on manufactured goods aggregating many millions of dollars.

If the party platform pledges of the two parties "to place the farmer on a equality with other" is to be fulfilled, why only one-half—redeeming party platforms to the extent of one-half of the tariff protection they are entitled to—why not redeem in full? Fifty per cent of an obligation is in no way a fulfillment of a contract. Men of honor hold that every obligation, great or small, shall be redeemed unconditionally. Why compromise? If so, it takes two to make a bargain. In this case the compromise is determined by Congress, and the producers are left out of the agreement.

Admitting that the debenture plan has merit, and that it would advance the price of commodities to the extent of the debenture, and which, of course, in the aggregate would afford substantial benefit but with the uncertainty of its application, why merely a gesture—why not a mandate?

Section 10 (a) provides that—

> In order to prevent undue stimulation in the production of any debenturable agricultural commodity, whenever the board finds prior to the beginning of a crop year that the probable production of any debenturable commodity during such crop year will exceed the average annual production of such debenturable agricultural commodity for the preceding five years, it shall by proclamation prescribe that the export debenture rates for such commodity shall be reduced by the percentages hereinafter fixed.

This is a further compromise, and falls far short of fulfillment of our obligations under party platform pledges.

If the aim of the measure is to make the tariff effective to the farmers, as clearly set out in section No. 1, and as the board is directed to do in the declaration of policy "to aid in preventing and controlling surpluses in any agricultural commodity through orderly production and distribution, so as to maintain advantageous domestic markets and prevent such surpluses from causing undue and excessive fluctuations or depressing the price for the commodity" and also providing "that the Federal farm board shall execute the powers vested in it by this act to aid to the fullest extent in carrying out the policy declared" rather than to enact into law a provision so indefinite and vague in its terms, it should be made mandatory—more definite. Even with that, why compromise and pay only from 1 to 50 per cent of the tariff that the farmers are entitled to, at the expense of the Federal Treasury?

If any doubt as to the board and the farmer taking advantage of the benefits afforded, why not specifically provide that the tariff shall be made effective on agricultural commodities as provided in the McNARY-HAUGEN bill, by compulsory pooling of the whole production, through the medium of the equalization-fee plan, to stabilize and equalize the price, requiring each producer to pay his ratable share of the cost of marketing and equalizing, and to receive his proportionate share of the profits therefrom, so that each producer may share alike in the costs and profits therefrom, instead of voluntary pooling and the approval of plans by the board, as may be done under the proposed bill—notwithstanding the contention of some "that it does not manifest the slightest effort to make the tariff effective in behalf of our surplus farm commodities, nor redeem platform pledges to insure equality for agriculture"—in other words, to make the tariff effective through compulsory pooling, and not discretionary with the producers and the board, as provided in the bill.

But the equalization-fee plan did not receive approval at the conventions of either of the two major parties nor by the respective candidates of the two parties. In view of the urgent demand for farm-relief legislation and the doubt of its passage and liability of veto, it seemed clear to the legislative representatives of farm groups and friends of real farm relief legislation that with the assurance given, that the voluntary pooling as may be accomplished under the bill would give the desired results, it seemed futile to incorporate in the bill the equalization-fee plan, the compulsory pooling provision; hence the equalization-fee plan was temporarily abandoned, and if the producers will take the advantage of it and the board will carry out the policy declared and directed and make it effective, as is intended and can be made, it will accomplish as much as any bill heretofore considered; if not, all friends will renew their efforts and the equalization-fee plan or any other specific or effective plan can be put into operation.

Had the proposed debenture plan had been in operation last year and the price of corn had advanced 7½ cents a bushel, on the whole crop produced of 2,839,959,000 bushels the total gain would have been $212,996,925, of which $1,455,750 would have been in debentures on the 19,410,000 bushels exported and at the expense of the Federal Treasury.

Under the equalization plan the producers would have received instead of the $0.997 per bushel, Chicago price, the Buenos Aires price of $0.93, plus export tax of $0.02, ocean freight $0.0875, or a total of $1.18¾, minus an equalization fee of 1.2 mills ($0.0012), a net gain of $0.1803 per bushel on the entire production, or a grand total of $539,604,238.

Under the debenture plan on wheat for last year, if the price of the whole crop of 903,865,000 bushels had advanced 21 cents, or a total of $189,811,650, of which $4,012,008 would have been in debentures on the net exports of 191,048,000 bushels exported and at the expense of the Federal Treasury.

Under the equalization plan the producers of wheat would have received instead of the Minneapolis price of $1.41 the Winnipeg price of $1.49, plus the tariff of 42 cents, freight $0.03, minus the equalization fee of $0.112, a net increase of $0.418 and a net profit of $377,815,570.

For the two commodities the producers would have received under the debenture plan, assuming that the 50 per cent of the tariff had been applied to the whole production, a total of $402,808,575, of which $5,467,758 would have been at the expense of the Federal Treasury. Under the equalization plan the total would have been $917,419,808 without expense to the Federal Treasury. Not only would the producers be ahead $514,611,233, but the Federal Treasury would have been ahead $5,467,758.

If the debenture plan is desired and believed beneficial to the producers, which undoubtedly it would be if applied and properly administered, it might be that nations to whom debenturable commodities were imported might apply a countervailing duty. If so, it would be of no benefit to the producer or exporter, but, on the contrary, at a loss to the extent of any discount he might have to take on the debenture, and at the expense of the Federal Treasury, the amount of the debenture ultimately going into the treasury of the importing nation. For example, the export debenture on 100,000 bushels of corn would be $7,500 paid to the exporter, not paid directly out of the Federal Treasury but diverted before reaching the Treasury; in other words, used in payment of duties on imports. In case a countervailing duty were applied by the importing nation, the exporter would be required to pay $7,500 countervailing duty, to be paid into the treasury of the nation to which the corn was exported. As a result Uncle Sam would be out $7,500 in debentures and the exporters would be out whatever the discount on the debenture might be, and the foreign nation would be $7,500 ahead and the foreign consumer would pay the bill.

Outside of the merits or demerits of the export debenture plan there are other questions involved. There is the question of constitutionality because of its origin. Under the rules of the House the House Committee on Agriculture had no jurisdiction over the debenture plan. Jurisdiction over it lies with the Committee on Ways and Means. Section 7 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides as follows:

> All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

The debenture plan did not originate in the House. It originated in the Senate, which by many is held to be unconstitutional. In order to speedily pass legislation affording relief to agriculture, and in order to avoid controversy between the two Houses in respect to the question of constitutionality, the House, on May 17, passed House Resolution 45, by a vote of 249 for and 119 against, as follows:

> Whereas in the opinion of the House, there is a question as to whether or not section 10 of the amendment of the Senate to H. R. 1 contravenes the first clause of section 7 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement on the rights and privileges of this House, but in view of the present legislative situation and the desire of this House to speedily pass legislation affording relief to agriculture, and with the distinct understanding that the action of the House in this instance shall not be deemed to be a precedent, so far as the constitutional prerogatives of the House are concerned: Now, therefore, be it
> Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 1, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to conference asked by the Senate, and that the Speaker shall immediately appoint conferees—and sent the bill to conference.

If, as many contend, it contravenes the first clause of section 7 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and is an infringement on the rights and privileges of the House, why take chances of court expenses and the delay in awaiting a decision with respect to its constitutionality; why not incorporate it in the tariff bill now before the Senate, where it may be incorporated, eliminating the question of constitutionality, also eliminating the delay and expense?

Mr. FREE. Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the California fruit interests in regard to the farm bill is well expressed in a telegram of which I am in receipt. The telegram is as follows:

FRESNO, CALIF., June 11, 1929.

Hon. A. M. FREE,
Washington, D. C.:

The news of the decision of Senate on farm relief bill reached Fresno this afternoon and delivered to large growers' meeting. Federal assistance to our plans was being stressed, and growers were being assured of cooperation of Government. All growers in deciduous tree fruit and grape areas of California are astounded at Senate vote. We appeal to you to make sure farm relief bill passed immediately by Congress. Deciduous tree fruit and California grape growers have not received cost production, irrespective of living and interest, during past three years. They are seeking maintain invested capital in excess $700,000,000 in valuation orchards and vineyards alone.

One million four hundred thousand acres California orchards and vineyards annually produce in excess 3,500,000 tons essential fruit and constitute world's chief source of supply of these particular classes and varieties. Livelihood of 40,000 deciduous tree fruit and grape growers of California and their wives and children depend upon well-being of this industry. By reason of unfavorable economic and marketing conditions, together with unfortunate disintegration in distribution processes of industry, tree fruit and grape growers now face condition of acute financial distress. There is no parallel in American agriculture to depressed conditions confronting people of California throughout all rural districts except oranges and lemons. Unless prompt relief measures are applied entire State of California, including its industries and all others who profit from purchasing power of our vast acreage, will suffer staggering loss by reason utter failure of deciduous tree fruit and grape crop in 1929. Our growers have lost banking credit, and their human and social relations require immediate but temporary Government assistance. There is nothing unsound concerning statistical position of tree fruit and grape industry, but to again permit inroads of speculative interests and securing control and marketing of our crops represented inexcusable commentary upon the Congress of the country. Farm relief bill provides temporary aid necessary for these more important industries of this State. We ask that you work and vote for speedy enactment this measure. It is a truism that salvation of homes, happiness, and children of families of growers are dependent upon this legislation. We ask that you consider these most vital attributes in human relations in behalf of our people and make these circumstances paramount above all other conditions in your attitude toward farm-relief legislation. Thousands of our producers are Burton A. Towne, president California Vineyardists Association; W. H. Williamson, president Associated California Fruit Industries; Henry Dermer, chairman growers committee, Fresno County; Herbert R. Freeland, chairman business men's committee, Fresno County; Lodi Chamber of Commerce; E. Powers Manteca, chamber of commerce; Dr. T. H. Stice, Napa Chamber of Commerce; Charles Latimer, Ontario Chamber of Commerce; George F. Johnston, Imperial Valley Growers; E. L. Cunningham, chairman Deciduous Association, Mendocino County; George L. Bare, chairman Deciduous Association, Stanislaus County; Ed Lewis, chairman Deciduous Association, Sacramento County; Albert Haentze, chairman Deciduous Association, Santa Clara County; Milo L. Rowell, Fresno; Lucius Powers, president Central California Growers Association, Fresno; Z. S. Leymel, mayor city of Fresno; Visalia Chamber of Commerce; Bakersfield Chamber of Commerce; Delano Chamber of Commerce; Madera Chamber of Commerce; Livermore, Brentwood District Associated California Fruit Industries; Merced Chamber of Commerce; Modesto Chamber of Commerce; Kings County Chamber of Commerce; Col. R. E. Tayman, Healdsburg Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, the tariff is essentially a charge on the people with results that are in many cases disputed by economists at home and abroad. The debenture proposed as an amendment to the farm relief bill now in conference would be, if adopted as a part of the measure that will become the law shortly, in all probability, a charge upon the Treasury which is in itself a charge upon the people. So that both the tariff and the debenture are fundamentally the same in origin, purpose, and effect from the standpoint of the principle involved though the results in the two instances might be questioned by the proponents of each of the two propositions and certainly by the opponents of both of them as uneconomic, unjust, and inequitable charges whose ill effects could not be compensated for by any demonstrable resulting benefits.

Generally speaking, a fair tariff should produce a prosperity that would otherwise not be ours. What profiteth an American if foodstuffs and clothing be ever so cheap and he hath no employment? Ask those who believe in the protective theory. Which means that it is preferable to stand for high prices and pay them with the wherewith that flows from domestic prosperity than to look into shop windows where goods are exposed at low prices which you are unable to pay as a result of an empty pocket and unemployment. But what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If a tariff or a charge on the people is beneficial to sugar and rice production, which we are interested in in south Louisiana, why should not a debenture worth $10 a bale be of benefit to cotton production in north Louisiana? And if it be true that cities, even when they are seaports, are dependent for their genesis, existence, growth, and prosperity upon the surrounding contiguous country, why not promote agriculture generally and not only a few of her products? And why not emphasize, enlarge, broaden, and insure our rural prosperity by adopting a plan that would be harmonious in all of its parts?

Such a plan should meet with Democratic indorsement, for it is not at variance with the platform adopted at Houston, and is the antithesis of the old tariff idea which had the opposition of those who believe in equal rights to all and special privileges to none. With the cotton planter of north Louisiana prosperous, and the sugar and rice planter of south Louisiana prosperous, I have no doubt that we in the old city will prosper and reflect the good times felt over the State. And why should anyone hesitate about adopting the debenture plan since it is not a mandatory but an optional provision which the farm board, to be appointed by President Hoover, would use and put into operation only in their wise discretion. Particularly is this query pertinent in view of the fact that under the elastic provisions of the new tariff bill the commission to be appointed by the President may exercise a power and the President enforce the result of it in the way of altering, changing, and even initiating and creating rates, of far greater consequence financially and economically than the issuance of the contemplated debenture.

The elastic provision is so far-reaching in its potentialities and effects as to wring a moan of anguish from the lips of JAMES M. BECK, who trembled with apprehension and viewed with alarm a scheme of executive government so at variance with the underlying principles of freedom and liberty, political and economic, though I think that this high priest of the Republican temple of Pennsylvania but apparently of lesser stature in the National Republican Party as was seen and noted in the recent caucus, may believe that through the machinations of some near free-trade Democratic President the enlarged and broadened elastic provisions may become the instrumentality to destroy the protective system. In other words, that the creature provision may enact the rôle of the monster which was created by Frankenstein.

Apparently his colleagues in caucus assembled thought the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania was "all wet" and so far off the reservation that he was looking at the remote horizon instead of at his feet, which is suggestive of the story that once upon a time in the long, long ago, Thales, the celebrated philosopher, fell into a ditch and when yanked out by the hair of the head by an old woman, told her his plight was due to the fact that he was looking at the stars, which caused the practical dame to remark that if he had been looking at his feet instead of stargazing he would not be "all wet." But the brilliant former Solicitor General has the viewpoint in this tariff provision which he so ably discussed on the floor of the House of many thoughtful Americans, I am sure.

"I care not who writes the laws of a country if you will permit me to write its songs," as Fletcher substantially declared, finds an apt and expressive paraphrase in: "I care not who writes the rates in a tariff bill if you permit me to revise or change them." And as the tariff is closely connected with the revenues of the country which permit of appropriations, let me say that the Republican Party in control of the Government for four years more could in some measure rehabilitate themselves with the people, whose confidence they have lost or forfeited by inability to provide and adapt constructive legislation, for carrying out the far-sighted patriotic and wise suggestions of the great magazine weekly, Liberty, which in an editorial of appealing force some time ago urged the Federal Government to originate a movement and connect it up with a similar movement of the States and their towns and cities to construct and build their roads, bridges, and public works and buildings in slack times, and thereby in a large measure meet and solve their unemployment cycles and problems which have become the curse and terror of humanity, young and old. In the daily bulletin of the Manufacturers Record of June 11, under the caption, "Cut the Red Tape," this wise policy is presented with convincing force by Richard H. Edmonds. Ye who are interested in "the short and simple annals of the poor" and the wisdom of maintaining business so as to prevent unemployment should read this article by one of the foremost champions of southern rights and national integrity.

President Hoover, when Secretary of Commerce, advocated a similar plan to that of Liberty and the Manufacturers Record and the many periodicals and newspapers that saw the governmental wisdom in such a course. In a masterly way he pointed out that this work would stimulate business activity and turn the tide from depression to prosperity. Highway and waterway improvement on a large scale would do much in connection with a vast public building construction plan and movement to relieve the present depression and unemployment situation which is so obvious that its denial by anyone leads to the thought that he is in danger of blowing the gas out. "Start public works" should be the order of President Hoover. They who are out of work—and they are millions—will rise and call him blessed if he will brighten their lives, their homes, their souls, by removing through employment the haggard lines from faces of men and women who are willing to die for their country whenever the requirements of war demand such a sacrifice. I repeat that Mr. Edmonds has hit the nail squarely on the head, and so has Liberty and the host of journalists who have become heroes in the strife for a great construction policy, for, as they have stated, expenditures for highways, waterways, flood control, and public buildings are an investment when viewed in the proper light and will render huge return. Keep in mind that if all of the people now out of employment, eager for work to support their families, could find employment by reason of this proposed building activity and the general effect it would have on the country's trade, the consuming power of the people would be increased to absorb all the supposed surplus foodstuffs now pressing upon the market and breaking down prices. Give us a fair tariff bill which will include debenture and a public works bill and the success of your administration is assured.

Lift from the faces of the toilers who are idle the sorrow and sadness too deep for the well-to-do and prosperous to understand by leading the fight, Mr. President, for the adoption of a policy that will secure you a lasting place in the affections of your countrymen. Give the order, "Forward march to public improvements and prosperity."

But to return to the debenture: If the President should lose sight of the logic of the debenture and should exercise the veto power, then Congress can pass the farm bill with the debenture section eliminated within two days, as pointed out by Senator NORRIS on the floor of the Senate and in a letter by the National Grange, copy of which I received this morning.

The Republican Party may as well make up their minds now as later on that the debenture plan as an actional part or section of a farm relief or tariff bill is a sine qua non. Without it a tariff bill is as unjust, unfair, and oppressive as many conservative opponents of such taxation have termed it. For without it the tariff is not general in purpose or effect and is consequently, to a large extent, special or, to be truthful and candid, favoritism to those who are powerful and influential enough politically to demand and receive their share of the bacon or spoils, whichever you prefer.

Like Banquo's ghost, the debenture plan will not down. It must be made part and parcel of the protective system, or the protective system will go tottering to its destruction and fall as a result of the impossibility of its proponents meeting intellectually the shattering arguments of its opponents, who are even now stripping it of the sophistry with which its friends have hedged it in as the palladium of our industrial fortress and citadel of high walls.

The President practically admits the soundness of the theory of it when he says, "For no matter what the theory of the export subsidy may be, in the practical world we live in it will not bring equality but will bring further disparity to agriculture," which conclusion is, of course, not in consonance with the practically admitted premise.

But let the fight go on. It is on the anvil of discussion that the spark of truth will fly. And from present indications the debenturites are going to smite the high tariffites hip and thigh and expose the weakness of a subsidy structure that supports industry—rich, powerful, swollen industry—almost exclusively.

Mr. LANKFORD of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the export debenture plan was voted down and now very probably will not be in the so-called farm relief bill when it becomes law. The debenture scheme will not put the farmer on a parity with other industries. It would improve very much, though, the present bill, and I can not understand how Members who favor farm relief can oppose the debenture idea. With great misgivings I am voting for the present bill. I am hoping when its defects become recognized as glaring inconsistencies and dangerous to agriculture there will be left enough friends of the farmer to correct and improve it until it becomes a good piece of legislation.

Congress by the passage of the present bill admits that it can not yet solve the farm problem and, therefore, provides a powerful board with almost unlimited powers and enormous funds, and delegates to the board the prerogative of doing what the Congress has failed to do, to wit, solve the farm problem. Congress says it can not do what it hopes this board can do. The board may solve it, but I have grave fears that it will not. I know it will not solve it until some more legislation is passed. We have just begun the task.

While I have always favored the debenture plan, I have objected to debentures being issued to the exporters. I fear this help is too indirect and that not enough of it will ever reach the farmer. I have hoped all the while that when the export debenture plan finally became law the debentures would be issued to the farmers or to some agency acting in behalf of the farmers, so the benefit would flow directly to the farmer. I have heretofore introduced bills and offered amendments to farm bills, seeking to provide for the benefits of the debenture to flow directly to the farmer, and was gratified on yesterday to hear my idea indorsed by one of the best friends of the farmer in Congress.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks on H. R. 1, the farm bill, I believe it would be well for us to review the various pledges in both the Republican platform and the public utterances of the Republican nominee, so far as farm relief legislation is concerned.

The Republican Party adopted as a part of its platform, after several general declarations with reference to the condition of the farm interests of the country, the following party pledge:

The Republican Party pledges itself to the enactment of legislation creating a Federal farm board clothed with the necessary powers to promote the establishment of a farm marketing system of farmer-owned-and-controlled stabilization corporations or associations to prevent and control surpluses through orderly distribution.

We favor adequate tariff protection to such of our agricultural products as are affected by foreign competition.

We favor, without putting the Government into business, the establishment of a Federal system of organization for cooperative and orderly marketing of farm products.

The vigorous efforts of this administration toward broadening our exports market will be continued.

The Republican Party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which will place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industries to insure its prosperity and success.

In his acceptance speech President Hoover, under date of August 11, 1928, made the following declarations:

The platform proposes to go much farther. It pledges the creation of a Federal farm board of representative farmers to be clothed with authority and resources with which not only to still further aid farmers' cooperatives and pools and to assist generally in solution of farm problems but especially to build up with Federal finance farmer-owned and farmer-controlled stabilization corporations which will protect the farmer from the depressions and demoralization of seasonal gluts and periodical surpluses.

Objection has been made that this program as laid down by the party platform may require that several hundred millions of dollars of capital be advanced by the Federal Government without obligation upon the individual farmer. With that objection I have little patience. A nation which is spending ninety billions a year can well afford an expenditure of a few hundred millions for a workable program that will give to one-third of its population their fair share of the Nation's prosperity. Nor does this proposal put the Government into business except so far as it is called upon to furnish capital with which to build up the farmer to the control of his own destinies.

The program adapts itself to the variable problems of agriculture not only to-day but which will arise in the future. I do not believe that any single human being or any group of human beings can determine in advance all questions that will arise in so vast and complicated an industry over a term of years. The first step is to create an effective agency directly for these purposes and to give it authority and resources. These are solemn pledges and they will be fulfilled by the Republican Party. It is a definite plan of relief. It needs only the detailed elaboration of legislation and appropriations to put it into force.

Following that utterance, former Governor Frank O. Lowden, at his home, as quoted in the New York World, under date of August 14, 1928, made the following suggestions:

I am much impressed by Mr. Hoover's acceptance speech as a whole. With reference to agriculture, his frank recognition that the agricultural problem is the most urgent economic problem in our Nation to-day is very heartening. I have stated, I think a thousand times, that a general acknowledgment that the problem exists would be half the battle. If there had been such recognition years ago the agricultural situation would be vastly different to-day.

Mr. Hoover's aspirations to bring the farm population up to economic equality with other groups have my heartiest approval. I think, however, it will be found practically that his proposed stabilization corporation will only attain the objects which he hopes to accomplish if the cost to the corporation of stabilizing the price of any commodity be distributed over the commodity involved and not taken from the public Treasury.

In order that there might be no misunderstanding concerning the position of President Hoover as the Republican nominee, he again referred to the pledge of the Republican Party and again expressed his views with reference to the farm problem at West Branch, Iowa, at the home-coming celebration there, held under date of August 21, 1928, as follows:

A Federal farm board is to be set up with the necessary powers and resources to assist the industry to meet not alone the varied problems of to-day but those which may arise in the future. My fundamental concept of agriculture is one controlled by its own members, organized to fight its own economic battles and to determine its own destinies. Nor do I speak of organization in the narrow sense of traditional farm cooperatives or pools, but in the much wider sense of a sound marketing organization. It is not by these proposals intended to put the Government into the control of the business of agriculture, nor to subsidize the prices of farm products and pay the losses thereon either by the Federal Treasury or by a tax or fee on the farmer. We propose with governmental assistance and an initial advance of capital to enable the agricultural industry to reach a stature of modern business operations by which the farmer will attain his independence and maintain his individuality.

As a further pledge to the agricultural interests of the country in the closing days of the campaign, President Hoover made this commitment, under date of November 2, 1928, at St. Louis, Mo.:

But to return to the farm question.

In addition to the tariff and cheaper waterway transportation in assistance to agriculture, the Republican Party proposes to go farther. It proposes to set up an institution which will be one of the most important institutions in our Government, designed to meet not only the varied problems which confront us to-day but those which may arise in the future. We propose to create a Federal farm board composed of men of understanding and sympathy for the problems of agriculture; we propose this board should have power to determine the facts, the causes, the remedies which should be applied to each and every one of the multitude of problems which we mass under the general term "the agricultural problem."

This program further provides that the board shall have a broad authority to act and be authorized to assist in the further development of cooperative marketing; that it shall assist in the development of clearing houses for agricultural products, in the development of adequate warehousing facilities, in the elimination of wastes in distribution, and in the solution of other problems as they arise. But in particular the board is to build up, with initial advances of capital from the Government, farmer-owned and farmer-controlled stabilization corporations which will protect the farmer from depressions and the demoralization of summer and periodic surpluses.

It is proposed that this board should have placed at its disposal such resources as are necessary to make its action effective.

Thus we give to the Federal farm board every arm with which to deal with the multitude of problems. This is an entirely different method of approach to solution from that of a general formula; it is flexible and adaptable. No such far-reaching and specific proposal has ever been made by a political party on behalf of any industry in our history. It is a direct business proposition. It marks our desire for establishment of farmers' stability and, at the same time, maintains his independence and individuality.

This plan is consonant with our American ideals to avoid the Government operation of commercial business; for it places the operation upon the farmer himself, not upon a bureaucracy. It puts the Government in its real relation to the citizen—that of cooperation. Its object is to give equality of opportunity to the farmer. I would consider it the greatest honor I could have if it should become my privilege to aid in finally solving this the most difficult of economic problems presented to our people, and the one in which by inheritance and through long contact I have my deepest interest.

President Hoover, after his inauguration, on the date of April 16, 1929, in his message to Congress, again referred to the farm question in the following language:

The Government has a special mandate from the recent election, not only to further develop our waterways and revise the agricultural tariff, but also to extend systematic relief in other directions.

I have long held that the multiplicity of causes of agricultural depression could only be met by the creation of a great instrumentality clothed with sufficient authority and resources to assist our farmers to meet these problems, each upon its own merits. The creation of such an agency would at once transfer the agricultural question from the field of politics into the realm of economics and would result in constructive action. The administration is pledged to create an instrumentality that will investigate the causes, find sound remedies, and have the authority and resources to apply those remedies.

The pledged purpose of such a Federal farm board is the reorganization of the marketing system on sounder and more stable and more economic lines. To do this the board will require funds to assist in creating and sustaining farmer-owned and farmer-controlled agencies for a variety of purposes, such as the acquisition of adequate warehousing and other facilities for marketing; adequate working capital to be advanced against commodities lodged for storage; necessary and prudent advances to corporations created and owned by farmers' marketing organizations for the purchase and orderly marketing of surpluses occasioned by climatic variations or by harvest congestion; to authorize the creation and support of clearing houses, especially for perishable products, through which, under producers' approval, cooperation can be established with distributors and processors to more orderly marketing of commodities, and for the elimination of many wastes in distribution; and to provide for licensing of handlers of some perishable products so as to eliminate unfair practices. Every penny of waste between farmer and consumer that we can eliminate, whether it arises from methods of distribution or from hazard or speculation, will be a gain to both farmer and consumer.

In addition to these special provisions in the direction of improved returns, the board should be organized to investigate every field of economic betterment for the farmer so as to furnish guidance as to need in production, to devise methods for elimination of unprofitable marginal lands and their adaptation to other uses; to develop industrial by-products, and to survey a score of other fields of helpfulness.

Certain safeguards must naturally surround these activities and the instrumentalities that are created. Certain vital principles must be adhered to in order that we may not undermine the freedom of our farmers and of our people as a whole by bureaucratic and governmental domination and interference. We must not undermine initiative. There should be no fee or tax imposed upon the farmer. No governmental agency should engage in the buying and selling and price fixing of products, for such courses can lead only to bureaucracy and domination. Government funds should not be loaned or facilities duplicated where other services of credit and facilities are available at reasonable rates. No activities should be set in motion that will result in increasing the surplus production, as such will defeat any plans of relief.

Again it is my desire to call attention to the approval of former Gov. Frank O. Lowden to the Hoover program in an Associated Press release, under date of April 26, 1929, as follows:

Mr. Hoover, in the campaign last fall, stated clearly and unequivocally his opposition to the principle of the equalization fee, as well as to the principle of the debenture plan. He was elected by a substantial majority. The country, therefore, authorized him to proceed with his own agricultural program. That program was outlined, not only in his speeches but more fully in his recent message to Congress.

It is to be assumed that upon an issue so clearly decided by the election Congress will support the President. It then becomes the duty of all sincere friends of farm relief to cooperate with the administration in giving effect to its program. If it later should appear that this program was inadequate, the President indicated in his message that the way is open for further action.

In order that there may be no misunderstanding of the President's attitude, with particular reference to the farm bill and the debenture amendment, I am inserting President Hoover's statement given under date of June 11, 1929, following the vote in the Senate on the farm relief bill, wherein he expressed himself as follows:

The vote in the Senate to-day at best adds further delay to farm relief and may gravely jeopardize the enactment of legislation. In rejecting the report of the Senate and House conferees, which report was agreed to by members of both parties, the Senate has in effect rejected a bill which provides for the creation of the most important agency ever set up in the Government to assist an industry—the proposed Federal farm board, endowed with extraordinary authority to reorganize the marketing system in the interest of the farmer, to stabilize his industry, and to carry out these arrangements in conjunction with farm cooperatives, with a capital of $500,000,000 as an earnest of the seriousness of the work. It is a proposal for steady upbuilding of agriculture onto firm foundations of equality with other industry, and would remove the agricultural problem from politics and place it in the realm of business.

The conferees' bill carried out the plan advanced in the campaign in every particular. Every other plan of agricultural relief was rejected in that campaign, and this plan was one of the most important issues in the principal agricultural States and was given as a mandate by an impressive majority in these States. Subsidies were condemned in the course of the campaign, and the so-called debenture plan—that is, the giving of subsidies on exports—was not raised by either party, nor by its proponents.

No serious attempt has been made to meet the many practical objections I and leaders in Congress have advanced against this proposal. It was not accepted by the House of Representatives and has been overwhelmingly condemned by the press and is opposed by many leading farm organizations, for no matter what the theory of the export subsidy may be in the practical world we live in it will not bring equality, but will bring further disparity to agriculture. It will bring immediate profits to some speculators and disaster to the farmer.

I earnestly hope that the Congress will enact the conferees' report and allow us to enter upon the building of a sound agricultural system rather than to longer deprive the farmer of the relief which he sorely needs.

In order to properly reflect the sentiment on the debenture amendment it seems to me that a quotation from one of the leading daily papers of the Middle West is here worth while, in which it is suggested that the debenture amendment is more properly a part of the tariff bill. The Des Moines Register, editorially, under date of June 11, 1929, made the following suggestions:

If we go no farther into the bill than to read the first paragraph, why should not the bill have the benefit of every doubt? That paragraph reads: "It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce so that the industry of agriculture will be placed on a basis of economic equality with other industries.

How can Congress commit itself to any such program in any such formal way and not work out all the details as market conditions suggest them? Suppose everything not to be in the bill the western farmer would have in it, does not the bill open up a program of enormous possibilities?

If they will not do that, why do they not hook the debenture program onto the tariff bill, to which it really belongs, and let the farm bill go through and let the President name his farm board and get the work started?

The Waterloo Tribune, under date of June 11, 1929, in an editorial entitled "Put Hoover in Hole," made the following observations:

The only way they can get Hoover in a hole is to defeat the House farm relief bill, and then they will be putting agriculture in a much bigger hole. They will be delaying farm-relief legislation, just as they have delayed it for a half-dozen years.

The sensible thing is to get what farm-relief legislation Hoover wants now. Legislation to improve on it can be had at sessions in the future.

In the House, wherein the debenture amendment was defeated by a vote of 250 to 113, the controlling influence was not the merits or the lack of merits in the debenture amendment. It was purely an effort on the part of the House to assure the acceptance of the farm bill at the hands of the President and to make available for the benefit of the farmers of the Middle West the observations of the board appointed as experts to study the problem, having at their disposal a Government fund of $500,000,000. No one can discredit the effect of an organization of this kind, financed as authorized in this bill, upon the general price trend of farm commodities brought under the provisions of the bill. It was in order to bring this assistance to the farmers of the Middle West that the House took a decided stand against the debenture amendment.

However, the debenture amendment will in all probability have additional consideration at the hands of the Senate, and probably at the hands of the House. As heretofore suggested the debenture amendment is more properly a part of the tariff bill than of the farm bill. Senator BROOKHART, in the Senate under date of June 12, 1929, made the following proposal:

I propose that the debenture be issued to the Federal farm board instead of the speculators, whom the president and I both heartily condemn. I propose that the farm board be given authority to use these debentures exactly as the President of the United States himself had authority to use the funds of the Government in the Food Administration and the wheat corporation, including the authority to pay losses.

This suggestion embodies the proposal of a revolving fund wherein the debenture and the funds accumulated therefrom would accrue to the benefit of the Federal farm board to assist them in carrying on their undertaking. It is true this suggestion is new and has not been discussed from many angles. It is also true that the debenture proposal has not been discussed on merit and has not been criticized as it will be when it is proposed as a part of the tariff bill. I am, therefore, making the observation that for those friendly to the debenture plan there is room for a great many helpful suggestions, and to those opposed to the plan it might be suggested that the present rate on tobacco would authorize a bounty of 17½ cents a pound. It has been suggested that this bounty about equals the cost of production, and those opposed to the debenture should look through the commodities of which we export a considerable amount, and determine whether or not the producers could afford to expand their production for the tariff bounty alone, as proposed in the debenture plan.

The complications of the debenture program as shown by Congressman COLE, of Iowa, and Congressman TEMPLE, of Pennsylvania, are also worthy of serious consideration. Whether or not we would complicate our relations with other countries to where the debenture would be more of an embarrassment than a benefit is worthy of serious consideration. To those of us who have some time on our hands, it seems to me that a careful research along the lines above suggested will be helpful in reaching a conclusion as to whether or not the debenture plan is feasible as a part of either the tariff or the farm-relief legislation.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the farm bill without the debenture in it when it first passed the House, and I voted to approve two conference reports without the debenture in it. When the Senate finally forced the House to give us a mere vote on debenture, the floor leader having moved the previous question after introducing the resolution which put the debenture advocates in the negative, on that vote I voted in favor of debenture. This was the only opportunity I had during this session to express myself on the thing that I had constantly said I thought would help the bill. I did not vote to leave the amendment in with the idea of defeating the bill. If the farm bill is going to be a success without the debenture, then the mere fact that it is in the bill and optional with the board should not in any way make it dangerous. If the bill is not going to be a success, then they will want something more.

There is nothing in this bill that is designed to take care of the great problem of the exportable surplus which means so much to the West in our wheat and to the South in her cotton. There is nothing in the bill that will raise the price of agricultural products. At the most, it will merely have a tendency to stabilize and help keep prices from going down unnecessarily, but it will never raise them.

Many members have taken the attitude that if this bill does not bring about agricultural equality that they will later be ready to put in the debenture or the equalization fee or something else. The solid unanimous vote east of the Alleghenies against the debenture reminds me of an incident of 40 years ago in Kansas. There was a sick person in the community who had the yellow jaundice. They regarded it as a skin disease. There was an old lady in the community who had a prickly machine full of fine needles that she would run over this person's body day by day as a cure. Finally the patient died. The post-mortem disclosed a complete stoppage of the gall bladder.

The East thinks agriculture has merely a skin disease, and they have demonstrated in the House tariff bill the same kind and gentle sympathy that the old lady demonstrated with her machine.

I have scanned, for the last three days, the newspapers to observe if there had been any great bonfire celebrations or barbecues or parades with bands in the agricultural districts over the passage of the farm bill, but I have failed to observe any. On the other hand, I read in all the morning papers the morning after the approval of both Houses on the conference report of the farm bill, the following exact words, quoting from the stock-market page of Wall Street:

> Prominent in the day's news was the passage of the farm-relief measure without the debenture scheme, which was favorably received in Wall Street.

Mr. McCLOSKEY. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted for extension of remarks on the motion of the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, the majority leader [Mr. TILSON], I desire to express and record my reactions relative thereto as this important matter has presented itself to me.

This country has adopted as a policy of government the tariff theory for the encouragement of industry. Agriculture is an "industry." If I am correctly informed, the largest single item of foreign export is cotton. It is our largest foreign-trade credit balance and, therefore, is just as important to New England as it is to the South, where produced, in its relation to world finance and our stability as a creditor nation, a most important factor to the banking and industrial life of this Nation. We encourage in every possible way the export of all other products of industry; why not those of agriculture?

Now, let us see: In my opinion, the automobile industry is more nearly on a basis for comparison with that of agriculture than any other commodity, in that we are the largest producers of automobiles in the world; in fact, like cotton, we produce more than all the rest of the world combined. In that way automobiles and cotton are comparable; then again automobiles need no tariff protection; it would avail nothing. The same as to cotton. So what do we do for the automobile industry to encourage that industry in foreign markets? (And, be it remembered, I make no complaint of that aid. By it we provide employment for thousands of American workingmen and aid materially our foreign credit balance.) We encourage the automobile industry to produce cars for the foreign markets and aid them in competition with foreign manufacturers of automobiles by granting to cars for export a freight rate lower than the rate for domestic sale of the same product; for instance, the freight rate on automobiles (passenger) from Detroit, Mich., to San Francisco, Calif., for domestic sale or use is $4.65 per 100 pounds in carload lots, and on that same carload, from the same shipping point to the same destination for foreign sale or export, the freight rate is $2.10 per 100 pounds, less than 50 per cent of the domestic rate and a difference of $2.55 per 100 pounds in favor of cars for export, which, called by another name, is a debenture just the same of $2.55 per 100 pounds.

And so it is with reference to shipments to New Orleans, Savannah, or New York, varying only in the amounts or difference of freight rates to the different points. So that a debenture on cotton for export of 2 cents per pound is less than the debenture on automobiles for export. And inasmuch as a tariff would not reach either automobiles or cotton, this debenture or difference in freight rates constitutes and takes the place of tariff.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in the tariff theory of government. I voted for the tariff bill. In doing so I was in perfect harmony with my own views, the platform adopted at Houston, and the best interests of the people of my district. True, I believe some of the schedules in the tariff bill are too high, and I can see no reason for any tariff on cork inasmuch as we do not produce any cork whatever in the United States. But there is one thing to the credit of the Hawley tariff bill—it is a step toward protection for some of the industries of the South and the West. More will come just as surely as daylight follows darkness. When the next tariff bill is written let us hope that the South will be invited to sit in at the hearings and actually help write the bill.

The great dairying industry of this country is to-day located in the Central North and Northwest States, but because of the irresistible economic advantage of the South, where dairy herds can graze 12 months in the year instead of only 6 as in the North, in a few short years that industry will be located in Texas and the other Southern States, and then a tariff on dairy products will be a part of the platform of every candidate for Congress from the South and Southwest. No tariff bill can be written that will meet the approval of every section of the country because what is helpful to one is costly to another, and in its final analysis, as was said by Hancock, many years ago, "Tariff is a local question," and must of necessity ever be.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I voted for a debenture on farm products. To my mind the debenture is nothing more or less than an inverted tariff on cotton and other farm products of which we produce a surplus over domestic consumption. It would mean nearly $1,000,000 a year to Nueces County, only 1 of 11 counties in the district I have the honor to represent; over $500,000 to San Patricio County, and another million and a half dollars to the other counties of my district. Is not that stupendous sum enough to show you, Mr. Speaker, that tariff—whether called debenture or anything else—is a local issue to the Representative of that district or any district when confronted with a similar situation? Especially so when the manufacturing industries of every section of the country are getting all they possibly can through tariff protection. Who is to criticize the farmer element for trying to help themselves? "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 14, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 3941) to provide a code of insurance law for the District of Columbia (except marine insurance, as now provided for by the act of March 4, 1922, and fraternal and benevolent insurance associations or orders, as provided for by the acts of March 3, 1897; June 30, 1902; May 29, 1928; December 12, 1928; and December 20, 1928), and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MOUSER: A bill (H. R. 3942) for the purchase of a site and erection of a public building at Mount Gilead, Morrow County, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LEA of California: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 106) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of President and Vice President; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

By Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 107) creating a commission to study proposals for a national system of express motorways, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 108) to create a joint congressional committee to investigate and study the methods of Federal officials enforcing the prohibition laws, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. O'CONNOR of Oklahoma: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 109) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to begin October 5, 1929; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ACKERMAN: A bill (H. R. 3943) authorizing the President to reappoint Carl B. Searing, former captain, United States Army, to the active list of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 3944) for the relief of Samuel Meredith Strong; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BECK: A bill (H. R. 3945) for the relief of Pasquale Iannacone; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BEERS: A bill (H. R. 3946) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Kauffman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COYLE: A bill (H. R. 3947) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Ackerman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EDWARDS: A bill (H. R. 3948) for the relief of W. C. Moye; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ESTERLY: A bill (H. R. 3949) for the relief of Robert M. Eaches; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3950) for the relief of David A. Dehart; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HAMMER: A bill (H. R. 3951) granting an increase of pension to William H. Phipps; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUDSON: A bill (H. R. 3952) granting a pension to Nancy Ann Martin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KURTZ: A bill (H. R. 3953) granting an increase of pension to Ellie C. Raugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3954) granting an increase of pension to Maria Burkhart; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LUDLOW: A bill (H. R. 3955) for the relief of Arthur Witte; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOONEY: A bill (H. R. 3956) granting a pension to Joseph Conlan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON of Maine: A bill (H. R. 3957) granting a pension to Abbie A. Oxley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PALMER: A bill (H. R. 3958) granting a pension to Martin Copeland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCHNEIDER: A bill (H. R. 3959) granting a pension to Victor Wauters; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3960) for the relief of Louis Nebel & Son; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SPEAKS: A bill (H. R. 3961) granting an increase of pension to Flora A. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 3962) granting an increase of pension to Martha Groves; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOLFENDEN: A bill (H. R. 3963) granting a pension to Catharine S. James; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WYANT: A bill (H. R. 3964) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Snively; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3965) granting an increase of pension to Ellen Harbaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

654. By Mr. AYRES: Petition by the printing industry of Wichita, Kans., protesting against the Government printing envelopes in competition with the printing industry. This petition is based on reduction in price of Government stamped envelopes, effective April 1, 1929; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

655. By Mr. BOYLAN: Communication from Mr. Farnham Yardley, president of Jenkins Bros., 80 White Street, New York City, protesting against increased duty on gauge glasses; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

656. By Mr. CARTER of California: Petition of the Native Sons of the Golden West, of California, urging appropriations for the prevention of forest fires as provided in the Englebright bill; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

657. Also, petition of the Native Sons of the Golden West, of California, urging the passage of the Englebright bill, providing the 9th day of September of each year to be a holiday for Federal employees in the State of California; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

658. Also, petition of the Native Sons of the Golden West, of California, urging Congress to prohibit further entrance of Filipinos for permanent settlement into this country; also urging Congress to provide for apprehension and deportation of violators of the immigration restriction act; also urging Congress to limit immigration from Mexico to those who are eligible to citizenship; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

659. By Mr. LEAVITT: Petition of the Anaconda Mill and Smeltermen's Union, No. 117, urging that of new cruisers to be constructed two be built at each of the two navy yards on the Pacific coast; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE

FRIDAY, June 14, 1929

Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo, D. D., minister of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who givest to all men liberally and upbraideth not, grant that to-day Thy presence may bring to our troubled hearts a new calm, to our disturbed minds a new light, and to our uncertain ways a new leading. Glorify Thyself in Thy power to help, to heal, and to calm. Bless our homes and our absent loved ones. Watch tenderly over them we pray Thee, and may our hearts be filled with the love of God as the waters cover the depths of the sea. And unto Thee shall we ascribe all praise, world without end. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the calendar days of June 10 to June 13, inclusive, when, on request of Mr. MOSES and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen	George	McKellar	Smith
Ashurst	Gillett	McNary	Smoot
Bingham	Glass	Metcalf	Steck
Blease	Glenn	Moses	Stelwer
Borah	Goff	Norbeck	Swanson

Dill	Jones	Sackett	Waterman
Edge	Kean	Schall	Watson
Fess	Keyes	Sheppard	Wheeler
Fletcher	King	Shortridge
Frazier	La Follette	Simmons

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to announce that my colleague the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] is detained from the Senate by illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BLAINE] is unavoidably absent. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. NORBECK. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCMASTER] is unavoidably absent from the city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. STECK. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the Corn Belt Federation of Farm Organizations at Des Moines, Iowa, June 11, 1929, in the nature of a memorial. It is short, and I ask that it be read by the clerk and referred to the Finance Committee.

There being no objection, the resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolution adopted by Corn Belt Federation of Farm Organizations, Des Moines, Iowa, June 11, 1929

We, the members of the Corn Belt committee, which speaks for more than a million organized farmers, desire to say that, in our opinion, the so-called House farm relief bill, as amended in conference, does not manifest the slightest effort to make the tariff effective in behalf of our surplus farm commodities, and without this the pledge of the Republican Party to assure equality for agriculture in the last campaign becomes utterly farcical. However, under all the circumstances, we have no desire to in any wise interfere with the passage or operation of this measure. Those who sponsor it are under a definite and solemn pledge to the farmers of America, and if they fail to live up to that pledge, the responsibility will be upon them.

We here and now reiterate the former position of this committee that the equalization-fee principle is the only one that will assure genuine equality to agriculture, make the tariff effective, and place the loss on the various farm surpluses where it belongs and where it will act as a deterrent against overproduction, and yet we deeply appreciate the courage of certain Members of the Senate who apparently realize that the only thing that will save agriculture from final and complete collapse is a higher price for what the farmer produces.

With reference to the House tariff revision bill, we desire to go on record as saying that it is the most indefensible measure of the kind ever offered in the history of Congress. Pretending to revise the tariff "in the interest of agriculture," certain selfish interests have been promised new advantages which are without conscience or reason and which, if enacted into law, will mulct the consumers of the country, farmers included, out of hundreds of millions of dollars of additional tribute per year. In connection with both the pending farm relief and tariff legislation we have a feeling bordering on contempt for certain Corn Belt Congressmen, who, throughout the special session have acted as mere errand boys for special privilege.

We redeclare ourselves for the principle of production cost which brought this committee into being and which, properly interpreted, means that the farmer is entitled to the same living standard as that enjoyed by other classes in our great Nation.

F. W. MURPHY,
Minnesota, Chairman.
T. C. CASHMAN,
Vice President Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.
CHAS. E. HEARST,
President Iowa Farm Bureau.
MILO RENO,
President Iowa Farmers Union.
H. G. KEENEY,
President Nebraska Farmers Union.
C. B. STEWARD,
Secretary Nebraska Farm Bureau.
RALPH SNYDER,
President Kansas Farm Bureau.

Mr. FRAZIER presented a resolution adopted by the State Convention of the North Dakota Laundry Owners Association, protesting against the proposed tariff on raw materials used in the manufacture of soap, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Mrs. A. W. Ebert and 41 other members of the Wolseth Homemakers Club, in the State of North Dakota, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 255) for the promotion of the health and welfare of mothers and infants, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALCOTT presented resolutions of United Spanish War Veterans Auxiliary, No. 4, and Charles L. Burdett Camp, No. 4, Department of Connecticut, United Spanish War Veterans, both of Hartford, Conn., favoring the passage of Senate bill 476, the so-called Robinson bill, providing increased pensions to Spanish War veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of the Waterbury Laundry Owners Club, of Waterbury; the Connecticut Laundry Association, of Bridgeport; the president of the Troy Steam Laundry, of Norwich; the proprietor of Birch's Laundry, of Meriden; and the Eastman Laundry Co., of Hartford, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the imposition of increased tariff duties on fats and oils used in soap making, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

FARM RELIEF—PROPOSED ALTERATION OF GRAIN GRADES

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, one of the greatest problems of the American farmer to-day, particularly in his relation to the foreign market, lies in the difference in the grain grades in the United States as compared with those of Canada. Mr. O. P. B. Jacobson, chairman of the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission, has prepared a very interesting article on this subject, which appeared in the St. Paul Pioneer Press of June 2. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The article is as follows:

[From the St. Paul Pioneer Press, St. Paul, Minn., June 2, 1929]

FARMERS LOSE THROUGH UNITED STATES GRAIN GRADES—ALTER SYSTEM TO AID AGRICULTURE QUICKLY IS JACOBSON'S ADVICE—1928 STORED WHEAT GIVEN HIGHER LISTING ON LEAVING ELEVATORS—FEDERAL ACT SENDS LARGE PART OF EXPORT BUSINESS TO CANADA AND AMERICAN IDENTITY OF PRODUCT IS LOST—UNFAIR RESULTS OF PLAN TO GROWERS ARE CITED BY MINNESOTA OFFICIAL—CROP ON WHICH PRODUCER RECEIVES NO. 2 PRICE GOES OUT OF MINNESOTA WAREHOUSES AS NO. 1 AND OWNER OF STORAGE TICKET GETS THE ADDED PROFIT, SAYS HEAD OF STATE RAILROAD COMMISSION

(In the following article Mr. Jacobson explains the operation of the Federal grain-grading standards under which all wheat coming into the terminal markets of Minnesota and other States is graded for quality. He asserts that these standards are operating to the disadvantage of the wheat grower and to the advantage of the miller. He cites figures also to show that because of the complexity of the grading system, which makes it difficult for foreign buyers to trade in American wheat, grain raised in this country has difficulty finding foreign markets with the result that the greater part of American export wheat is diverted from American to Canadian ports where it can be sold under Canadian grades and as Canadian wheat.)

By O. P. B. Jacobson, chairman Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission

The paramount national issue of the present time is relief for the agricultural districts of our country. The demand for this relief has been so universal throughout the Nation that it has resulted in the passage of one bill, vetoed by President Coolidge, and now two separate bills are being considered. What will ultimately be done is, of course, highly uncertain. It is experimental and may not result in any advantage to the producers.

For 12 years I have kept up a continuous fight against the Federal grain-grading rules. During that time there have been many changes in the personnel of the Department of Agriculture. I have appeared before the many Secretaries and by the use of samples and oral arguments attempted to convince them of the injustice of their grade rules. It mattered not that the Secretary was of Republican or Democratic persuasion, they all looked alike to me, and I must say that the results were similar—nothing for modification but plenty for useless interference with existing conditions.

WHEAT TYPES VARY WIDELY

It must be clearly understood that there is a decidedly marked difference in various types of wheat. The general public does not grasp this distinction. To them wheat is wheat, but such is far from the actual conditions.

In our Northwestern territory is grown the hard variety known as spring wheat, the finest for milling, containing a high percentage of gluten which is not found in the starchy winter wheat of the Southwestern and Western States. Because of its superior quality for milling purposes there is a demand for this wheat on the part of the millers.

Prior to the spring of 1917, when the Federal grain grades were made effective, the State of Minnesota had established grade rules which were simple and easily understood and adequately reflected the value of the grain for the purpose for which it was produced—for milling into bread flour. No such consideration was given in the Federal rules. The United Millers of America saw to it that the grade rules were so technical that only a trained expert could make a grade determination. It was argued that the basis of the Federal rules were made as uniform standards and would produce uniformity in the handling of the crops between markets. That, of course, was the intention, but most unfortunately that was not the result. Never has there been such a hopeless lack of uniformity as now.

It was proposed by those favoring the passage of the Federal grain standards act that a grade established at one market would, under this act, be accepted and available and useful in the market to which the grain was finally shipped. There are everyday instances to prove that this did not follow, but that the reverse prevailed.

Supervisors of the Department of Agriculture do not agree as between market shipments and they are supposed to be the last word in grain inspection. I do not intend to cast any reflection on the ability of the Federal employers. Many of them are experts; some of their best men have had their training in our department. But I insist that when rules for grading grain are built on a technical foundation alone they must fall by the weight of their own inconsistency.

I openly and forcibly opposed the passage of the grain standards act. In fact, I was almost alone in the opposition. North Dakota politicians were clamoring for the bill, largely through a desire to attain national political reputations. Even Minnesota politicians with short-sighted ideas were in favor of the Federal bill, and they aligned against us. Before the grain standards fixed under the Federal act had been in force one year the farmers of North Dakota were down in my office pleading with us to help them secure some modification of the Federal standards. They fully admitted that they had expected some great and beneficial result from these grades, as they had been led to believe by their politicians, but they were sadly disappointed. Instead of benefits they were decidedly hurt, and hurt where it was most telling—in their prices.

Not that the prices of wheat are lower under Federal grades, but the wheat which had theretofore been graded as No. 1, and was for all practical intents and purposes No. 1 wheat, had become No. 2 or No. 3, or even lower, under the technical Federal grade requirements. One single factor alone, while having no bearing or relation to the milling value of the wheat, could by one-tenth of 1 per cent deficiency reduce the grade from 1 to 2 with a natural resultant price reduction.

TESTS FAIL TO BRING RELIEF

Through all these years, with an overabundance of proof of the inconsistency of the grade rules, we have not been able to secure any modification. We have proved by milling and baking tests that these inconsequential factors have no relation to the wheat value, and yet we have been refused any help in the way of changes or modification.

The exporters at the eastern seaboard joined with the millers in the demand for the passage of this Federal bill. At that time they were told they would some day find themselves without an American exporting business. In trips to Europe I have found that the European buyers are not able to understand the American multiplicity of grades. They were in the habit of buying hard spring wheat from the United States as No. 1 or No. 2 Duluth, meaning No. 1 or No. 2 Northern out of Duluth, with a test weight of 57 or 58 pounds to the bushel, dry, reasonably clean, and of good milling quality. When they got the wheat it was what they were expecting and what they were willing to pay for. Under the Federal grades it might be No. 1 Dark Northern, No. 1 Northern, No. 1 Red Spring, or any of 54 other grades, and meant nothing. Milling value was not a factor. They merely stopped buying United States wheat and started to buy from Canada.

At one time, before the Federal grades on rye were fixed, New York and Philadelphia were great rye exporting markets. Now we find that they are no longer in the business, but that Montreal is. Why? Because the Canadian grades are clear and understandable and the grain is shipped dockage free.

What good can come from any form of farm relief which purports to take care of and dispose of a grain surplus when our foreign customers do not desire to do business with us on our basis? An exporting type sample arrangement and representation in Europe to solicit business for American grain would provide the logical, practical solution for a large part of the trouble.

The exporters are now very much concerned over the situation, and are laying great stress on their inability to do business on the Federal grades. It has taken over 10 years to convince them of this fact, but we now feel some satisfaction in learning that they have at last seen the light and are finally awakened to their own particular danger.

The export figures of the calendar year 1928 show graphically the amazing criss-crossing of the streams of grain flowing from the fields of the West to the eastern seaboard, and thence across the Atlantic to Europe.

(Figures in millions of bushels)

Total exports from United States and Canadian ports	370
Exports through Canadian ports	232
Exports through United States ports	138
United States grain through Canadian ports	75
United States grain through United States ports	28
Canadian grain through United States ports	110
Canadian grain through Canadian ports	157

UNITED STATES GRAIN LOSES IDENTITY

But note the difference in grading of these exports. The Canadian grain went out of United States ports on Canadian grades, while the United States grain passing through these same ports was graded on the American standards. In Canadian ports, however, a different condition prevailed. Both the Canadian and United States grown grain passing through Montreal, West St. John, and Halifax was graded according to Canadian rules. The complicated American system is not recognized there. The baneful effects of the American grading system are graphically displayed in export figures.

Out of 103,000,000 bushels of United States grown grain exported in 1928, only 27.28 per cent went through American ports under American grades, while 72.72 per cent went through Canadian ports on Canadian grades, which meant that it had lost its identity as United States grain and to the world became Canadian grain.

Why do the American exporters look to Canada for their export supply? Because they can find no European buyers with whom they can do business under the United States grade rules. This seems like a deplorable situation to me when the answer is so apparent and so simple of adjustment. Of course, if our spring wheat surplus can be offered in the world market in export the millers of this country will have to bid against the export buyer and the consequence will be a stabilization of domestic grain prices with a higher level of prices for the domestic hard wheat.

The geographic location of Minneapolis and Duluth forms a natural gateway for the movement of the grain from North Dakota, parts of South Dakota and eastern Montana to the eastern and southwestern mills and the ports of export. Because of the vast milling industry of Minneapolis an inspection system was set up by the State of Minnesota, and because of the lake shipping from Duluth a similar system was set up at that point.

These two points are the largest handlers of spring wheat in the United States, as primary handling markets. Here the grain is assembled in the storage warehouses built for the purpose and for the protection of the shippers of the grain, whether they be the country elevator or the individual shipping farmer, the State of Minnesota has thrown around the operation of these terminals every safeguard possible. The regulatory measures adopted by Minnesota have been the pattern for most States that have become engaged in a similar enterprise. Within the past few years several foreign countries have sent representatives to our department for assistance and advice in preparing legislation and methods for a similar control of their agricultural products.

SERVING ENTIRE NORTHWEST

We have never looked upon the grain-inspection business of this State as a purely local Minnesota function but rather as a trust imposed upon us by the shippers to these markets and our endeavors to secure relief in the grain grades has been as much, if not more, in the interests of all the Northwestern States as our own.

The grain department of Minnesota has been the subject of investigation by our legislature on several occasions and of North Dakota committees on several occasions but never has a report been made condemning any part of our system nor has there been any suggestion offered for improvement.

I became so discouraged over the continuous unfounded complaints of North Dakota politicians that in 1917 I requested the agricultural colleges of Montana, North and South Dakota, Iowa, and Minnesota to make a complete, impartial, and unhampered survey of the department, and this was done at the expense of Minnesota. After spending a great deal of time a report was made and in it there was no single word of criticism, no plan for improvement, and a decided statement that the service rendered to the producer was honest, impartial, efficient, and could not be improved upon.

The survey was made shortly before the effective date of the Federal grades. Since then there have been complaints made as to grading but there is no difficulty in convincing the complainants that the trouble lies not with the Minnesota inspection officials but with the Federal grade rules.

ALL SHIPPED OUT AS NO. 1

That the Federal grading rules operate to the detriment of the producer can be proven by the simple statement, easily understood, that of all the No. 2 dark northern spring wheat stored during the last crop year in Minnesota terminal elevators, none was shipped from such elevators on a lower grade than No. 1. This means that the No. 2 wheat, for which the producer receives No. 2 price, was shipped out of the terminals as No. 1, and the owner of the storage ticket, whether it be the elevator company or an operator on the chamber of commerce, received the No. 1 price.

During the session of Congress in the spring of 1928 a bill known as the Shipstead repeal of the grain standards act had hearings before the Senate Agricultural Committee. Mr. G. G. Grant, who is in charge of the grain department of this commission and who has devoted many years to that work, testified before that committee and proved by actual cards taken from our inspection records that the Federal system was operating directly to the detriment of the producer. This bill was not passed because the other grain-producing States were not alive to the situation, or were so narrow in their views that they looked upon the matter as purely local. However, since that time the States of Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma have had crop difficulties which have brought home to them the need for grade changes, and they have been clamoring at the gates of the Department of Agriculture for relief. They did get some assistance but not all that they should. This one instance of their trouble is but an echo of the difficulties experienced in every crop of spring wheat.

A SOUTHWESTERN CASE

These Southwestern States have had a similar experience in the handling of their crops under Federal grade rules. In one instance related before the Senate Committee on Agriculture a representative of the wheat pool testified that they had loaded out of Kansas City about 300 cars of No. 2 winter wheat. This grade was agreed to by the Kansas and Missouri State inspection departments and approved by the Federal supervisor of that district. The grain was sold for export through New Orleans. On its arrival at New Orleans it was all graded down to No. 3 and No. 4 by the Federal supervisor of that port, and this on a very technical factor.

To meet the contract which had been entered into by the wheat pool and get the grain loaded into ships for foreign delivery, it was necessary for them to ship 195,000 bushels more of what was practically No. 1 wheat. This expense was entirely unnecessary and only shows the decided lack of uniformity in Federal grades. This is but one instance; we could name many that have come to our attention.

It will be recalled that recently Senator ARTHUR CAPPER, of Kansas, called the attention of the Secretary of Agriculture to a situation in his territory of a surplus of forty millions of winter wheat. This was as nothing compared to us. In the elevators of Minneapolis, Duluth, and Superior there are approximately 70,000,000 bushels of grain, and of this about 50,000,000 are spring wheat and durum. In addition to this there is a larger amount of grain held at the country elevators and farms than ever in the history of the Northwest. There is no market, apparently, for this fine hard wheat, but I have no hesitancy in saying that if the United States exporters could sell in the world market on a fair and equitable grade basis it would not have been necessary for them to deal in Canadian grain, but, rather, they would have been able to dispose of our own grain and reduce materially this large surplus.

To my mind the greatest trouble in the handling of the grading system under the Federal rules has been the inability of the actual producer to appear in Washington and relate his troubles. He can not afford the expense and generally is not conversant with the methods of doing business in the Capital. The millers maintain a large staff of experts in Washington and are in constant touch with the situation.

To relieve the situation in respect to the tremendous surplus of grain in the Northwest and Southwest the railroads, at the request of the administration, have agreed to reduce their freight rates on grain and grain products from the Middle West and Southwest to the eastern seaboard, which rates will be in effect until September 1. While I agree with the theory of this reduction, I can not see where it will help the farmers in the least, inasmuch as their wheat is very largely in the hands of the elevators at the terminal markets.

It would appear to me that if the Secretary of Agriculture had a desire to participate in the movement for the relief of agriculture he would call a conference of practical grain men from the Middle West, Southwest, and East with the idea in mind of adjusting the Federal grades to a basis where they would be again understood by eastern buyers, and who would be interested in engaging again in business with American exporters on American grain and on a basis which would be fair and equitable to them and easily understood.

ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION AND NARCOTIC ACTS

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary a letter which I have received from Seymour Lowman, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Department, giving certain data as to personnel appointments resulting from the additional appropriation made at the last session for the enforcement of the national prohibition and narcotic acts, giving the names of the districts and the number of men employed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 8, 1929.

Hon. WILLIAM J. HARRIS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR HARRIS: In further reference to your letter of May 29, 1929, requesting certain data as to personnel appointments resulting from the additional appropriation made last session for the enforcement of the national prohibition and narcotic acts, please be advised that the 370 additional prohibition agents, special agents, and senior investigators for which funds were appropriated in the first deficiency act of 1929 were apportioned as follows:

Prohibition districts	Prohibition agents	Senior investigators
Boston, Mass.	10	1
New York, N. Y.	10	1
Buffalo, N. Y.	8	1
Newark, N. J.	10
Philadelphia, Pa.	9	1
Pittsburgh, Pa.	4	1
Baltimore, Md.	12
Richmond, Va.	12
Savannah, Ga.	17	1
New Orleans, La.	11	1
Louisville, Ky.	21
Columbus, Ohio	6
Chicago, Ill.	15
St. Paul, Minn.	10	1
Topeka, Kans.	12	1
St. Louis, Mo.	8	1
Fort Worth, Tex.	9
Denver, Colo.	8
Helena, Mont.	10
Seattle, Wash.	10
San Francisco, Calif.	10
Los Angeles, Calif.	12
Honolulu, Hawaii	8	1
San Juan, Porto Rico	7
Detroit, Mich.	13
Albany, N. Y.	8
	270	11

Special agents divisions	Special agents	Senior investigators
Providence, R. I.	8	1
New York, N. Y.	12	2
Washington, D. C.	5	1
Jacksonville, Fla.	8	1
Detroit, Mich.	11	2
Chicago, Ill.	5	1
Kansas City, Mo.	7	1
San Francisco, Calif.	4	1
Los Angeles, Calif.	4	1
Seattle, Wash.	5	1
Plant control	6	1
Air patrol
Special assignment		1
	75	14

The deficiency appropriation for 1929 and 1930 was based upon the cost of carrying 25 additional senior prohibition investigators, 75 additional special agents, and 270 additional prohibition agents for the period of one year, and $178,154, which was needed to meet the increase in salaries brought about by classifying and standardizing field positions in accordance with the Welch Act, and $50,000, to be expended for dissemination of information.

However, the appropriation was made immediately available and the organizations to which additional funds were allocated were authorized to expend not to exceed four-sixteenths of the total amount allotted for the above-enumerated personnel during the remainder of the present fiscal year.

There has been an increase in the enforcement personnel of 163 prohibition investigators and agents since March 4, 1929, the date of the approval of the deficiency act. The additional enforcement personnel provided for in the deficiency appropriation act will be employed as fast as suitable men can be obtained. It is expected the force will be completed shortly after July 1, 1929.

The various organizations have set aside the sum of $451,099 for use during the present fiscal year and the balance of the deficiency appropriation to be available for fiscal year 1930. In the event the total of the sum set aside for use during fiscal year 1929 is not fully exhausted, the remainder will be used for expenditures during 1930.

Sincerely yours,

SEYMOUR LOWMAN,
Assistant Secretary.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 90) relating to pardons, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 34) thereon.

SALARY ADJUSTMENT FOR CONGRESSIONAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, from the Joint Committee to Investigate and Report Upon Adjustments in Salaries of Officers and Employees of Congress I report a bill and submit an accompanying report (No. 35), which I ask may be printed.

The bill (S. 1531) to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar and the report (No. 35) printed in accordance with the request of the Senator from Wyoming.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 312. An act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress; and

S. 1452. An act to authorize the State of West Virginia to acquire a bridge over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek in said State and to acquire the right to construct a bridge over said river at St. Albans in said State.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 1503) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine certain claims of persons to property rights as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or Tribes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to introduce two bills. The first bill extends for a period of one year the time in which former service men of the late war may bring suit. It also provides that this may be done without an advance in costs or the giving of bond. Many of them have been unable to comply with the orders of the court that they should pay advance costs and give bond, and they have been denied the opportunity to litigate their claims.

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 1504) to extend the time of bringing suits on insurance claims of certain veterans of the World War; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CARAWAY. The other bill I wish to introduce seeks the removal of certain locks and dams placed in the White River, Ark., constructed about 30 years ago, which have proved to be hurtful and not helpful.

By Mr. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 1505) to provide for the removal of certain locks and dams in the White River in the State of Arkansas; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BURTON:

A bill (S. 1507) to amend the customs reorganization act of 1913 so as to abolish the position of appraisers of merchandise in customs district No. 41; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 1508) for the relief of Mamie Edmonds, widow of Hayden Edmonds, deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HATFIELD:

A bill (S. 1509) granting a pension to Ella Reitz McGill; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 1510) granting a pension to Moses Roane;

A bill (S. 1511) granting an increase of pension to Lucille Dodson Brown;

A bill (S. 1512) granting an increase of pension to Grace G. Dillingham;

A bill (S. 1513) granting a pension to Ralph P. Bell;

A bill (S. 1514) granting a pension to Sarah A. Faris; and

A bill (S. 1515) granting a pension to Maud M. Whitton; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1516) for the reimbursement of R. H. Quynn, lieutenant, United States Navy, for loss of property by fire at the naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.;

A bill (S. 1517) for the relief of Martha C. Booker, administratrix of the estate of Hunter R. Booker, deceased; H. H. Holt; and Annie V. Groome, administratrix of the estate of Nelson S. Groome, deceased;

A bill (S. 1518) to extend the benefits of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Solomon J. Oliver;

A bill (S. 1519) for the relief of the Harrison Construction Co.;

A bill (S. 1520) for the relief of Arthur M. Thompson;

A bill (S. 1521) for the relief of James W. Rollins;

A bill (S. 1522) for the relief of the Seaboard Wharf & Warehouse Co. (Inc.);

A bill (S. 1523) for the relief of Paul Scarborough;

A bill (S. 1524) for the relief of the Norfolk Dredging Co.;

A bill (S. 1525) for the relief of Isabelle R. Damron, postmaster at Clintwood, Va.;

A bill (S. 1526) for the relief of Henry Kirn;

A bill (S. 1527) for the relief of the heirs of George E. Taylor, deceased;

A bill (S. 1528) for the relief of G. T. and W. B. Hastings, partners, trading as Hastings Bros.;

A bill (S. 1529) for the relief of William Fair; and

A bill (S. 1530) for the relief of F. P. Gillingham; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER:

A bill (S. 1532) granting an increase of pension to Victor C. Maring; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1533) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for payment of charges due on Indian irrigation projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A bill (S. 1534) granting an increase of pension to Marie Doughty Gorgas; to the Committee on Pensions.

OATH TO BE TAKEN BY ALIENS

Mr. STECK. Mr. President, I introduce a bill, which I send to the desk. In explanation I wish to state that on the 27th of May of this year, the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision in the case of the United States of America, petitioner, against Rosika Schwimmer, in which the majority of the court defined, in part, the obligation which must be taken by an alien in order to become a citizen of the United States. My bill seeks to amend that section of the statute which sets out the oath the alien must take, and seeks to make it more definite and in conformance with the opinion of the United States Supreme Court. My bill would add to that section the following:

That when called upon he will bear arms in defense of the United States, its Constitution and laws, and that he will without reservation aid and encourage the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the senior Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STECK. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the decision to which the Senator refers the one holding that a woman would have to declare herself willing and anxious to fight before she could become a citizen?

Mr. STECK. The decision is not particularly applicable to the person referred to by the Senator whose case was before the Supreme Court, but I think the principle as announced by the Supreme Court is right, and it meets with my hearty approval. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Immigration, printed in the RECORD, and in connection therewith that there may also be printed in the RECORD the decision to which I have referred, and likewise an editorial from the Evening Star of Washington, D. C., of date Tuesday, May 28, 1929.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1506) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, and establishing a bureau of naturalization," approved June 29, 1906, as amended, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Immigration, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, and establishing the Bureau of Naturalization," approved June 29, 1906, as amended, be amended by striking out subsection 3 of section 4 thereof and substituting the following:

"Third. He shall, before he is admitted to citizenship, declare on oath in open court that he will support the Constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely and entirely renounces and abjures all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty, and particularly by name to the prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of which he was before a citizen or subject; that he will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same.

"That when called upon he will bear arms in defense of the United States, its Constitution and laws, and that he will without reservation aid and encourage the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic."

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and the editorial referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 484—October term, 1928

The United States of America, petitioner, v. Rosika Schwimmer

Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

(May 27, 1929)

Mr. Justice Butler delivered the opinion of the court.

Respondent filed a petition for naturalization in the District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. The court found her unable, without mental reservation, to take the prescribed oath of allegiance and not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and not well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same, and it denied her application. The circuit court of appeals reversed the decree and directed the district court to grant respondent's petition. (27 F. (2d) 742.)

The naturalization act of June 16, 1906, requires:

"He [the applicant for naturalization] shall, before he is admitted to citizenship, declare on oath in open court * * * that he will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same." (U. S. C. title 8, sec. 381.)

"It shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court * * * that during that time [at least five years preceding the application] he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same. * * *" (Sec. 382.)

Respondent was born in Hungary in 1877 and is a citizen of that country. She came to the United States in August, 1921, to visit and lecture; has resided in Illinois since the latter part of that month; declared her intention to become a citizen the following November; and filed petition for naturalization in September, 1926. On a preliminary form she stated that she understood the principles of and fully believed in our form of government, and that she had read, and in becoming a citizen was willing to take, the oath of allegiance. Question 22 was this: "If necessary, are you willing to take up arms in defense of this country?" She answered, "I would not take up arms personally."

She testified that she did not want to remain subject to Hungary; found the United States nearest her ideals of a democratic republic; and that she could wholeheartedly take the oath of allegiance. She said: "I can not see that a woman's refusal to take up arms is a contradiction to the oath of allegiance." For the fulfillment of the duty to support and defend the Constitution and laws she had in mind other ways and means. She referred to her interest in civic life, to her wide reading and attendance at lectures and meetings, mentioned her knowledge of foreign languages, and that she occasionally glanced through Hungarian, French, German, Dutch, Scandinavian, and Italian publications, and said that she could imagine finding in meetings and publications attacks on the American form of government and she would conceive it her duty to uphold it against such attacks. She expressed steadfast opposition to any undemocratic form of government like proletariat, Fascist, white terror, or military dictatorships. "All my past work proves that I have always served democratic ideals and fought—though not with arms—against undemocratic institutions." She stated that before coming to this country she had defended American ideals and had defended America in 1924 during an international pacifist congress in Washington.

She also testified: "If * * * the United States can compel its women citizens to take up arms in defense of the country—something that no other civilized government has ever attempted—I would not be able to comply with this requirement of American citizenship. In this case I would recognize the right of the Government to deal with me as it is dealing with its male citizens who for conscientious reasons refuse to take up arms."

The district director of naturalization by letter called her attention to a statement made by her in private correspondence: "I am an uncompromising pacifist. * * * I have no sense of nationalism; only a cosmic consciousness of belonging to the human family." She answered that the statement in her petition demonstrated that she was an uncompromising pacifist. "Highly as I prize the privilege of American citizenship, I could not compromise my way into it by giving an untrue answer to question 22, though for all practical purposes I might have done so, as even men of my age—I was 49 years old last September—are not called to take up arms. * * * That 'I have no nationalistic feeling' is evident from the fact that I wish to give up the nationality of my birth and to adopt a country which is based on principles and institutions more in harmony with my ideals. My 'cosmic consciousness of belonging to the human family' is shared by all those who believe that all human beings are the children of God."

And at the hearing she reiterated her ability and willingness to take the oath of allegiance without reservation and added: "I am willing to do everything that an American citizen has to do except fighting. If American women would be compelled to do that, I would not do that. I am an uncompromising pacifist. * * * I do not care how many other women fight, because I consider it a question of conscience. I am not willing to bear arms. In every other single way I am ready to follow the law and do everything that the law compels American citizens to do. That is why I can take the oath of allegiance, because, as far as I can find out, there is nothing that I could be compelled to do that I can not do. * * * With reference to spreading propaganda among the women throughout the country about my being an uncompromising pacifist and not willing to fight, I am always ready to tell anyone who wants to hear it that I am an uncompromising pacifist and will not fight. In my writings and in my lectures I take up the question of war and pacifism if I am asked for that."

Except for eligibility to the Presidency, naturalized citizens stand on the same footing as do native-born citizens. All alike owe allegiance to the Government, and the Government owes to them the duty of protection. These are reciprocal obligations, and each is a consideration for the other. (Luria v. United States, 231 U. S. 9, 22.) But aliens can acquire such equality only by naturalization according to the uniform rules prescribed by the Congress. They have no natural right to become citizens, but only that which is by statute conferred upon them. Because of the great value of the privileges conferred by naturalization, the statutes prescribing qualifications and governing procedure for admission are to be construed with definite purpose to favor and support the Government. And, in order to safeguard against admission of those who are unworthy or who for any reason fail to measure up to required standards, the law puts the burden upon every applicant to show by satisfactory evidence that he has the specified qualifications. (Tutun v. United States, 270 U. S. 568, 578.) And see United States v. Ginsberg (243 U. S. 472, 475).

Every alien claiming citizenship is given the right to submit his petition and evidence in support of it. And, if the requisite facts are established, he is entitled as of right to admission. On applications for naturalization, the court's function is "to receive the testimony, to compare it with the law, and to judge on both law and fact." (Spratt v. Spratt, 4 Pet. 393, 408.) We quite recently declared that: "Citizenship is a high privilege, and when doubts exist concerning a grant of it, generally at least, they should be resolved in favor of the United States and against the claimant." (United States v. Manzi, 276 U. S. 463, 467.) And when, upon a fair consideration of the evidence adduced upon an application for citizenship, doubt remains in the mind of the court as to any essential matter of fact, the United States is entitled to the benefit of such doubt and the application should be denied.

That it is the duty of citizens by force of arms to defend our Government against all enemies whenever necessity arises is a fundamental principle of the Constitution.

The common defense was one of the purposes for which the people ordained and established the Constitution. It empowers Congress to provide for such defense, to declare war, to raise and support armies, to maintain a navy, to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia and for calling it forth to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; it makes the President Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and of the Militia of the several States when called into the service of the United States; it declares that a well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed. We need not refer to the numerous statutes that contemplate defense of the United States, its Constitution, and laws by armed citizens. This court, in the Selective Draft Law cases (245 U. S. 366), speaking through Chief Justice White, said (p. 378) that "the very conception of a just government and its duty to the citizens includes the reciprocal obligation of the citizen to render military service in case of need * * *."

Whatever tends to lessen the willingness of citizens to discharge their duty to bear arms in the country's defense detracts from the strength and safety of the Government. And their opinions and beliefs as well as their behavior indicating a disposition to hinder in the performance of that duty are subjects of inquiry under the statutory provisions governing naturalization and are of vital importance, for if all or a large number of citizens oppose such defense the "good order and happiness" of the United States can not long endure. And it is evident that the views of applicants for naturalization in respect of such matters may not be disregarded. The influence of conscientious objectors against the use of military force in defense of the principles of our Government is apt to be more detrimental than their mere refusal to bear arms. The fact that, by reason of sex, age, or other cause they may be unfit to serve does not lessen their purpose or power to influence others. It is clear from her own statements that the declared opinions of respondent as to armed defense by citizens against enemies of the country were directly pertinent to the investigation of her application.

The record shows that respondent strongly desires to become a citizen. She is a linguist, lecturer, and writer; she is well educated and accustomed to discuss governments and civic affairs. Her testimony should be considered having regard to her interest and disclosed ability correctly to express herself. Her claim at the hearing that she possessed the required qualifications and was willing to take the oath was much impaired by other parts of her testimony. Taken as a whole, it shows that her objection to military service rests on reasons other than mere inability because of her sex and age personally to bear arms. Her expressed willingness to be treated as the Government dealt with conscientious objectors who refused to take up arms in the recent war indicates that she deemed herself to belong to that class. The fact that she is an uncompromising pacifist with no sense of nationalism but only a cosmic sense of belonging to the human family justifies belief that she may be opposed to the use of military force as contemplated by our Constitution and laws. And her testimony clearly suggests that she is disposed to exert her power to influence others to such opposition.

A pacifist in the general sense of the word is one who seeks to maintain peace and to abolish war. Such purposes are in harmony with the Constitution and policy of our Government. But the word is also used and understood to mean one who refuses or is unwilling for any purpose to bear arms because of conscientious considerations and who is disposed to encourage others in such refusal. And one who is without any sense of nationalism is not well bound or held by the ties of affection to any nation or government. Such persons are liable to be incapable of the attachment for and devotion to the principles of our Constitution that is required of aliens seeking naturalization.

It is shown by official records and everywhere well known that during the recent war there were found among those who described themselves as pacifists and conscientious objectors many citizens—though happily a minute part of all—who were unwilling to bear arms in that crisis and who refused to obey the laws of the United States and the lawful commands of its officers and encouraged such disobedience in others. Local boards found it necessary to issue a great number of noncombatant certificates, and several thousand who were called to camp made claim because of conscience for exemption from any form of military service. Several hundred were convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for offenses involving disobedience, desertion, propaganda, and sedition. It is obvious that the acts of such offenders evidence a want of that attachment to the principles of the Constitution of which the applicant is required to give affirmative evidence by the naturalization act.

The language used by respondent to describe her attitude in respect of the principles of the Constitution was vague and ambiguous; the burden was upon her to show what she meant and that her pacifism and lack of nationalistic sense did not oppose the principle that it is a duty of citizenship by force of arms when necessary to defend the country against all enemies, and that her opinions and beliefs would not prevent or impair the true faith and allegiance required by the act. She failed to do so. The district court was bound by the law to deny her application.

The decree of the circuit court of appeals is reversed.

The decree of the district court is affirmed.

A PATRIOTIC DECISION

The cause of national defense won a notable victory yesterday in the United States Supreme Court. In denying citizenship to Frau Rosika Schwimmer, a notorious Hungarian pacifist, who proclaimed while applying for naturalization her unwillingness to take up arms in protection of America, the court laid down a sound and significant doctrine.

"Whatever tends to lessen the willingness of citizens to discharge their duty to bear arms in the country's defense," the majority of the court declared, "detracts from the strength and safety of the Government." It was held by our tribunal of highest instance, in reversal of two lower courts, that Frau Schwimmer's activities in decrying the legitimacy of military establishments properly bar her from the privileges of American citizenship.

Excepting our professional peace-at-any-price groups, the Republic will applaud the Supreme Court's ruling. The overwhelming majority of the people adhere to the old-fashioned theory that an America worth belonging to as a citizen is worth fighting for and dying for when its honor is aspersed or its territory invaded. Frau Schwimmer and her kind presumably shake the dust of their native lands from oppressed feet in order to enjoy the untrammeled opportunities which life in the United States affords.

American citizenship while offering opportunities imposes obligations. One of them, as the Supreme Court now succinctly serves notice on all whom it may concern—the Schwimmers of both sexes and all origins—is duty to defend the land that opens for them and keeps open the door of opportunity. The theory of the Schwimmers is that they should be privileged to enjoy all the benefits of that gate but be required to take no part in keeping it ajar.

When aliens are admitted to American citizenship they are called upon to swear allegiance to the Constitution. The Constitution, the Supreme Court points out in yesterday's decision, declares that the duty of citizens to shoulder arms and "defend our Government against all enemies, whenever necessity arises, is a fundamental principle of the Constitution." Frau Schwimmer scorned to assume that responsibility. She sought to break into the American family on her own terms. The Supreme Court rightly and resolutely says to all who make such pretensions, "Thou shalt not pass."

REAPPORTIONMENT METHODS COMMITTEE

Mr. VANDENBERG. I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 59) to create a reapportionment methods committee to investigate the problem of methods of apportionment of Representatives was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas every decennial reapportionment of Representatives presents to the Congress the responsibility of determining the method to be used in dealing with reapportionment remainders; and

Whereas there are various standard mathematical methods of apportionment with respect to the relative merits, objectives, and results of which there is great confusion of thought and testimony; and

Whereas the determination of the method of apportionment which will result in mathematical equality of representation and best reflect the constitutional purpose is a matter of controversy; and

Whereas no independent congressional study has been made of the problem of reapportionment without regard to the effect upon a particular reapportionment: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby created a joint congressional committee to be known as "the reapportionment methods committee," and to be composed of three Senators, appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The committee is authorized and directed to make a complete study and investigation of the entire problem of methods of apportionment, including the consideration of constitutional as well as mathematical objectives, and to report to the Congress as soon as practicable, but in no event later than the first day of the second regular session of the Seventy-first Congress, the results of its study and investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation. For the purposes of this resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places, to employ such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $3,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

TULSA INTERNATIONAL PETROLEUM EXPOSITION

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for just a moment.

Mr. BORAH. I shall be glad to listen to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The last Congress passed a joint resolution authorizing the President to extend an invitation on behalf of our Government to foreign governments to participate in the Tulsa International Petroleum Exposition. It is necessary to pass a joint resolution to provide for the importation free of duty of such exhibits as foreign nations may care to send. At this time I am introducing a new joint resolution, it being an exact copy of the last joint resolution on the subject, save as to the date.

I desire now to call attention to the matter, as, I presume, the joint resolution will have to go to the committee; otherwise I should ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I feel that the joint resolution which the Senator from Oklahoma is about to introduce should go to the committee. At the same time, I presume if the joint resolution shall be so referred it is not likely that it will be acted upon at this session.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The exposition will be held beginning on the 5th of October, 1929, and that is the reason why I have called the attention of the chairman of the committee to the joint resolution.

Mr. BORAH. I think, in view of that fact, the committee could perhaps act upon the joint resolution in time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now introduce the resolution and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to begin October 5, 1929, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT TO TARIFF BILL—CRUDE AND FUEL PETROLEUM

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2667, the tariff revision bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

WAR-TIME RANK FOR CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 465) to give war-time rank to retired officers and former officers of the United States Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

LIMITATION OF TARIFF REVISION TO AGRICULTURAL SCHEDULE

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the Senate Resolution 91 submitted on yesterday by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and now on the table. I ask that the proposed amendment may be read, printed, and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the amendment was read, ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, as follows:

At the end of line 4, page 1, add the following: "and other lines of production that have been in a depressed condition during the last year or more, traceable to steadily increasing competitive imports."

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. DALE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 92), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Seventy-first Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 312. An act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress;

S. 1452. An act to authorize the State of West Virginia to acquire a bridge over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek in said State and to acquire the right to construct a bridge over said river at or near St. Albans in said State;

H. R. 3317. An act to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes"; and

H. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution making appropriations toward carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1929.

FOODS AND THE GOITER PROBLEM

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to a matter which I think will be of interest to Senators. It is an article by Dr. William Weston entitled "Foods and the Goiter Problem." It shows that as a result of investigations made by Doctors Weston and Remington it has been demonstrated that the fruits and vegetables grown in South Carolina have a very high iodine content. Doctor Remington found the amounts of iodine in them enormously greater than those reported by other workers in vegetables from Northern and Western States. This discovery, the article says, would seem to lead to the conclusion that goiter will not occur if foods that naturally contain a sufficient amount of iodine are regularly eaten. I have been talking with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] about this matter. He said he thought it a very interesting article and that it would really be of benefit to have it placed in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The article is as follows:

FOODS AND THE GOITER PROBLEM

By William Weston, M. D., D. P. H.

The disease which is known as goiter is an enlargement of the thyroid gland and is due to a deficiency of iodine in the diet. It is so widespread in its distribution that it constitutes a serious public-health problem to every great nation of the world. The consequent world-wide movement to obtain foods that naturally contain a sufficient amount of iodine so that when eaten in moderate quantities they will prevent goiter, is one of the most important preventive measures ever undertaken in the interest of health.

From a historical standpoint goiter is one of the most ancient and interesting of all diseases. We are informed that 15 centuries before Christ it was an important health problem in China, and it was the custom among the Chinese to feed thyroid substance from animals and the ash from burnt sponges and other materials, now known to contain iodine, in its treatment.

Goiter was also a matter of concern to the Phœnicians and they learned to employ sponge ash in its treatment.

Hippocrates, the father of medicine and one of the most distinguished of the ancient Greek writers, held sponge ash in high esteem as a remedy for goiter. Both Galen and Pliny wrote in its praise.

Paracelsus, writing in 1616, described goiter in the region of Salzburg, an important focus to this day. "In this region may be observed many of the victims of this distressing disease. Among the population may be noted many who present manifestations of degeneracy such as weakmindedness, imbecility, idiocy, various types of criminals, cretinism, and myxedema."

In the Middle Ages goiter was considered more a curse than a disease and was generally thought of as a punishment for blasphemy which could only be relieved by the magic touch of royalty.

MOST IMPORTANT AREAS OF DISTRIBUTION

Goiter is very prevalent in the Himalaya Mountain region of Asia, southern Germany, northern France, northern Italy, Austria, Switzerland, the Balkan States, the Plateau of the Andes; in North America, the region about the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River, the Cascade Mountain region of Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia (see p. 2), the States in the Central Basin, the Appalachian Mountain region, the Rocky Mountain States.

PREVALENCE OF GOITER

Dr. John M. Blackford, of Seattle, Wash., in a paper entitled "Goiter from the Internist's Standpoint," writes: "I had, a few years ago, opportunity to study the girls of a freshman university class; 85 per cent had definitely larger thyroids than strictly normal; and a survey would probably show an equally high incidence of adolescent goiter."

Dr. J. Tate Mason, of Seattle, writes: "The diagnosis and treatment of goiter are problems of this Northwest country. In the city of Seattle it has been estimated that 65 per cent of the boys and 75 per cent of the girls between the ages of 12 and 18 have some disturbance of the thyroid gland."

Smith, writing in 1917 of the conditions in the Yellowstone River Valley, says, "There is a loss of approximately one million young pigs and numerous lambs, calves, and colts each year as a result of thyroid diseases." He describes the pigs as either being hairless and being born dead or dying within an hour or two, while others lived from 24 to 36 hours.

Keith's account of conditions due to iodine deficiency in the Pemberton Valley in British Columbia are interesting. He writes: "Many of the women and every child born in this district had an enlarged thyroid. Pigs were born hairless, calves were goitrous, mares became goitrous and many colts were carried beyond full term and showed traces of myxedema. Many of the eggs of fowls, while fertile, failed to hatch, the apparent reason being thickening of the white envelope within the shell."

Figures compiled by the United States Public Health Service show that the goiter incidence is high and is a serious problem in large sections of the following States: California, Connecticut, Colorado, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, Idaho, Kansas, Louisiana, Minnesota, Michigan, Massachusetts, Missouri, Montana, Maine, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Utah, Virginia, West Virginia, Washington, and Wyoming. Statistics are not available from some States.

SYNOPSIS OF DATES AND EVENTS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE GOITER PROBLEM

1811. Iodine was discovered by Courtois, a saltpeter manufacturer of Paris.

1813. Courtois publicly announced the discovery.

1815. Element discovered by Courtois was given the name iodine by Gay-Lussac and Sir Humphrey Davy.

1820. Coindet, a physician of Geneva, first deliberately used iodine in the treatment of goiter.

1852. Chatin directed attention to the observation that goiter was more common in those regions where the soils and waters were very low in iodine.

1874. Sir William Gull showed that the thyroid gland underwent extreme atrophy in cases of myxedema. From this discovery was learned the function of the thyroid gland.

1882. Reverdin brothers reported a symptom complex similar to myxedema following the surgical removal of the thyroid gland in man.

1895. Magnus-Levy discovered that metabolism (heat production) was markedly decreased in myxedema. Following this discovery it was learned that heat production is decidedly lowered by removal of the thyroid gland.

1895. Baumann discovered relatively large amounts of iodine in the thyroid gland and that no other tissue in the body contained iodine in comparable amounts. This discovery has proved to be the greatest advance yet made in unraveling the physiology and pathology of the thyroid. It at once aroused great interest, which resulted within 10 years in showing that iodine was the determining element in the specific secretion of the thyroid which caused its most characteristic effect, namely, increased metabolism (heat production), and its absence caused decreased heat production.

1897. Magnus-Levy showed that the beneficial effect of the administration of thyroid gland was in raising the level of heat production.

1909–1910. Marine and Lenhart first intentionally used iodine for the prevention of goiter on large groups of girls.

1910. Marine and Lenhart introduced iodine in water, thus preventing goiter in brook trout.

1916. E. C. Kendall, of Rochester, Minn., isolated from thyroid glands a specific iodine-containing crystalline substance which he named thyroxin. This hormone contained 65 per cent of pure iodine.

1922–1927. McClendon, of the University of Minnesota, published a series of articles which were largely responsible for crystallizing the relation between a deficiency of iodine in the food supply and the incidence of goiter. After reading these articles one will inevitably be led to the conclusion that the logical course to pursue in the prevention and treatment of goiter is through eating foods that naturally contain a sufficient amount of iodine to provide for nutritional requirements.

1928–29. Remington examined in the South Carolina Food Research Laboratory great numbers of samples of vegetables grown in all sections of South Carolina for their iodine content. He found the amounts of iodine in them enormously greater than those reported by other workers in vegetables from Northern and Western States. This discovery in conjunction with the goiter survey made by the field force of the South Carolina State Board of Health in which it was found that goiter was practically nonexistent (3½ per cent) would lead to the conclusion that goiter will not occur if foods that naturally contain a sufficient amount of iodine are regularly eaten.

FUNCTIONS OF THE THYROID GLAND

Doctor Remington in a recent address explained the functions of the thyroid gland as follows: "Translated into popular language, our picture of the thyroid gland is that of a chemical factory which requires as raw materials substances derived from the protein of our food, and iodine. Unlike an industrial plant, which shuts down if raw material is lacking, the gland, in cases of iodine deficiency starts to enlarge, apparently in the attempt to collect more iodine from the blood which supplies it. This enlargement we call simple goiter. The finished product of this factory is a substance named thyroxin, which is delivered to the blood, carried by the blood to the most remote parts of the body and acts (to use a familiar term) as a timer for the fundamental activities of the body. If too little of the timer substance is produced, the body machine runs slow—mental and physical processes are less active, body temperature and pulse rate are apt to be lowered, the subject lays on fat, and in extreme cases the skin becomes thickened, dry, and rough, the eye loses its luster, a condition of myxedema.

The opposite picture is that of a factory whose output of the timer substance is greater than it should be, so that all those effects are reversed—more rapid respiration and pulse, higher body temperature, a tendency to lose weight, increased mental and physical activity, etc. This is the condition in the so-called toxic types of goiter—which can only be relieved by cutting out part of the gland so as to reduce it to somewhere near its normal size. This extra active gland is supposed by most investigators to follow after the simple goiter—that is, a lack of iodine causes the gland to enlarge, and the enlarged gland later becomes too active.

DISEASES OF THE THYROID GLAND

The diseases associated with disturbances of the function of the thyroid gland may for convenience be divided into two groups.

The first group includes simple goiter, cretinism, and myxedema. These are definitely due to a deficiency of iodine in the diet. Simple goiter is the most frequently met with of all the varieties. Its sudden occurrence in large numbers of cases in military garrisons, institutions, schools, and in certain districts has given the impression of an infection, but further investigation developed the true causes, namely, "deficiency of iodine in the diet." These sudden and acute outbreaks have occurred in dairy herds, on poultry farms, and in fish hatcheries in districts where the ordinary incidence of goiter was high and occasionally where it was low.

The periods of life when goiter most frequently develops are: During fetal life, during puberty, during pregnancy and lactation, and during the menopause. These are the periods of life when growth, differentiation, and energy transformation are greatest. Goiter is about three times more common in girls than boys, except in districts where the greater portion of the population have goiters. It is also true that the need for iodine in the diet is increased in certain infections, such as tuberculosis, syphilis, tonsilitis, and focal infections.

CRETINISM

Cretinism is a condition due to retarded development, resulting in dwarfism, and is invariably associated with mental defectiveness and changes in the thyroid gland, bones, skin, genitals, and organs of special senses. It is found almost exclusively in regions where goiter is very common.

Cretins are usually the children of parents one or both of whom have goiters and is much more common in females than in males. When two cretins marry, the marriage is invariably sterile, or if they have children they do not survive. It is not unusual for cretins to have goiter.

A cretin presents the following characteristics: Stout, rather bulky, quadrangular head, broad face, conspicuous nostrils, prominent cheek bones, prognathous chin. The mouth appears large, the lips are thick, the tongue is large and often protrudes from the partly open mouth. The neck is short and thick and over 60 per cent have a goiter. The body is short and broad, the thorax short and flat, and the abdomen large and pendulous (pot-bellied). The legs are short and plump. Cretins walk with a waddling, uncertain gait. All their movements are slow and clumsy.

The skin of the cretin is of a chalky pallor and areas of brown pigmentation are often present. It feels cold to the touch and is thick, unelastic, and flabby. It is often wrinkled over the forehead, hangs in folds, especially around the hips, and appears edematous, yet does not pit on pressure. The skin is usually dry and scaly. The hair is scanty, coarse, and dry; the nails are brittle; the teeth are invariably decayed.

Practically all the secondary sex characteristics remain undeveloped.

Cretins are huge eaters, but seldom chew their food. All cretins are low grade mentally, many of them are imbeciles or idiots. Many of them are deaf. It is not unusual for cretins to become beggars or criminals.

In goitrous districts it is not unusual to find border-line cases. These individuals are of small stature, mentally dull, clumsy in their movements, and lazy.

Deaf-mutes are very numerous in cretinous regions and a large proportion of them have goiter.

Emerson writes: "The cretins present a very serious economic and social problem in goiter countries since so large a proportion of the population is physically and mentally below average and so a positive burden for the State to bear."

MYXEDEMA

Myxedema is a chronic disease characterized by changes in the skin and subcutaneous tissue and by general ill health and mental disturbances, all due to a loss of thyroid function. These cases, like cretins, are found in goitrous districts where the food supply does not contain a sufficient amount of iodine to provide for nutritional requirements.

The most important symptoms are mental apathy and changes in the skin. These changes develop slowly, from weeks to years passing before the complete picture is produced. "The first notable symptoms are sometimes mental, sometimes in the skin. There is in some cases a frequent or constant malaise, with lapses of memory and other physical anomalies. In others the swelling of the eyelids, dryness, and yellowness of the skin, solid edema, or the gait may first attract attention."

The thickening of the skin is usually first noted in the face, especially the eyelids, or in the chin, ears, cheeks, and neck. The swelling does not pit on pressure.

The hands, feet, arms, and legs become enlarged. The fingers become thick and clumsy. The abdomen is large and pendulous. The hair becomes dry, coarse, and brittle, and falls out.

Weakness and loss of memory are usually present, and all the mental processes are slow. Indecision is marked. Hallucinations of sight and hearing sometimes occur. Delusions of seeing animals may be present. Changes take place in the speech. It is slow, and changes in the voice occur.

Changes in the organs of special sense are not infrequent. Appetite is poor and thirst is seldom experienced.

PREVENTION OF GOITER

This is a problem that has engaged the thought and effort of scientists for ages. Several of the great nations, among them France, Austria, and Italy, have at various times appointed commissions to investigate the cause of goiter and recommend measures for its prevention. Many different theories have been advanced in explanation of its cause. Millions of dollars have been spent in the installation of new water supplies, and other measures have been undertaken, all of them more or less useless and of no avail because the true cause was not recognized.

Little attention seems to have been paid until the last 10 years to the observation of Chatin made in 1852 that goiter was more common in those regions where the soil and water were very low in iodine. During the last decade many analyses have been made of foods, soils, and waters for their iodine content, and all of them have confirmed Chatin's claim. In the United States in many sections the goiter problem assumes a magnitude not yet fully appreciated, because few realize that in many sections approximately 3 out of every 5 persons have goiter, and that, taking the country as a whole, 2 persons out of every 5 have visible goiters. A recent estimate, said to be founded upon reliable statistical investigations, reveals the astounding information that 30,000,000 people in the United States have goiter. If these figures are even approximately correct, it must be apparent that iodine deficiency is our foremost health problem and the one that must be speedily solved.

McClendon analyzed the foods and waters of goitrous areas in the United States for their iodine content by a specially devised method which has been found to be most accurate. The results obtained by him uniformly support the views of Chatin.

The work by Weston and Remington shows that the fruits and vegetables grown in South Carolina contain a very high iodine content and that the goiter incidence is negligible.

The work of Marine, Lenhart, Kimball, Kendall, McClendon, and others has conclusively proved that a deficiency of iodine in the diet is the primary factor in the causation of goiter. The question then naturally arises, In what form must iodine be taken in order to prevent this scourge? What is the most practical method to insure its regular and safe intake? Studies in the science of nutrition have demonstrated that an organic relationship exists among the food elements that can not be overlooked. For instance, Marine has demonstrated that when rabbits are fed a diet exclusively of boiled cabbage (grown in the goitrous areas) they soon develop goiter, but if the same cabbage is fed raw or if the juice from the same cabbage before boiling is added they are protected from goiter. It is certain that the heat necessary to boil the cabbage does not destroy the iodine, but it does destroy certain vitamins and enzymes which may be necessary for the metabolism of iodine.

Even if iodine administered in its inorganic form, the form purchased out of the drug store, was both safe and efficient (and of either there must be doubt), there will always remain the question of its practicability, because there is a wise and growing sentiment among people at large against taking drugs. There is little or no objection on the part of people to taking vegetables and fruits that have a high iodine content. This seems the most rational method of solving the goiter problem. Therefore since we know that in certain regions vegetables and fruits can be grown that contain all the iodine necessary for the requirements of nutrition, it is of the greatest importance to the people resident in the goiter areas that such fruits and vegetables be made available to them. The most practical method is to can them, thus preserving them for a long period of time. It is believed that canning fruits and vegetables does not in any way affect their iodine content.

The amount of iodine necessary in the daily ration in order to maintain iodine balance is variously estimated. The only careful experiments is that of Doctor von Fellenberg, of Switzerland, who was able to maintain iodine equilibrium over a period of four weeks in a man on a diet which contained 0.0143 milligram per day (equivalent to 5.22 milligrams per year).

Remington has calculated the weight in ounces of some fresh vegetables from South Carolina which will yield this amount of iodine:

Leafy vegetables	Ounces
Cabbage—average of 8 samples	7
Lettuce—average of 9 samples	8
Spinach—average of 14 samples	7
Turnip tops—average of 5 samples	10
Potatoes
Potatoes—average of 76 samples	11
Sweet potatoes—average of 70 samples	16
Roots
Beets—average of 4 samples	24
Carrots—average of 8 samples	21
Turnips—average of 12 samples	23
Asparagus—average of 22 samples	27

He states further: "On this basis a diet containing 4 ounces of green vegetable, 8 ounces of potatoes, and 4 ounces of root vegetable would yield 0.021 milligram of iodine per day, which is about 150 per cent of the value of von Fellenberg. Since this quantity can be and frequently is eaten at a single meal, it is felt that these vegetables are adequate for goiter prevention when eaten regularly. A rational program of goiter prevention is the eating (daily) of one root vegetable, one leafy vegetable, and a potato grown in a region where the supply of iodine has been shown to be adequate."

LIST OF CLEARED RADIO CHANNELS

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a list of the cleared radio channels, together with the stations that are connected with the broadcasting chains. I made some mention of this subject yesterday; and I should like to have this list printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

THE MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I present articles from the Florida Farmer of June, 1929, the Palatka Daily News of June 10, 1929, and an editorial from the Palatka Daily News of June 10, 1929, relative to the Mediterranean fruit fly, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Florida Farmer, June, 1929]

GROWERS MUST BE COMPENSATED

By Forrest A. Lord

We hold this truth to be self-evident: That when the State or Federal Government shall, as a matter of public welfare, confiscate or destroy the property of any of its citizens, or deprive them of their recognized right to engage in legitimate business pursuits, such government is bound by all the laws of honor and humanity to compensate such citizens in full for all losses they may sustain as a result of such action.

It is incumbent upon the National Government, which has seen fit to adopt drastic measures for the eradication of the medfly, to reimburse the growers of fruits and vegetables for the full value of all crops destroyed and for the potential value of such crops as they are prohibited from planting.

The fruit fly is not alone the enemy of the grower. It is the enemy of the merchant, lawyer, doctor, railroad, banker, State, and Nation. Eradication of the pest is a matter of public welfare, and the public should stand the cost.

How to make a fair appraisal and a practical adjustment is a question, but it can be done. The best suggestion comes from J. Curtis Robinson, manager of the Clearing House Association, who recommends that rental be paid for all land and groves ordered withheld from production, thereby leaving the quarantine authorities free to enter upon these lands and conduct their work without fear of interruption from the owners.

The Florida Farmer calls upon the citizens of Florida, the State legislature, and the National Government to acknowledge their obligation in this matter and act without further delay to compensate the growers and farmers who are the victims of the eradication campaign.

[From the Palatka Daily News, June 10, 1929]

GROWER INDEMNITIES NEEDED NOW

If Congress in enacting legislation for indemnities to Florida fruit and truck growers makes similar State appropriations mandatory, the Federal relief will become inoperative. Both Congress and the administration regard the Mediterranean fruit fly infestations as a national menace. This has been borne out by the attitude toward the original outbreak and the eradication measures adopted to date. If that be true, compensation is also a Federal responsibility, although there is a marked tendency in Washington to make the contemplated appropriations contingent on the State's ability to go 50-50.

If reimbursement by the Federal Government was contingent upon Florida's willingness to stand half of the expense, it might be a different matter. Florida's spirit is willing, but the pocketbook is weak. This State is having a difficult time trying to raise enough funds to maintain its credit standing and to meet serious tax delinquencies. Right now, it is in the midst of an extra session of the legislature, called for the sole purpose of finding ways and means to conduct State affairs on a most rigid economy basis. To match Federal appropriations running into the millions is out of the question right now. Nevertheless, the compensation is an immediate and vital necessity.

However, the National Government may be assured that Florida is prepared to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to cope with its most serious economic problem—the fruit fly invasion of the United States. It would seem an act of gracious consideration for Florida, as well as one of expediency in meeting a national issue, if the Federal authorities would release their part of the indemnity funds without forcing the State to guarantee its share first.

Florida realizes that it is up against a serious situation. Losses attributable to the fruit fly will affect every citizen in the State regardless of his occupation. The pest will cost this Commonwealth millions upon millions of dollars, directly and indirectly. The growers whose crops are destroyed or quarantined out of regular market channels will be the biggest direct losers, even if they are compensated sufficiently to maintain their investment. We believe that everybody in the State realizes this and is prepared to fight it out no matter what the cost. And if the Federal Government will not make our immediate cash participation absolute, Florida will find a way to meet its part of the obligation.

[From the Palatka Daily News, Palatka, Fla., Monday, June 10, 1929]

EDITORIAL

The United States is at war!

Just as surely as if armed troops had entrenched themselves on our shores and were throwing down a barrage of shell fire this great country of ours has had its sovereignty questioned.

In her talk before the United States House of Representatives, when the discussion on the resolution to appropriate four and a quarter million dollars to combat the Mediterranean fruit fly was in progress, Hon. RUTH BRYAN OWEN, Congresswoman from the fourth Florida district, said:

"I believe that if an alien enemy had landed a hostile party on the shores of Florida and was preparing an invasion of my State no one would say that Florida ought to bear the brunt of the attack. They would not say, 'We will mobile our forces at the State line and defend ourselves when the enemy comes out of Florida.' I think that the whole country, if it faced an enemy from the outside, would say, 'This is an enemy of the United States.' That is just what we are facing now. There was a very striking article not long ago, published by a scientist in this country, which said that the last war man would fight would be a war for life against the invasion of insects."

Here is the landing party! The Mediterranean fruit fly is not Florida's misfortune. It is the misfortune, yes, the menace, of this entire Nation. The United States Government declared war when it put four and a quarter million dollars at the disposal of its Plant Quarantine and Control Administration to halt this punitive expedition into continental America, to smother it before it could consolidate its position or get its second wind for a devastating thrust into Georgia and Alabama and Kentucky and on through the Nation's orchards and fields and gardens.

Severe regulations were promptly set down as a barrier against its spread. Outside the State there is a powerful influence at work to have these regulations tightened. Within the State it is felt by many that they are too drastic.

There is only one way to stop the Mediterranean fruit fly from spreading beyond the confines of its present territory. That is by the most rigid adherence to quarantine regulations. If we violate them and the infestation spreads, the Federal authorities will only clamp down the harder. They will be forced to do so to protect the other States and the Nation as a whole. Leniency now might save a few thousand dollars this season, but it might also mean the loss of millions later on—yes, it might mean the utter ruination of our citrus and truck industries and the complete tie-up of other State activities.

Hundreds of thousands of boxes of fruit have already been heaped on the altar of sacrifice to this insidious and stealthy invader. The Government says that within the infested zones all host fruits and vegetables shall be destroyed; that none shall be allowed to come to maturity, and that none shall be replanted. In the protective zones there must be a host-free period of six months. Fortunately the bulk of produce from these zones can be marketed prior to May 1, which is the dead line next season.

We grant that such rules are necessary. They are vital to the success of the campaign. But what are these growers going to do for a livelihood? How are they going to maintain their groves and keep them commercially fit if they are forced to dump their revenues into the lime pits?

Government compensation, at least to the growers in zone 1, is inescapable. We do not profess to know how to do it, but we do profess to know that it can be done, and that it must be done. This is not like a flood, or tornado, or any other holocaust that affects local areas and blows or washes itself out within comparatively narrow limits. This thing can spread into every nook and cranny of the entire Nation and it can become a national calamity. It is up to the Federal Government and the State government and all the State governments to see that it doesn't. The physical machinery for obliterating this menace has been provided. The one way to make that machinery morally effective is to indemnify those whose incomes have been wiped out in order that others may live and prosper.

It is the most intensely vital issue, agriculturally at least, that confronts this country to-day. When the foot-and-mouth disease threatened the cattle industry a few years ago, a special appropriations act provided for reimbursement to cattle owners when their herds were slaughtered. Even materials contaminated by the germs of this virulent disease were paid for, and all on the basis of their actual worth. There is your precedent, and it only needs one precedent to establish the proof that it can be done. It can be done, because it has been done! There is no argument about that.

A delegation of loyal and far-sighted Floridians carried this appeal to Washington a few days ago. Messrs. J. A. Griffin, president of the Florida Citrus Growers Clearing House Association; J. C. Chase, Walter W. Rose, W. M. Scott, Earl Wirt, J. S. Cruitchfield, and others conferred with President Hoover, the Florida Representatives in Congress, the chairmen of the House and Senate Agricultural Committees, the Director of the Budget, and with Secretary Hyde on behalf of the Florida growers. The result is a bill, introduced by Senator FLETCHER, calling for $10,000,000 for reimbursement for crops consigned to the Medfly scrap heap. The citrus and truck growers of Florida owe a deep debt of gratitude to our Florida Congressmen and to these citizens for their unselfish representations and for the sympathetic and understanding reception their appeal received from the Washington authorities. Compensation is rightfully a part of the eradication program, and it is up to every citizen to support it and, in return for such helpful legislation, to give every Federal and State official 100 per cent cooperation in enforcing the quarantine regulations.

FARM RELIEF—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. McNARY. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McNARY. The House has messaged over its action on the conference report, and at the conclusion of the morning business I shall move that it be considered by the Senate.

ILLEGAL APPOINTMENTS AND DISMISSALS IN CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, last year there was adopted Senate Resolution 154 authorizing a special committee to investigate illegal appointments and dismissals in the civil service since July 1, 1919. The committee has been unable to obtain from the Civil Service Commission the data for which it asked, and for that reason has not made a report to the Senate. I ask now that the committee may be given additional time within which to submit its report and recommendations to the Senate, and that the committee may be granted permission to submit such report at any time during the extra session of the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FARM RELIEF—CONFERENCE REPORT

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair will lay before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before that is done, there is a matter which I have had much in my mind which, in my opinion, is more important than the resolution coming over from a preceding day. I am going to move, and I do now move, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill No. 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the conferees of the Senate and the House met this morning in conference and unanimously agreed to the report, the conferees of the House and the Senate attaching their signatures to it. It is identical with the report submitted to the House a week ago and submitted to the Senate a few days ago, and I hope we may have a very early decision of the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senate is now about to take the last step in the enactment of what has become known as farm relief legislation. In the opinion of many Senators on both sides of the Chamber, the elimination of the debenture proposal leaves the bill in no sense superior to legislation that might have been enacted at any time during the long contest over farm relief. There has scarcely been a day when Congress was in session when additional corporations with power to make loans to cooperative associations and when a farm board with comprehensive authority might not have been established.

This bill, as pointed out by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] a few days ago, is in no important particular different from the Jardine bill, which met with general disapproval, and which caused the retirement of its author from the President's Cabinet some months ago.

The advocates of the debenture provision have not delayed legislation longer than was necessary to secure fair consideration of the provision for which they stood. They have performed a duty in insisting that the House take a vote on the subject. This having been done and the House of Representatives having indicated by a substantial majority its opposition to debentures, the contest, in so far as I am concerned, may be now concluded and the bill passed, with nothing, in my opinion, accomplished save the creation of a board and of corporations in addition to those already in existence, to study production and marketing conditions, and to assure loans to cooperative associations in contemplation of arrangements for the orderly marketing of surplus crops.

The bill would have been far stronger if the debenture plan had been retained because that plan could have been used to prevent collapse of the agricultural industry in the event of the failure or breakdown of the other provisions in the bill. With or without debentures, the measure is in a sense an experiment. No one can foretell whether it will succeed. Its usefulness depends entirely on the character and ability of the members of the board to be chosen by the President.

The passage of this bill ends a long protracted struggle for farm relief. Further important legislation on the subject need not be expected or attempted in the early future, nor until this measure shall have been fully tried out. It is doubtful whether any considerable group of those who are most vitally affected by the legislation believe that it will accomplish the aims and purposes upon which they have insisted throughout the entire postwar period.

Numerous conferences have been held; political platforms have given expression to party views on the subject; committees in the House and in the Senate have gone over and over the question as to the form the legislation shall take. Now, we are ending the long struggle in action which many sincerely believe is inadequate and ineffectual.

No truthful person who has sufficient intelligence to be held responsible for his statements can assert that the platform plank adopted by the Republican Party in 1924, and repeated in 1928 because it had not been redeemed during the four years that had elapsed, has been carried out, pledging the Nation to such policies and measures as would restore economic equality between agriculture and other industries. This measure does not on its face promise the redemption of that pledge.

It may also be said that the business of farming will be "hit" rather than helped by such tariff legislation as may be enacted during this session. Called for the purpose of employing tariff revision as one feature of farm relief, we now witness the amazing spectacle that the farmer can neither be seen nor heard in the scramble.

The Senator from Utah shakes his head in protest at that statement——

Mr. SMOOT. I certainly do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. And he mutters under his breath something that I can not hear; but, Mr. President, if you will read the newspapers of the Nation, if you will take the measure as it passed the House of Representatives and make an analysis of it, you will realize that so far little consideration has been given to the interests of farm producers in dealing with the subject of tariff legislation; and the country must now look to the great "farmer" from Utah, the statesman who has farmed the farmers so repeatedly during the last 20 years, for farm relief through tariff legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The charge against me of "farming the farmers" is uncalled for, and I want to say that it is a mistake. I am not one of those who have been trying to "farm the farmers." In addition to that, I want to say that every representative of any farm organization in the United States—we have listened to them all the morning—shall be heard by the Finance Committee or subcommittees thereof.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Utah favor limiting the tariff revision as provided by the President's proclamation and by his message to the Congress when he made reference to tariff revision as a measure of farm relief?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not only in favor of tariff revision for farm relief, but I am in favor of whatever really is necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator is in favor of general revision?

Mr. SMOOT. I am. If we are to have a general revision it ought to be a general revision, and should not be taken up for just one class. To tell the truth, Mr. President, I do not see what schedule there is that would not fall within the terms of the resolution. The fact is that the farmer is interested in nearly every schedule, with the exception I think of three, under the resolution. Not only that, but we have heard from a great many of them on the schedules already.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not question the fact that the Senator from Utah believes in himself. I do not question the fact that he thinks he is so situated as to be able to write a tariff measure or assist in the preparation of a tariff measure that will be helpful to the farmers of the country. But I have not the slightest doubt that the bill that he will bring back into the Senate, if he is given free rein, will be worse, in so far as the farmers of the country are concerned, than the bill that passed the House of Representatives; and, God knows, that is bad enough!

Mr. SMOOT. Would it not be better for the Senator to make that statement after the bill is reported?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; I am making it now for a very definite purpose. I did not expect the Senator from Utah to agree with me. We seldom agree about anything in discussions on the floor of the Senate; but I make the point, Mr. President, and I make it boldly and without qualification or apology to the Senator from Utah or others, that such are his historical experiences in connection with the tariff, such are the interests with which he is affiliated, that it can not be expected that he will revise the tariff principally in the interest of agricultural producers. I do not anticipate that the Senator from Utah will acquiesce in that statement, or regard it as accurate; but I do believe it true from my study of the history of the tariff legislation that has passed the Congress during the last 18 years.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator is correct in saying that I could not agree to that statement; but I do not write the schedules, Mr. President. I have 1 vote out of 19.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator does not do himself justice.

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. One at a time, please.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I suppose the Chair will not prevent me from interpolating an occasional remark while I retain the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair's remark was not addressed to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not object to what the Senator was saying.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Utah speak a little louder? I am anxious to hear the Senator, but I can not do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know what the Senator means by inferring that of course I would write the schedules. I have 1 vote out of 19.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will tell the Senator in a minute.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I know that it is not so. Now, Mr. President, without casting any reflections upon me or any other member of the committee, every Senator on the committee has a vote, and he votes just as he feels like voting.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. If the Senator is going to take my time and waste the time of the Senate in making assertions like that, I think I shall resume the discussion myself.

Mr. SMOOT. Pardon me.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Utah informs the Senate that every member of the Finance Committee has a vote, as if there were anyone here so ignorant as not to know that fact. The Senator from Utah is overmodest when he attempts to maintain his assertion that he has no exceptional influence on the Finance Committee. He has largely dominated tariff legislation in the United States during the last 20 years; and whether he is willing to accept his responsibility or is too modest to proclaim it makes no difference to me. Every tariff bill that has passed both Houses and become a law has borne the "Smoot" brand inside and out.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I do not want to take the Senator's time; but, as a matter of fairness, it is a fact, of course, that after the tariff bill is reported from the Finance Committee, whether it is a Smoot bill or whatever name it may have, each Member of the Senate of the United States is free finally to vote for the enactment of just such a tariff bill as he wishes to have become the law.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, yes. That is another statement that is perfectly clear to all. Even the pages in this Chamber know that if some form of cloture is not provided for Senators can offer amendments and Senators can vote for or against them.

Mr. EDGE. Yes; but the Senator from Arkansas infers that the tariff legislation that becomes the law is dictated by the Senator from Utah. In making that statement the Senator from Arkansas rather directly infers that the entire Senate permits the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to do that, not the Finance Committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I mean exactly what I say. I mean to say that the Senator from Utah is not an ordinary factor in the writing of tariff legislation. He has in the past exercised tremendous influence, and he probably is doing it right now; and I am willing that the country shall know it, whether you are or not.

Mr. SMOOT. So am I.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Utah possesses a great deal of information on public questions and he devotes a great deal of thought to the tariff question; but his viewpoint is not that of the agriculturalist as a rule. His viewpoint is rather that of the protected manufacturer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know that every schedule affecting farm products in the existing law is exactly as the organizations asked to have it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Why, certainly. I recognize the fact that in the emergency tariff concessions were made to agriculture, but they were more than offset by the increases that were granted to manufacturers in the Fordney-McCumber tariff bill, and that is what is happening now. That is exactly what is happening now. Instead of this being a session of Congress to relieve the farmer by making the tariff effective for his benefit, this is becoming a general tariff revision in the interest of the manufacturers of the Nation and to the detriment of consumers generally, including farmers.

I hope I have made myself clear.

There is nothing offensive in what I have said. I have made an assertion that is recognized as the truth by every Member of the Senate. The Senator from Utah is a powerful factor in tariff making. He might take pride in it. The only reflection that is implied in that statement is that he exercises his power in a way for which he is not willing to accept full public responsibility.

Who is foolish enough to think, notwithstanding the declaration of my friend from Utah, that this process of revision that was carried on in the House, and that is going on now in the Finance Committee, is primarily in the interest of agricultural producers and designed to restore the economic equality between agriculture and other industries? The mere saying of a thing is not proof conclusive of the fact; and all the circumstances point definitely to the conclusion that the farmer is getting the worst of it.

What does the President think about it? What did he mean when he said, "Limit tariff revision"? What was his thought on the subject? What did the Senator from Kansas [Mr. ALLEN], the chief spokesman for the President of the United States in this body, mean the other day when he said he bitterly condemned the tariff bill as it passed the House of Representatives? What was the thought underlying his condemnation, if a thought did underlie it? The only thought must have been that the body at the other end of the Capitol had departed from the straight and narrow path pointed out by the President and, for the time being, had become "nonconformists" or "pseudo-Republicans."

Oh, it is as clear as daylight that the producers of agricultural products are being lost sight of as the fight on the tariff progresses.

He is indeed an optimist who believes the boast of subsidized newspapers and of politicians who represent special interests that great strides are being made in restoring agriculture to the level of protected industries. Agriculture will receive little benefit from the increases that are proposed on agricultural products imported into the United States, because you have rejected both the equalization fee and the debenture plan, which were proposed as economic measures to make the tariff effective for agriculture.

Mr. President, I am entirely content that the vote may be taken.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to make a very short statement before voting on this conference report.

For many years I have been earnestly and energetically fighting for some measure that would put the farm industry on the same economic basis with other industries in this country. I was an earnest advocate of the McNary-Haugen bill with the equalization fee in it. I have been an earnest advocate of the debenture plan. I believe that the McNary-Haugen bill of last year, with the equalization fee in it, would have been of the greatest benefit to the farmers and would probably have settled their difficulties. I believe that the immediate effect of the debenture plan, if it had been put into operation, would have been to increase the prices of farm products, and for that reason I labored early and late to have that plan adopted.

On yesterday the House overwhelmingly rejected the debenture plan, and, no doubt, perhaps, without regard to its merits, but solely because the President asked that it be stricken from the bill. But whatever the reason that actuated the majority in the House, they have acted and stricken the plan out, and the question now arises with me as to whether or not I should vote for the bill in its present form.

Mr. President, we have passed many bills during the last eight years providing for loans by the Government to the farmers. These were palliatives, and no real benefits have accrued to the farmers. Certainly, the greatest benefit, which we all so earnestly desire—better prices—has not come about. I very much doubt whether the bill appropriating $500,000,000 for the purpose set out in the bill will greatly benefit the farmers. I do not think it is a compliance with Republican platform pledges given the farmers. I have very serious misgivings about this bill. However, such is my desire to help the farmers, that I have made up my mind to cast my vote for this conference report. It may be worked out in some way to the benefit of this greatest and most sorely distressed industry in our Nation. If it does not work well, we may be able to amend it so as to make it work well. At all events, hoping that it may be of some benefit to the farmers, and I have not much more than a hope, I am going to cast my vote for it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, when it comes to matters of political strategy, I confess that I am an unlettered member of the craft and totally devoid of discernment; because I see no obligation upon the Senate now to vote for this conference report that did not rest upon the Senate when it voted against the conference report. But other and wiser men appear to have reached a different conclusion, and in face of the fact that the accredited outside representatives of the farmers themselves, as indicated by their proclamation read from the desk awhile ago, have absolutely capitulated, it may be that I should not set my judgment up against that of these gentlemen and my colleagues; and, perhaps, for the next half hour I shall be engaged in wrestling with my own mental processes in order to bring myself to vote for this humbug bill.

Mr. President, there are but two ways on earth to put the farmers of this country upon a plane of economic equality with the protected industries, as promised by the platforms of both political parties. One is radically to abate the excessive privileges granted to industry. The other is to accord a like special privilege to farmers in the nature of a bounty or a subsidy. If anybody else can devise any other effective method, he has totally neglected to do it or to present it to the Congress.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would say that he has imposed high protective tariffs on the exportable staple crops of the American farmer—which, in short, is to insult the intelligence of the American farmer, if not to compromise his own intellectual integrity.

Forty-two cents duty on wheat, for example, with Manitoba wheat selling for 14 cents a bushel more than that produced in the United States! What tyro in economics does not understand that every bushel of Canadian wheat excluded from this country replaces a bushel of American wheat at Liverpool, or at some other European port?

Mr. President, certainly the only enduring excuse, if not the only respectable plea, for a high protective tariff is the fact that it was instituted by Alexander Hamilton. Alexander Hamilton was a genius; yes, and a man of great variety. Alexander Hamilton, immediately after we had gained our independence from the tyranny of one king, wanted us to pick another king. He did not favor a republican form of government. He did not believe in the rule of the people or in a "government of, by, and for the people." Although born a plebeian, he came to be the greatest advocate of special privilege, and therein he and Thomas Jefferson differed, because Jefferson, born an aristocrat, spent his whole life in advocacy of the common people.

The only enduring plea, I repeat, if not the only respectable excuse, for a high protective tariff is the historical fact that the system of protection was instituted by Alexander Hamilton.

Were Alexander Hamilton alive he would repudiate this modern system of legalized pillage with which his name is profaned. Hamilton proposed simply to encourage American industry in order to make our infant nation independent of foreign nations in all things material as well as in its sovereignty. His idea was that a system of moderate protection would diversify and fortify our industrial life so as to stimulate domestic competition and thereby eventually compensate the consumer. Hamilton would be aghast at the system of greed and extortion which we are now asked to further intrench by delegating to a transient Federal official a power the tyrranical use of which caused the head of a British King to drop from the block to the basket. Under the terms of this latest tariff bill Congress is to transfer to the Executive the supreme legislative function of laying taxes on the American people, largely within the range of his whim, his prejudice, and his favor.

For a long period of time simple people were taught to believe that the "foreigner paid the tax." We were schooled for 20 years in that thought; and, when that nursery tale was, for very shame, discarded, the American people were taught that we must protect the laboring classes of this country against "the pauper labor of Europe." Then we proceeded for 25 years under a system which introduced the pauper labor of Europe to this country, brought them over here by millions to contest the wage scale with American labor. All Senators have seen them. I have seen them in Virginia, where you would have to hire an interpreter to discharge a pay roll.

With that plea worn threadbare there came talk, which persists to-day, about "the American standard of living and the wage scale." But, of course, that does not apply to the farm or to the farmer. Some people, most vehement in their advocacy of "the American standard of living and the wage scale," seem to be perfectly indifferent to the standard of living that obtains on the American farm or the wage that is paid to the peasant farmer. They do not care a continental about the American standard of living or the wage scale, when it comes to the farmer, and they would not care a tinker's dam about it as it applies to American labor but for the organized unions of the country. To those may be ascribed the adequate wage scale and the better standard of living among their classes.

I would like for some accomplished casuist here in the Senate to tell us the difference in essence between the high protective tariff and this so much-derided debenture. Nobody has ventured to do it so far. The philosophy of the two measures is absolutely akin. Their processes are not far unlike. Both are special privileges.

The argument may be made for the debenture as against the high protective duty that the debenture, at least, would be a great contribution to the volume of foreign commerce, whereas the high protective duty is a prohibition or a radical restraint of foreign trade. The further argument could be made that the debenture would execute itself and require no complicated or enormously extravagant, as well as arrogant, administrative bureau to put it into effect and keep it going.

In the last analysis, what is the difference in principle between the debenture and the bill without the debenture? The bill itself takes a half billion dollars of the taxpayers' money, collected for purposes of government, lifting it bodily out of the Federal Treasury and putting it within the jurisdiction of a farm board as a revolving fund to be repeatedly replenished, I infer, at the expense of the American taxpayer—it may be to the extent of several billions of dollars. And to do what? To make the very people whose money is thus taken pay more for their bread and meat. What else is it? If it does not do that, it is of no account to the farmer.

What does the high protective tariff do? It simply transfers the power of taxation from the Government itself and confides it to the generous unselfishness of the protected industries. The average American citizen who is not called upon to pay an income tax, who never comes in personal contact with the internal revenue collectors, poor simple soul, imagines that he contributes nothing toward the expenses of the Government; that he does not pay any tax. He does not seem to realize that every man and woman who enters a commercial establishment in the country to buy anything, from stockings on the feet to hats and bonnets on the head, has to pay tribute to the protected industries, and that the clerk behind the counter is the collector of tribute. And yet we are told the debenture is in the nature of a subsidy!

May the debenture be rationally defended as something to be economically desired? No; it may not be, but it may just as well and thoroughly be defended as the high protective tariff; and nearly every one of the 10 reasons given by the President of the United States against the debenture may be applied to a high protective tariff bill which he will not dare veto if it should go to him.

It all depends upon who is getting the advantage as to whether a thing is economically defensible or not. I hesitated a long while at the suggestion that "two wrongs never make a right." That may not be said without qualification. We were simply setting up a twin system of robbery here when we voted for the debenture; but it would enable millions of farmers and their dependents, who have been robbed for 50 years by the high protective tariff, to do a little robbing on their own account. I had understood that this extraordinary session of Congress was convened to put agriculture on an economic plane of equality with industry. The way to do it in my judgment, as indicated, is to abate the excessive burdens of a high protective tariff, but we are not going to do that.

The only other way to put agriculture on a plane of economic equality is not to go through the farce of putting a protective tariff on our exportable surplus, but to give the farmer a bounty, if one wants to call it that, or a subsidy if that term is preferred. That is what is being given the protected industries.

The debenture simply enables the American farmer, if he should be wise enough not to surrender his certificate for a song, to intercept revenue on the way to the Treasury and put it in his own pocket in order that he may, to the degree of 50 per cent, equalize the useless tariff on exportable farm products. That is all. Reluctantly I have been willing thus to enable these 30,000,000 of people in the agricultural districts to retrieve some part of the burden placed upon them by the excessive taxation of a protective tariff. With the debenture included in the bill, I hoped that the American people would readily discover that they were being robbed out of both pockets; and whereas they seem to have had no resentment because of the robbery in behalf of the protected interests, I thought maybe when it came to bread and meat they would begin to think, and conclude not to have robbery from any source, but adopt a real honest tariff covering, if you please, the difference between the wage abroad and the wage here. As far as we have been able to discover the wage abroad, it has appeared that the measure of protection afforded industry in this country amounts in the aggregate to the stupendous total of $4,000,000,000 above the difference in wages.

This, in a word, Mr. President, has been my excuse and the only explanation that I can contrive for having voted for the debenture. It is an explanation and an excuse that are vastly more consistent and rational than that given by certain Senators who have voted against the debenture and yet advocate a high protective tariff. The surprise of my life, Mr. President, has been that the protected interests of the country did not seize upon this debenture proposition greedily and cheerfully enter into copartnership with the farming interests which proposed it. Their failure to do it has but one explanation, and that is that satiated greed finally loses all sensibility and all power to think. They are not even willing to share their frightful imposition upon the American consumer with the 30,000,000 farmers and their dependents in the country. It is greed run mad. For stupidity and avarice combined the course pursued by protected industry in this case has an analogy only in ancient mythology, in that tale of the Arabian Nights which recites the unwillingness of a predatory band to share its secrets and its plunder with Ali Baba, who later destroyed the 40 thieves and put an end to their system. God grant that the American farmer may come, not only to realize his plight, but to turn upon and destroy those who are primarily responsible for it.

The bill divested of the debenture—and had I had the framing of it I would have presented the debenture divested of the bill—simply sets up here another central bureau with fat jobs for the favorites of the Government to be used, I dare say, for the same political purposes that many another bureau has been used for, and inevitably to meddle with the business of the American farmer, to harass him, to snoop around his premises, to hedge him about with regulative restrictions, to tyrannize over him—or else I am very much mistaken. It may be momentarily, as I said at the outset, good political strategy to go along and help the farmer fool himself that way; but I just can not see it. I may come to it, but with little confidence that I am certainly doing the wise thing.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have voted to enlarge the farm relief proposal by the adoption of the debenture proposal, and I regret very much that it was not adopted in the House. The long fight which the farmers have waged for relief has now dissipated into thin air. I shall vote for the proposition that is here because it is a step, and any step that tends in the slightest degree to give even hope of relief to the farmers ought in the end to be accepted by the Congress.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield, but I had not intended to take more than a moment.

Mr. NORBECK. Is the Senator thoroughly convinced that the measure will be helpful even in a small way to agriculture?

Mr. HARRISON. No; I am not convinced even of that fact. I am hopeful; that is all. I do not believe the fight has stopped. I hope not. I think the farmers in time will wake up to the fact that they have been fooled by somebody in being given this shell of legislation.

But there have been some peculiar incidents in the course of the discussion. We saw one crop up this morning when the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], with his usual alacrity, told how the farmers are taken care of in the proposed tariff legislation, and then coming to his quick relief was the prospective new ambassador to France. I dare say that it is the first time in the history of American politics that a Senator has delayed laying aside the toga to go as the high emissary representing this country to a great nation like France merely for the purpose of remaining on the Finance Committee and serving and voting with his friend, the shepherd from Utah, for higher tariff rates.

Then, too, in the course of the discussion we saw other peculiar things happen. No Senator who had been here any length of time dared to lend his voice in support of the President's appeal to defeat the debenture, but it lay in the hands of a new Senator, not selected "of the people, for the people, and by the people," but who is the one Senator in this august body who holds his commission at the hands of one man and not from the people of his State. So I may say that I have more respect for the position taken by my good friend the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. ALLEN] than I have for the attitude of the "old stagers" of the Senate, because there radiates a spark of gratitude in his action, but none in the action of the other Senators. The Senator from Kansas can not be upbraided and reprimanded save by the governor of the State who sent him here; other Senators will receive the condemnation of the farmers who elected them to come here. If rumor be correct, the action of the junior Senator from Kansas was a nice expression of gratitude to the President, because, no doubt, the President used his influence with the governor of the State to have the Senator from Kansas brought here to act as his twin spokesman upon this floor.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has stated that the farmers are being taken care of in the pending proposed tariff legislation. Let me cite the Senator to the fact—and he knows it better than does any other Senator in this body—that the farmer has not been fairly treated with reference to tariff legislation. That applies in the past and in the present bill. Is it just so that he can not be, or is that one direction in which the framers of tariff legislation have not employed their talents or extended their hand? I submit that in the last tariff bill, which was passed in 1922, the percentage of increase in the duties on manufactures of cotton was 40 per cent; the increase on earthenware and glassware was 45 per cent; the increase on metals and manufactures thereof was 39 per cent; the increase on manufactures of silk was 56 per cent; the increase on manufactures of wool—that will wake the Senator from Utah up; when I talk about wool or if I should mention sugar, that would arouse him from his sleeping sickness—the increase on manufactures of wool was 65 per cent; and on manufactures of rayon it was 54 per cent. When we come down to agricultural products, however, we find that the increase on such products was only 23 per cent. That is one of the reasons why the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has offered his resolution, and that is the reason why we are going to put Senators on the other side of the Chamber on record, to see whether they want to carry on the sham battle of lifting agriculture at least in such a way that it might approach a basis of equality with other industries of the country or whether they want to bring here a bill that will give merely a small pittance of increase upon agricultural products, but at the same time will increase far greater proportionately the duties on the products of every other industry. That is what the pending tariff bill proposes to do.

Senators have been talking about the tariff bill which is now being considered. I hope they will not forget when the duty on sugar, for instance, was debated here in 1922 how the Senator from Utah himself, through correspondence and otherwise, was forced to admit that a duty of 1.4 cents a pound on Cuban sugar would be quite sufficient under certain circumstances to protect the American sugar producer; how, in spite of that statement, even under his leadership—because the Senator from Utah was then the chairman of the subcommittee on the sugar schedule, as he is now—a rate of about 1.76 cents a pound on Cuban sugar was imposed, and now it is proposed to impose a still higher rate of duty upon the American sugar consumer. But that is not all.

The framers of the pending tariff bill have taken from the free list rakes and hoes, which the farmers use, and have placed a 30 per cent ad valorem duty on them. That is what the House bill proposes to do. It has taken shingles, it has taken bricks, it has taken cement, it has taken practically every article that goes into the building of a home for the farmer or for the little city man, and has placed a higher tariff duty on them; or, if there had not been a tariff duty on them before, they have taken them from the free list and have put a duty on them. That is the way the bill is framed. That is why on yesterday we made a fight in the Finance Committee to restrict the proposed tariff legislation to agricultural and related products; that is why we expect to put Senators on the other side of the Chamber here on record as to whether or not they want to live up to their campaign pledges.

Mr. President, of course, nothing else could have been expected than that we should have this conference report denuded of the debenture plan. Immediately after the Senate voted the other day on the farm relief conference report the President called to the White House a distinguished array of friends of agriculture. He said, "Come over, let us closet ourselves together; let us talk over procedure, so that we may defeat the debenture plan." Yet practically every friend of agriculture in this body said that plan ought to be adopted and made a part of the bill in order to provide help for agriculture. The Senators in this body who have stood by agriculture, in the main, have voted for the debenture plan; the Senators who have fought against giving to agriculture the relief it desired, in the main, have been the ones who have grouped against the debenture plan. But this splendid array of friends of the farmer was called to the White House. I look into the benign countenance of one now, the Presiding Officer, and reflect that when the emergency tariff bill was before the Senate some years ago, in his eloquent and inimitable way he said it was "bow-legged and knock-kneed and pigeon-toed." He was one of the men—I refer to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]—who was called to the White House to confer touching agricultural relief.

Then the President looked over the great agricultural State of New Jersey and called in my friend the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], who has always been the friend of agriculture in this body. Then he went over into the great agricultural State of Pennsylvania, aye, to the agricultural city of Pittsburgh——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator know that the agricultural output of Pennsylvania is many times that of his own State?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Pennsylvania did not know it because of the smoke that rises from the chimneys of the industrial plants of Pittsburgh; that blinded his eyes, and he never knew the fact probably until he participated in this conference the other day. Then the President sent to the House and called the Speaker, and Mr. TILSON from the great agricultural State of Connecticut. Aye, Mr. President, 90 per cent of the men whom he called to advise him touching agricultural relief voted against the agricultural bill here upon its final passage.

But when I scanned the list of those who were called to the White House for a conference I did not see the name of my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the other twin spokesman who has so often talked in behalf of the policies of the administration, and who has been its defender under all circumstances. And when I looked further over the list, to my amazement and astonishment I did not see the name of the new spokesman of the administration, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. ALLEN]. Their names were conspicuously absent from that great personnel.

So, Mr. President, in closing I merely want to have read to the Senate, so that it may be preserved in the archives of this body, a very splendid article written by an administration spokesman and carried in the Washington Post, a mouthpiece of the present administration. The article is by one of its most brilliant correspondents, Mr. Bargeron. I ask that it be read to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Post of June 13, 1929]

THE LISTENING POST

By Carlisle Bargeron

The real reason for the presence in the Senate of HENRY J. ALLEN is now quite apparent. Known the country over as the more discreet member of that celebrated firm composed of himself and William Allen White—"Me and Bill," it is called—his appointment some time ago caused more than ordinary interest.

It was generally explained at the time that he was being appointed by a friendly governor to support the President, but that did not completely explain his presence because Senators are frequently being appointed and being elected to "support the President." That may mean something, and it may mean nothing at all.

It is very plain now, however, after his first two Senate performances, that he is the answer to the prayer of Senator FESS for a baby brother. That is the real significance of the most recent evolution of him.

For years the Ohio Senator has been alone in the Senate. He has been in the august membership but not of it, so to speak. He has had nobody to play with at all.

This is not because the other boys will not play with him. He is not disliked. There is no reason, so far as they are concerned, why he should not rip and romp with them any time he should see fit.

But the Senator was not brought up that way. Before he moved to Washington there is the suggestion that his was a too-cloistered existence. Maybe he played too much with girls.

Whatever the reason, it is not within his mental make-up to understand those he is now among. For the life of him, he can not appreciate the bit of deviltry that is in all of them.

Frequently he has wandered shyly out to join them, and the indications are that he has had many a delightful time for a while. But no sooner would he warm up and let himself loose than that diabolical streak in some Senator would manifest itself in such form as a disagreement with the President or, perhaps, it is horrifying to suggest, an open break with him.

Involuntarily the Senator would draw back into his inner shell. He could not, simply could not, bring himself to the point of countenancing such sacrilege. It is against his every teaching, every political thought that he has.

And so many mischievous fellows have come to the Senate of late that the Senator gradually came to find himself alone, with not a soul to play with in the world.

Is it any wonder, then, that he prayed fervently day after day that the political gods send him a companion, some one with whom he, too, could romp and frolic, and have mutual understanding? Senator ALLEN is it. There is no question of that.

And no one could have looked upon the tender eyes that FESS fastened upon the Kansan as he performed the other day without a touch of genuine sentiment.

Yes; there is a Santa Claus.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am greatly disappointed that the House has stricken from the farm relief bill the debenture plan. I predict that the roll call which was obtained in the House on yesterday will be a memorable document to the Representatives from the West who cast their votes to strike out the debenture provision.

All of us know—and nobody denies—that the 21 cents a bushel provided by the debenture plan for wheat exported would have been of great benefit to the wheat growers of this country. With the debenture operating on the border line where wheat is going out and the $500,000,000 revolving fund operating in the interior, together they would have lifted the price of wheat until the farmer would have obtained a profit for the wheat produced by him in the United States. I think that is sound. I believe most people will agree that it is.

You permit the importation of about four or five hundred thousand bales of cotton. There is no tariff against that. Of course, we export half of our cotton crop; but in order to make this protective principle, which you say is so beneficial, apply not only to American industry but to agriculture we provided that the farmers of the United States should have 2 cents a pound on the cotton exported. That would mean $10 a bale; and, Senators, how much that would help now, when our farmers are selling cotton below the cost of production! There is not a large crop; there is not a large supply of old cotton—the smallest supply, in fact, that we have had at this time of the year for a number of years—and the consumptive demand for cotton is greater than it has been for years.

This would be a vast benefit to the farmers of the cotton-growing States. I believe that every Senator here knows that, and I believe that every Member of the House knows that. Western Congressmen and southern Congressmen, who have lent their influence to strike this provision out of the farm relief bill, have voted directly against the interests of the wheat growers and cotton producers of the United States.

When these gentlemen go back to give an account of their stewardship to the farmers and the people who sent them here, I wonder what they are going to tell them when they ask them why they did not vote to retain the debenture plan in the bill, when it will be patent to all the farmers that by that vote they struck 21 cents off of every bushel of wheat exported. And what will the southern Congressman say to his constituents when they ask him, "Why did you vote to deprive us of that $10 a bale, which would help to bring the price of cotton up to at least the cost of production?" What answer will they make?

Mr. President, I have done all that I could to keep the debenture provision in this bill. I was in the battle in the Senate to put it in the bill in the outset. When it came back from the House without giving the Members there an opportunity to vote on it, I helped to hold it in the bill and to send it back and to force a vote upon it at the other end of the Capitol. Now, the House has voted. It had a right to strike it out if it wanted to. It is an independent body, as ours is. It takes the responsibility. I have done all that I could, and I am now going to vote for the conference report.

I do not agree with some of my colleagues that the bill is worthless. I think vast good will be done by the bill with this $500,000,000 revolving fund that is provided for.

For the reasons that I gave in the outset, when the bill passed the Senate, I am going to vote for the conference report. I say again that I greatly regret the action of the Republican House in striking out the debenture plan.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill is called a farm relief bill. As it comes back to us it should be called a city destruction bill. In its operation it will mean that through the efforts of the farm board the price of wheat for domestic use is sure to be increased as much as possible. Every effort will be made to corral the crop and to sell to the domestic consumers as much as possible at the highest possible price.

This will be necessary because in the very nature of things all the export wheat will be sold at a tremendous loss; and the effort will be to make up for it by the increase in the domestic price. Consequently, in the great cities of America, in my city and in every other city, the price of bread will be materially increased. This will be done without anything in the way of compensation which might be had if the farmers were really placed upon a basis of economic equality, given the aid which the original bill anticipated, and by their increased prosperity made larger purchasers of city-made products.

It has been recognized always by those of us who live in the cities that the effect of the legislation—the old McNary-Haugen bill, the one which included the debenture, or any other similar bill—would be to increase the cost of bread. At the same time, it is recognized by every student of the question that there can be no prosperity in the cities unless there is prosperity on the farm. So we have been willing to make the sacrifice in the way of increased cost in order that the farmer might be benefited. That has been the attitude of the American Federation of Labor. It has been the attitude of every city student of the problem.

Here, however, is a measure which will not justify such sacrifice on the part of the city dweller. Also, it must bring further disaster to the city. A few of us made every effort to wipe out of the bill the provision for the clearing-house associations. The bill as it passed the Senate provided for the appropriation of a limited amount of money for this particular project.

As it comes back to us from the House, all the resources of the fund might be used, if necessary, for the support of the clearing-house associations. Every apple grower and every pear grower and those engaged in the production of other perishables in my State who are informed on the subject have been in bitter opposition to this provision of the bill. It comes back to us now in worse form than it left the Senate.

It means this, and I am perfectly clear about it: The great commission houses and produce houses of the cities will be put out of business because of the limitation of their credit. You know how sensitive bankers are. If any banking concern in any city of America believes there is a possibility that Government funds may be used for the establishment of clearing-house associations having the same functions that the produce and commission houses of our cities now possess, the bankers will refuse to lend the necessary credit. In my opinion, this situation will result in the unemployment of thousands of persons now employed by the produce and commission houses of the great cities. They will be thrown out of employment.

If this bill could have passed including the debenture provision, or if the administration had been satisfied to permit a measure to be passed including the equalization fee, there could have been every hope of prosperity for the American farmer. There is no such hope in the pending measure.

I have no disposition to enlarge upon what I have said in the past few weeks about the importance of agricultural prosperity to the dwellers in the city. In a great city like New York, with production equal to seven or eight of its neighbor cities next in population, there can not be prosperity, nor in any city, unless there can be sale for these manufactured products. To have such sales there must be prosperity upon the farm. Now there is proposed a bill which, as I see it, has in it no hope of successful operation.

I am just as clear in my mind about this as I could be about anything—that disaster faces the operation of the farm board. With no means of replenishment of the fund for the stabilization corporation, there must come insolvency. With insolvency of that corporation, with the failure of the plan to operate, the whole project of farm relief will be ridiculed in the future, and the farmers will apply in vain for any further assistance.

In my judgment the farmers of America will be seriously damaged by the operation of this law. The waste and dissipation of the fund will defeat all future attempts at really helpful legislation; and I can not be a party to any camouflaged and hopeless scheme such as this is. Neither can I be one to vote away a half billion dollars of the public funds in an expensive and hopeless effort to accomplish the impossible.

I feel that this measure, if adopted, gives the farmer another blow. He will be more than ever before the victim of the failure of the Republican Party to assist him. I am sorry, Mr. President, extremely so for myself—although this is a matter of little concern to others—that I can not vote for a measure alleged by some to be helpful. I voted twice for the McNary-Haugen bill. I voted to pass it over the President's veto. I have faced more opposition and ridicule from the newspapers of my State than any other Senator, except perhaps the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I have tried on every occasion, in season and out of season, to cast my vote so that the farmer might be benefited. I can not now give the lie to my honest desire to help the farmer by voting for a measure which I truly and conscientiously believe will bring disaster rather than benefit.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I shall vote against the conference report.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, the representatives of the Northwest have put up as good a fight as they could for the only provision in the bill that they believe to be effective in bettering the prices of the farmer's commodities; but we have come to the end of the road. The House has taken its vote and has positively refused to permit this provision to become part of the bill. Our conferees have done the best they could under the circumstances. They have accepted the inevitable. The administration wins. I want to take this occasion to commend the chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. He does not come from an agricultural State; he represents a State whose chief industry is lumbering; but he has been more than fair. He has been helpful. His understanding, his courtesy, and his patience have been appreciated by all members of the committee, regardless of party affiliations or personal viewpoint.

I do not desire to obstruct a vote on this bill, neither do I intend to give it my approval. I am afraid of what may follow. We are legislating not for this administration. The laws put upon the statute books are permanent, especially so if they should turn out to be to the disadvantage of the minority and to the advantage of the majority. It is easier for agriculture to partake in making bad legislation than to get it repealed later.

Mr. President, two years ago a similar bill was before this body and it was repudiated by the Senators from the agricultural States—by the same Senators who have been contending that this bill is no good without the debenture plan, which has now been omitted on account of the action of the House. It is a bill to lend Government money to farmers or farm representatives. The farmers of my State want to pay their debts; they do not want to borrow. A great majority of the farmers of my State are against this bill.

It is true that there are some farm organizations contending for it; for instance, the wheat pool of North Dakota, which markets one-twentieth part of the wheat in that State. We should not forget the other 19 farmers, even in North Dakota. A similar situation exists in some other States.

There are a few officials of cooperative associations who believe this bill will be helpful either to the farmer or themselves, or to both. They feel that at least they will be recognized, and that is the greatest aspiration of any human being. This bill may prove to be helpful to the wheat pool and the raspberry cooperatives. It might prove to be destructive to them. Time alone will tell. The farmers of at least four of the largest States in the East sent representatives here to protest against the bill. They said they could not afford this kind of farm relief. A complaint was lodged from the great State of Washington; their apple growers tried to be exempted from the aid proposed in this bill.

One would believe that this is a bill to promote cooperative selling among farmers. Thirty years ago the farmers of South Dakota took this question up seriously and they had solved it to their satisfaction. Their grain is marketed through their own cooperative grain elevators. Their livestock is shipped to market through cooperative shipping associations. Certain economies have been effected—this without Government aid or Government encouragement. Thank goodness, it has also been without Government interference! Do not tell us about the value of cooperative marketing—we know from experience. It is an old story with us.

This bill did not originate with the friends of the farmer. This bill is being forced upon us by those who expect to buy our products. It is being forced upon us by the manufacturing States over the protest of the farmers who are to be "benefited." This is the medicine that has been prescribed for us by those whom we thought were our friends. For 40 years we have been voting a bonus for "infant industries," to give American labor employment and to give dividends to the stockholders, in the belief that indirectly it would help the farmers. When the day of the farmer's trouble came, we naturally turned to those whom we believed to be our friends. We are receiving neither aid nor sympathy. We are told to "go way back and sit down." We are told that we are pseudo-Republicans. We are classed as being too radical for the eastern section of the country. Mr. President, they have needed us before and they will need us again.

When I became of age, I was a Republican. In 1896, when the Bryan fallacy of free silver swept over the West, I was a supporter of the gold standard.

When the Populist movement ran away with Kansas, I was a conservative. When the Non-Partisan League, a radical farm organization, swept several Northwestern States, we held our own against it in South Dakota.

I was a Republican in 1916 and South Dakota cast its electoral vote for the Republican candidate. This was when Nebraska, Kansas, Wyoming, Colorado, and even Ohio went Democratic. Among the Western States only Oregon joined South Dakota.

I was a Republican in 1918 when Herbert Hoover issued a statement indorsing the election of a Democratic Congress. I was not called a "pseudo-Republican" in those days, but times change.

I voted for the last tariff bill. I was one of the very few from the Northwest who did. I even voted for Senator SMOOT's sugar schedule, and it carried by a small margin.

When President Coolidge vetoed a certain popular bill, the question of sustaining his veto was a great embarrassment to the Republican Senators. Without my vote he would not have had the necessary one-third to support him. Those who are now questioning our Republicanism were at that time voting against the President, or hiding in the cloakroom when the vote was taken.

I will admit that while I have been a Republican on major issues I have not supported every move of the Republican leaders in this Senate. I voted against the party leaders on many questions relating to the Teapot oil scandal. I was read out of the party by the party organ, then published in Washington. I also voted against the seating of Senators Newberry, Smith, and VARE. "If this be treason, make the most of it."

It is remarkable that the eastern Senators can not realize that the Republican voters of the agricultural section insist on being represented in the National Congress. They are slowly but surely making their influence felt. When I came to the Senate eight years ago, the chairman of the Finance Committee was Senator McCumber, of North Dakota. Senator FRAZIER is here in his place, because he better represents the views of that State.

The State of Minnesota was represented by the two distinguished Senators—Knute Nelson and Frank B. Kellogg. Senator Magnus Johnson succeeded Knute Nelson. The voters of Minnesota decided by popular vote that they would rather have Mr. SHIPSTEAD than Mr. Kellogg.

Lenroot represented Wisconsin. He failed of reelection, but has his reward. The remarkably able Senator from Iowa, Mr. Cummings, who got out of touch with his people, suffered defeat at the hands of Senator BROOKHART. I want to ask you Republican leaders: Do you see any warning in this or do you come in the class of those who have eyes and can not see?

Mr. President, the Republicans on the western prairies are just like people you find elsewhere. They are not a special brand. It is wrong to call them radicals. They are simply contending for a square deal. Radicalism never started with home owners. All history tells us that the stability of the agricultural class is much greater than that of miners or factory workers living in boarding houses. When the Republic is threatened, its safety lies in home owners rather than jitney owners.

We plead for fair treatment. The Democratic program has been so vacillating it has not appealed to us. We have for a lifetime been supporters of a Republican Party. Now, the question of equality is before us, and your answer to that question will be historic.

The distinguished and scholarly Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] spoke on this question, and he talks fairly and he talks frankly. I think he left a message with us. He did not claim a great deal for this measure. Has there been a single Senator in this Chamber from any State who has claimed for this bill that it would establish equality for agriculture, according to the Republican platform? I have not heard a voice to make a claim of that kind in this long debate. Certainly the Senator from Ohio did not. But he talks fairly about the bill.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. FESS. In reference to equality of agriculture with other industries, there may be a question of dispute as to just what that means. I could see that we might pay out of the Treasury the transportation costs of a competing article that was exported, but I doubt the wisdom of it. I could see also an obligation to pay a certain amount per bushel for every bushel of anything raised that we would export, but I doubt the wisdom of that. That would, it is true, enhance the value of the agricultural article, and it might, in that degree at least, bring it up to an equality with industry. But I have doubted the wisdom of that.

If we enter upon that policy, then I feel certain that when there is distress in the coal industry, with 200,000 men out of employment, that industry will ask us also for the same assistance. I have felt all the time, and I think the Senator from South Dakota feels, that in cases of great distress, where labor is generally out of employment, there might be a demand that distress should be relieved by the Government in the form of doles, and I do not see how we can avoid it if we enter upon this method. I thank the Senator for admitting that I am honest in my views. I just wondered why the Senator a moment ago was making the statement that certain Senators have been defeated for reelection because of certain votes. I know the Senator would not vote against his own view even if he thought it would embarrass him back home. He will vote according to his own judgment, whether he is embarrassed or not, and the Senator knows that I would do the same. Our obligation here to-day is to do what we think is the right thing in the circumstances.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his statement. I admit there is a difference of opinion. The farmers of the Northwest have often been appealed to to support a tariff policy on manufactured articles, coupled with a frank statement that it would increase the price of such articles. We consider that a bounty. I think the effect of the tariff is often a bonus, or a bounty to certain classes. I know the Senator does not share my view. There is a difference of opinion in the matter. But the high cost of the products that the farmer has to buy has reduced the purchasing power of his dollar. He has been told that he also could come in the tariff class, and when the Tariff Commission found that the difference in the cost of production here and abroad was 40 cents a bushel, we got the 42-cent tariff; that is all we got. It is nonoperative. Our request to make the tariff effective has met with a deaf ear.

What I was going to say is, the significant thing in the statement of the Senator from Ohio is this: That he did not claim much for this bill, but he did say that it will do the business or nothing will.

Mr. FESS. Nothing outside of a subsidy.

Mr. NORBECK. That is a little different statement from the one made before, and I am very glad to have it.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. BROOKHART. Let me ask the Senator from Ohio if he concedes, then, that a subsidy might give the farmers equality?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. NORBECK. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I have no doubt that where you can establish the difference in cost you can take care of that by direct payment out of the Treasury, but I do not think we want to go to that extent.

Mr. BROOKHART. The Senator recalls that the Democratic platform declared against subsidies, and the Democratic platform was the one that was repudiated by the people in the election. The Democrats have generously recognized that, and have generously accepted the verdict of the people. But the Republicans, after winning the victory on that issue, refused to do anything for the farmers on that line.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NORBECK. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. May I ask the Senator from Ohio if he believes that the bill that is now reported by the conference committee will make the tariff effective to the farmer?

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield, I have never shared the fear which many persons have announced, that the protective tariff is not effective to the farmer. If I felt that, I would vote against a protective tariff on any article on which I thought it would not be effective. On the other hand, it is quite apparent that, in the years from 1922 on, the tariff on wheat, in protecting us from the importation of wheat raised in Canada, did in a very substantial way become effective on American wheat.

Mr. HOWELL. The Senator does not hold that the tariff is fully effective, does he?

Mr. FESS. No.

Mr. HOWELL. And that this bill will make the tariff fully effective for the farmer?

Mr. FESS. It is a question whether, where we are exporting more of an article than we are importing, a tariff would be effective; it is a question whether we ought to have it or not.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, it has occurred to me that this act should be better labeled than it is, not called the "marketing act of 1929." I want to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether it would be in order to offer an amendment to call it the "Republican farm relief measure of 1929"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No amendments are in order to the conference report.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, we have been striving for a great many years for farm equality. We have aroused the Nation to a sense of the necessity of the American farmer. That was crystallized by the two national conventions. Both great parties pledged themselves to enact legislation that would afford equality for the farmer.

The result of our efforts is this special session of Congress. The curtain is up, the country is waiting, and now it appears that the curtain is about to fall, the result merely a plan which many of us believe will not be effective, a plan we could have had any time during the last two or three years, but which we refused because it was our conviction that it would not aid the farmer materially and permanently.

I do not mean to say that the loaning of $500,000,000, to be used in the market for the purchase and holding of agricultural commodities, will not have an effect upon prices. It will necessarily, but the treatment is only symptomic. We are treating symptoms and that is all. We are not reaching down to the root of the trouble that has caused the farmer's present condition, and the pathetic possibility of the situation is that with the ringing down of the curtain the Nation will say farm relief is now accomplished, and for a time the farmer will be quieted by small advances in the prices of certain agricultural commodities. Then he will awaken and possibly find that all his work has been in vain, that he has not what he had a right to expect from the pledges of the two great political parties and from this special session—that is, economic equality in comparison with other industries.

What does farm equality mean? It means just one thing. It means an increase in the compensation to farm capital and farm labor for service performed. That is all it means. We must raise the price of the farmer's product or there will be no farm equality. That is the whole purpose which has been at the bottom of the efforts of those of us from the Middle West and from the South, a purpose to increase the compensation which this Nation accords to capital invested in farming and to labor engaged in farming.

We have in the past proposed a method, the equalization-fee method, similar to that of the tariff—and here I might add that the tariff results in merely a limited sales tax collected from the consumer by the producer. The purpose of the McNary-Haugen bill was to do the same thing for the farmer, to enable the farmer, or producer, to collect directly and automatically a sales tax levied upon the consumer.

When we came here and listened to the President's message respecting his proposal for farm equality, we realized that the equalization fee had no possibility, so far as the present situation is concerned, of being enacted into law. Therefore we felt the necessity of devising another means of providing what was equivalent to a sales tax which the farmer might collect. The debenture plan was proposed, the plan which has been in effect in Germany since 1894, or was in effect up to the time of the war, and was applied to all cereals for the benefit of German agrarians. The debenture plan as there in effect was reenacted after the war and is in effect to-day. It is in effect in Sweden at this time and its application has been extended to 1931.

The agricultural experts who came before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry testified that there was no question but that the application of the debenture idea would increase the price of wheat and any other agricultural product to which it might be applied. They testified to this. They made it plain. It was not biased testimony. It had been suggested that the committee call on experts from the Department of Agriculture, and those experts were immediately called and such is some of the testimony afforded.

And now we come to a realization, after the action of the House yesterday, that the debenture plan is impossible of enactment into law. What have we left? What remains to afford economic equality to the American farmer? We have left a plan providing for the appointment of a Federal farm board. What power is the Federal farm board to have? Has it any such powers as we have granted the Interstate Commerce Commission? Not at all. The Federal farm board has not a power that a private corporation can not exercise to-day. However, $500,000,000 is authorized as a revolving fund that shall be placed in the hands of the board, and the board is permitted to loan it to cooperative-marketing associations and such other associations qualifying as stabilization corporations. In other words, the money is to be loaned to agriculture as an industry. Agriculture is expected to do everything for itself. The board is not to do it. The Government has no part in it except the furnishing of the money.

It is stipulated that the farmer must do all for himself, that he must develop farm equality if farm equality is possible. He must accomplish the result by virtue of the privilege of borrowing $500,000,000. If farm equality means merely an increase in the farmer's income—and that is what it means and that alone, without it there would be no farm equality—how much ought we in the present emergency to increase the farmers' income? How much more besides what he is receiving out of the national income at the present time should be placed to his credit to afford him farm equality? In determining the upper limit of this increase, of course, there would be undoubtedly a sharp difference of opinion, but I think we can place the lower limit of the increase so low that the most conservative will not find fault.

As you are aware, the unit of labor on the farm is not the head of the family. The unit of labor on the farm is the entire family, the father, the mother, and the children. Now, suppose that we should increase agriculture's income equivalent to adding 10 cents an hour for 10 hours a day to the compensation enjoyed by the average farm family throughout the Nation—not 10 cents an hour additional for the farm operator, not 10 cents an hour additional for the wife, not 10 cents an hour for the children, but 10 cents an hour additional for the whole family. There are something more than 6,300,000 farm operators in the country, and I think we may properly assume that each farm operator is the head of a family. On that basis, and on the basis of 10 hours a day—and I think everyone will agree with me that the farm day is at least 10 hours—and allowing the 10 cents per hour for every day except Sundays, the increased income resulting to the agricultural industry would be about $2,000,000,000 annually. Last year the gross income of the industry was $12,250,000,000. Therefore such an increase would have made it $14,250,000,000. It has been in the past as high as $15,700,000,000. So I think it will be agreed that to accomplish anything like farm equality we must necessarily provide a method whereby the farmer can be assured of at least $14,250,000,000 or $2,000,000,000 more per year than he is now receiving.

Mr. President, as I have stated, the farmer, under the measure which is now pending, is to do this for himself—how? By borrowing through his cooperative associations $500,000,000 if necessary, and so utilize this borrowed capital as to earn as a minimum 400 per cent thereon, or $2,000,000,000 annually. Does anyone think he can do it? Does anyone think the agricultural industry as an entity can do it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator's proposition is that the effort is to increase the earnings of the farmer. That can be done in two ways as I take it. One is to raise the price of all farm products. The other might be to lower in some way the deductions made when the farm products go to market. For instance, the farmer produces the crop. The picker, the packer, the harvester, the warehouse keeper, the packing-house keeper, the carrier, the wholesaler, the retailer, the selling agencies, all take out of the gross proceeds their share, leaving the remainder to go to the man who produces the product, and that is generally a return in the red. If we can in some way eliminate some of the charges and some of the deductions that are made from the proceeds of the farm products, that would increase the earnings of the farmer That would be one way of doing it, I take it. We must either raise the price of what the farmer produces or we must eliminate some of the deductions that are made in the process of distribution.

The marketing problem is the big problem to solve. I think the Senator will agree with me about that. If we raise the price of the farm products so high that the consumer can not pay, then we limit the market and reduce the demand and the farmer does not find a market for his products. So we have to keep that in mind. To meet that situation, we should have to devise some plan of increasing the income of the consumers, in order that they could buy the farm products; and there we run into another problem.

With reference to loans that would be provided under the bill, I see no reason why the farm loan act, if properly administered, should not afford the financial accommodations needed by the farmers of the country. Is there really any need of a new system of loans, rather than a proper administration of the law that we have now under the farm loan act?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask a question of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]?

Mr. HOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask the Senator this question: When he said "more to be sold to the consumer," did he mean more farm commodities in quantity or that a larger price would have to be obtained for them?

Mr. FLETCHER. What I meant was that it might be possible to raise the price of farm products to a point where the consumer could not buy, where his inability to buy would lessen the demand. Therefore the farmer would lose a part of his market, and, to meet that situation, we should have to devise a plan for increasing the income of the consumers.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad the Senator from Florida did not mean that the consumer should eat more, because I have never been impressed by the argument that the general prosperity of the country will increase the sale of wheat. It does not make any difference whether the country is prosperous or not prosperous, in general terms, the people eat just as much bread. So I do not think the general prosperity of the country has any relationship whatever to the prosperity of the farmer; while, on the other hand, the prosperity of the farmer has everything to do with general prosperity, for if the farmer, who is the chief buyer, can not buy, the manufacturers have no demand for their products; and so we have bread lines in the cities.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with that, but the point is, as the Senator from New York I think will agree, that there may be a stage reached in the price of farm products where the consumer will be unable to pay the price, and there will be a falling off of demand. He is not obliged to have all manner of farm products; some of them he can do without. That is the point I was making with reference to that matter. We might help the farmer not only by providing facilities for marketing and distributing his crop, but by reducing some of the deductions and charges that are made between the farmer and the breakfast table.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, what the able Senator from Florida suggests is that it is not merely a matter of increasing the income of the farmer, but a matter of increasing the profit of the farmer. I agree to that. The Senator from Florida suggests that this may be accomplished in two ways: One, by increasing the price of farm products; the second, by the elimination of the middleman; in other words——

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is one feature of the situation; to eliminate some of the charges of the carriers and of other agencies which intervened between the farmer and the purchaser or consumer.

Mr. HOWELL. I have covered that by the expression I have used—"eliminating the middleman and his charges."

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HOWELL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Has the Senator from Nebraska made any very close study as to the number of the so-called middlemen?

Mr. HOWELL. I understand that there are about 19,000,000 middlemen in this country, together with their dependents.

Mr. SMITH. Are there so many so-called middlemen between any one given agricultural product as it leaves the farm and the form in which it goes to the consumer? As to the 19,000,000 of whom the Senator from Nebraska speaks, that may be the number engaged in the merchandising of agricultural products, and there may be a great number of them performing the same service for the same commodity; but I have not found that there is such an excessive number employed in the merchandising or marketing of individual farm products. I want to get at what becomes of the spread between the raw agricultural product and the finished article, and I have been unable specifically and definitely to locate it.

I will use as an illustration an agricultural product with which I am familiar, and that is cotton. The prices of cotton current in the Old World and in the New World are definitely fixed every morning both by cablegram and telegram. The cotton goes direct from the purchaser on the local platform to the mill. When converted into the form of goods produced by the mill it goes immediately to the wholesaler, and, under the modern method of distribution and placing orders, that is done by one other co-op. That seems to be necessary; and yet, strange enough, the prices to which cotton goods rose when cotton was 40 cents a pound have practically obtained since then, despite a subsequent drop in the price of cotton to about 9 cents a pound. Yet the number of those engaged in the distribution of the cotton from the farmer through to the consumer have not increased and the agencies do not seem to be unnecessarily duplicated or numerous. Where does that spread of difference go? Who gets it? Cotton goods may be manufactured at a profit when the price of cotton is 40 cents a pound, and the manufacturers can maintain the same price for their goods which obtained when the cotton farmers were getting 40 cents a pound when the price of cotton drops to 9 cents, as it did in 1920. The manufacturers can still maintain the same level of prices for the manufactured goods without any additional expense or increase. I was hoping that the Senator might have made a study of the question and could tell us how many unnecessary hands agricultural commodities go through between the producer of the raw material and the fabricator of the finished article and then back to the consumer, and might be able to inform us what part of that machinery could be eliminated, even if the farmer were to do the delivering himself. The Senator knows, and I know, that so far as the ordinary purchaser of the raw material on the railroad platform at the local station is concerned, he gets no fabulous amount.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, the suggestions made by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from South Carolina emphasize the point I was implying, that the increase in the farmer's income is a business matter when based upon the borrowing of capital to produce the result. It will be remembered that it has been distinctly urged that the farmer himself, and not the Federal farm board, is to achieve economic equality, if possible; and, as suggested by the able Senator from Florida, he is to do it in two ways, by increasing his prices or reducing the amount that goes to the middlemen. I insist that the Senator's suggestion makes it very clear that the problem we are putting up to the farmer is a purely business problem. We are saying to him, "We can grant you no governmental powers"—none are granted the Federal farm board—"all we can do is to supply you with a credit of $500,000,000, or, rather, supply that amount of credit to the board, and the board is to loan it to your farm cooperative associations."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. With how much prospect of collecting the losses?

Mr. HOWELL. I have not begun to talk about that. I have pointed out that the least possible advantage to the farmer that could be claimed as approximating farm relief would be an increase of $2,000,000,000 a year in the income of agriculture; in other words, increasing it from $12,250,000,000, as at present, to $14,250,000,000, although in the past it has been almost $16,000,000,000. The plan to accomplish this result which we are offering the farmer in the pending bill is to loan him $500,000,000, leaving to him the job of making 400 per cent per annum on that borrowed money.

Mr. CARAWAY. If he could do that well, he could go to Wall Street, could he not?

Mr. SMITH. He would not need to go to Wall Street.

Mr. HOWELL. Senators can imagine if this sort of thing was occurring in Wall Street what would take place. I am frank to say that, looking at it as a purely business proposition, I do not see how it is possible. I realize that my experience is limited, but I do know that to make money is difficult, and it is more difficult to maintain high rates of profit upon such huge sums as $500,000,000. The chances of making 10 or 15 per cent on money are a good deal better when the capital is $20,000 than when it is $1,000,000, to say nothing of $500,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. I have great confidence in the wisdom of the Senator from Nebraska, and he is discussing what to me is a very interesting question. I want to inquire from him what hope is there as to the exportable wheat, which must be acquired by somebody and sold abroad or must be sold abroad by the farmer himself, that the farmer individually or through an organization can sell that wheat to any better advantage than he is able to sell it under the present machinery?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, there is only one way in which it has appeared to me possible to afford economic equality to agriculture in this country, and that is by affording the farmer a United States price for what he sells, inasmuch as he must pay a United States price for what he buys; but so far as his surplus is concerned, he must take what he can get therefor.

Mr. COPELAND. Then is not this what will happen: Let us assume that the stabilization corporation, through its various agencies, will go into the market and bid for wheat in order to keep up the price, because of course if the price can not be kept up there is no hope of help for the farmer. Suppose the corporation does that, and acquires the wheat: Then, of course, it will be stored away somewhere in elevators until it can be fed out to the domestic consuming public as it needs it. I can quite see how, by orderly marketing, the domestic price might be maintained. There will come a time, however, when the domestic market is saturated, when it is not possible to sell any more for our people, and there must be an exportable surplus of two or three hundred million bushels on an average.

The wheat which is to be used for exportation has been purchased at a very high price. Otherwise, the farmer has not benefited. When that exportable surplus is sold, it must be sold at a tremendous loss. Is not that so?

Mr. HOWELL. True.

Mr. COPELAND. That means, then, that every year there will be taken out of this fund millions of dollars to make up for that loss; and of necessity, as I see it, there must come a time when that fund is exhausted, and when the stabilization corporation will become insolvent. Is there any escape from that?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, evidently it was in the minds of those who drew this bill that there would be profits of these stabilization corporations. There might be losses, but also profits.

Mr. COPELAND. They would be on the domestic sales?

Mr. HOWELL. I will not go into details or surmise as to where the profits will come from, but evidently it is contemplated there will be profits as well as losses; so it is provided that 75 per cent of the profits shall be covered into a reserve fund, and that in case of losses, sustained by the stabilization corporation, the Federal farm board shall make good such losses, and be recouped out of the reserve fund. Of course, if there are no profits, necessarily the rotating fund will persistently be depleted.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator if it is not also true that if there are profits it is because the farmer has not been given the benefit of the high price which he might have been given; the profit is made at the expense of the farmer or the producer?

Mr. HOWELL. Of course, that is true. The idea, I presume, is that the stabilization corporation would start in to buy wheat now, say, and eventually put the price of wheat up to $1.30 a bushel. Of course, those who sold at the present time or during the coming harvest would get a low price, so they might not benefit from stabilization. It is a complicated matter. It is a business matter; and I think that in order to determine the probable results we should view it and test it in accord with business methods.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HOWELL. Just a moment, Mr. President. Therefore, having done so, I question the possibility of the farm associations being able to make for their members and for other farmers who are not members—yes; for the whole agricultural industry—400 per cent per annum on this borrowed capital.

It has been suggested, as you will recall, by the able Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] that there were two methods the farmer can utilize—increase his prices or eliminate the middleman, or both. If he undertakes to utilize this $500,000,000 to increase his prices, of course his attitude in the market will be that of a bull. He will be consistently bulling the market; and if he puts the price of wheat up above the world price and is compelled to sell his surplus at the world price, necessarily there will be losses. It can not be avoided. In fact, I never knew anyone, even most eminent financiers, who persistently bulled the market without suffering losses.

The other method suggested by the able Senator from Florida was eliminating the middleman. What are you going to do with the middleman? The middleman is the cleverest of our business men, and he is there because there is a demand for his services. The only way in which you can eliminate the middleman is for the farmer to take his place; and when the farmer takes his place he ceases to be a farmer. In my experience in business I have found, after reviewing the business methods in a particular concern with great care, that the opportunities for economies were usually apparent rather than real. True, you will find spots where you think you can save money, but the first thing you know your saving there will cause a bulge here.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. HOWELL. I do.

Mr. SMITH. Does not the Senator know, in his business experience, that the so-called middleman would have been eliminated long ago if he were not a necessary part of the marketing machinery?

The man who owns the plant to convert the goods and the man who produces the raw material, both of them struggling to get what they can out of it, have through a long process of experience in commercial life eliminated practically everyone who is not profitable to the one who controls the business. It is unthinkable that the manufacturers of steel or the producers of oil or the manufacturers of cotton would have a horde of others between them and their supply of raw material unless they were necessary; and when we set up this proposed board, if they are going to substitute their men for the middleman who is now employed by those who commercialize this stuff, they will find that it involves the same expense.

The only method provided in this bill to make profits is, when the price gets low, to go into the market and buy until you have bought up to the amount of the surplus; and the difference between the price at which you buy from the farmer and the price at which you sell is going to constitute the margin of profit. Not a single provision of this bill contemplates a uniform return to the farmers of an advanced price. I defy the Senator to find a single section or paragraph in this bill that contemplates advancing the price of agricultural products. The purpose is to stabilize them, so it is said, and to have orderly marketing; and even in the case of orderly marketing the bill does not provide a single plan by which it may be done.

You know and I know that all the wheat that is to be distributed for a subsequent 12 months comes on the market in about 90 days. What provision have you made here to pay those who bring their stuff, so that they can go back and meet their obligations, and then distribute it for them in such a way as perhaps not to lose anything? You have set up here an institution with a capital of only about $500,000,000 to finance and manage about a six or eight billion dollar business, whose product comes on the market in 90 days, and has to be distributed through a period of 12 months.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I recognize the fact that President Hoover has had a broad experience in dealing with questions similar to those that will confront this Federal farm board, and he has my sincere wishes for the success of this plan. I feel, however, that we ought to sound a word of warning—a word of warning that the plan does not provide for economic equality of the farmer, or anything like it; that it merely provides for the treatment of symptoms; that this treatment of symptoms will make itself evident from time to time; but the farmer should not for one moment be misled into believing that such evidence means the dawning of equality. Let the farmers watch the reports of the Department of Agriculture as to the gross income of agriculture. Let them keep their eyes upon that; let them keep their eyes upon the production each year, because the estimates I have made are based upon present production, not upon an increased production. You might increase the gross income by increased production, but that would not necessarily mean a step toward farm equality, because there might be no profit in such production. There might be loss.

I shall vote for the conference report and the bill because it is a step in the direction of farm relief or farm equality; but we must keep up the fight for farm equality from now on, without relaxing our efforts in any degree, because this fight is not won; this is merely the first skirmish won.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have intended at different times when this bill was before the Senate to give expression to my views regarding it.

After nine years' controversy the Congress of the United States is about to pass a farm bill that will probably become a law. It is not a bill such as the majority of the Congress believe will really bring the results the farmers are entitled to have. It does not meet the desires of a majority of the Congress. The bill is in its present form because it is the only kind of a bill the majority of the Congress believe the President of the United States will sign.

The Senate has abandoned the provisions that were designed to control the surplus at the expense of those who create the surplus. I believe that a majority of the Senate are still of the same opinion they entertained when they voted for bills containing such provisions in past sessions of the Congress. That matter having been eliminated, the Senate proposed the debenture plan to assist in giving the farmer a part of the tariff that is provided on farm products. That has been dropped, not because a majority of the Senate believe it is not desirable, but because both the House and the Senate Members believe the President would not sign a bill with such a provision in it.

So the farm bill which is going to the White House is in the form in which it is, contains the provisions which are in it, simply because the majority of the Congress believe only that kind of a bill can receive the signature of the President.

I am not concerned particularly whether the Republican Party is carrying out its platform promises or not. I do not know what its promises mean. I heard the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] tell what was in the back of his head at Kansas City when he wrote the plank of the platform regarding farm relief. I heard the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. ALLEN] tell what was in the back of his head when he was out campaigning for Mr. Hoover. But there is one thing which nobody denies, which both political parties have promised and led the farmers and the people of the country generally to expect farm legislation would do, namely, give equal treatment to the farmers as compared with other classes of people.

There is only one of two methods by which that can be done. Either we must repeal the laws which have been passed to aid manufacturing, to aid the transportation business of this country, to aid labor organizations, to aid the banking business, or else we must pass other legislation which will place the farmer on a basis of equality to the plane to which these industries have been lifted by special legislation. Everybody knows that it is impossible to repeal the legislation that has been passed in the interest of these various industries. Unless we do pass legislation that will place the farmer on an equal basis, then, by law we will be penalizing the agricultural industry.

A farm bill in this country to give the farmers equal treatment should do four things:

First. It should control the surplus of staple farm products.

Second. It should give the benefit of the tariff to the farmer as to other classes of our citizens.

Third. It should stop the gambling in farm products upon the great grain markets of the country.

Fourth. It should provide and bring about lower freight rates upon farm products.

This bill fails to do any of these things effectively. It is designed, by the use of a fund of $500,000,000, to help control the surplus; but the trouble with it is that the money is to be loaned to stabilization corporations, and there is no method of putting the burden of carrying the loan back upon the business itself so as to tend to prevent another surplus.

The sack, as it were, is held by the Government, and there can be but one of two results from this legislation in the form in which it now is—either the $500,000,000 will not be returned to the Treasury of the United States and the farm industry will be placed in that kind of a dependent position where it will call for more and more money from the Treasury, or, if the money must be paid back, the interest that will be added to the burden of the farmer will put him in a worse condition than he was in before.

The equalization fee, whatever else may be said against it, at least did provide that the burden of handling the surplus would be upon those who created the surplus, and to that extent would be a warning against the creation of another surplus.

The debenture, whatever else may be said about it, at least would give the farmer something definite from the tariff.

It has been said on this floor repeatedly, and the newspaper editors of the country have been fond of saying, that those of us who were fighting for the debenture were animated by a desire to embarrass the administration of the President. I can not speak for others, but as for myself nothing would have given me greater pleasure than to have supported a farm bill such as the President recommended; but I believe that my duty to the farmers of this country is bigger than any feeling I might have for a President of the United States on a question of this kind. I do not believe I could defend myself, as a Senator pledged to try to help the farmers of this country, if I voted for legislation which in my judgment never can give the farmer the equal treatment to which he is entitled and which he has been so often promised by the politicians and the political leaders of the country.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would like to ask the Senator from Washington if he does not think that even though this bill is not what we had hoped it would be, it will be a start in farm legislation, and there is always a chance to ask for amendments, and to make a fight for them later on.

Mr. DILL. There is this to be said about it; at least it is some kind of farm legislation, and, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, the form in which it goes to the White House is due to the fact that it is the only kind of a bill the Congress feels the President will sign. We have twice sent a farm bill to the White House which the President would not sign, and, as a result, we have nothing in the way of farm legislation.

I want to say just another word about the debenture. Instead of Senators supporting the debenture to embarrass the President, it could more properly be said that Senators have opposed the debenture because the President asked them to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator believe there would have been 10 votes in the Senate or in the House against the debenture plan if the President had been for it?

Mr. DILL. I think it would have gone through almost unanimously if the President had been favorable to it, and of all the misrepresentation that has ever been carried on to mislead, the claim that the debenture would not benefit the farmer, but would all go to the exporter, is the worst. It is based upon the assumption that the farmers of this country have not sense enough to export their own products if the exporters attempted to take away from them the benefit of the debenture.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the very people who make that statement, that the profit would go to the exporter, say that it would stimulate production.

Mr. DILL. Of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. That the farmer would work his fool head off to make the middleman more money when he was not getting a cent out of it.

Mr. DILL. It is so ridiculous that it would not be worthy of discussion were it not for the fact that it is repeated, and continually repeated, by newspapers and many men who call themselves statesmen in this country.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask the Senator, so that he will repeat it and make it more emphatic for the RECORD, Did the Senator vote as he did in order to embarrass the President?

Mr. DILL. Oh, no, Mr. President. I want to support the President on this or any other matter, so far as I can, when I think it is to the interest of the country.

Mr. COPELAND. Did not the Senator in his vote forget about everything except one matter, that he wanted to help the farmer? Is not that what he had in mind?

Mr. DILL. Absolutely.

Mr. COPELAND. He would not vote to embarrass the President or to embarrass the Republican Party. He was seeking to vote for a measure which he believed would help the farmer. I know that is his attitude; and that is my attitude.

Mr. DILL. As I said a moment ago, instead of Senators in this body voting for the debenture in order to embarrass the President, more Senators in this body voted against the debenture to please the President. I do not believe that any man on either side of the Chamber should vote on any question for or against the opinions of any President, especially not when it is a great measure that involves the very financial existence, almost, of millions of the people of this country who live and work on the farms.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. NORBECK. I am glad the Senator brought up that question, because he recalls, as all the older Members of the Senate do, that a bill very much like this was before us two years ago, and the same Senators who are opposing this measure voted against that one; in other words, a new farm bill has not come before Congress.

Mr. DILL. I thank the Senator for that suggestion.

I want to say this, that I do not believe it is the desire of the farmers, or of those who are trying to pass legislation in their behalf, to have a record for supporting the same particular plan all the time, but rather they are concerned in the supporting of some plan that will give the farmer equality of treatment under the law. Call it an equalization fee, call it a debenture, call it anything you want—I am ready to vote for it if it will give that equality of treatment which I think the farmers are entitled to have, which they were led to believe they would get when they elected Mr. Hoover; and politicians have tried to manipulate this bill into meaning that it will give it to them, when there is not a shred of equality in it.

The condition of the farmers of this country has grown worse and worse; and all this bill would do would be to set up an organization that would lend some more money to them as a class—to their organizations—instead of to them as individuals.

I am not sure that very much more will be done by this bill, except to assure a study of the situation, than would be done under the present system of the credit banks that exist now.

I am not going to delay the Senate, or take much more time; but I can not close my remarks without paying my compliments to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. I compliment him, not only on the way he has handled and managed this bill but upon his far-sighted political judgment. He refused to take the responsibility of striking from the farm bill a provision that would have resulted in a control of the surplus, that would have given the farmer the benefit of the tariff, that would have stopped gambling automatically on the great grain markets of the country, until the President himself wrote a letter saying that no such provision must be in this bill.

When the President of the United States wrote that letter, he turned his back upon the toiling millions of this country; and in my judgment, he wrote his own political death warrant, which will be carried out in the coming election when this bill shall have proved a failure, as it will.

The Senator from Oregon knew the political reaction that would come. He has placed himself in a position, when the flood of condemnation comes over the country, to stand out on an island of explanation and self-defense and say, "I am not responsible. I wanted to give the farmer something better, but the President would not let me." I congratulate the Senator on his far-sighted statesmanship.

I have been rather sympathetic with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], who went up and down the country last fall, like John the Baptist, as it were, crying in the wilderness to make way for the new Messiah of the farm movement because now they would have us believe they were mistaken. They tell us that all he is offering now is some golden calf in the form of a loan to farmers on which they can pay interest.

This bill, which is to become a law, will contain no equalization fee, because Mr. Hoover is against it. It will contain no provision to give the farmer the benefit of the tariff, because

Mr. Hoover is against that. It will contain no provision to stop gambling upon the great grain markets of this country, because Mr. Hoover is against that.

Make no mistake about it, this is Mr. Hoover's bill; and he will reap the political glory or the political damnation that will follow it. There is one good feature about it. At least the farm issue is being clarified in the minds of the people of this country. Mr. Hoover has placed himself at the head of the farm movement by calling this special session to help the farmer.

In 1920 the farmers of this country needed help, but their attention was diverted on account of the League of Nations issue.

In 1924 the farmer's straits were even worse. He needed help more than ever, but the fear of the radicalism of Mr. La Follette as pictured in the newspapers, on the one hand, and the silk-stocking Wall Street lawyer, John W. Davis, on the other hand, frightened the people, and they forgot about the farmer's needs again. In the last campaign the farmers were desperate, but the issue became religion and booze and Tammany, and again the farmer was forgotten.

I hope that the bill which Mr. Hoover has made his own, this movement which he has dramatized himself into leading, will clear the eyes of the people of the country, and that when the elections of 1930 come he will receive his reward in the form of a Congress to support him if the bill succeeds and in the form of an opposition Congress if it fails. For my part, I shall offer no further opposition to it. I have done the best I could to get the provisions incorporated in the bill that would give the farmer some equality of treatment and some of the things he is entitled to have. So far as I am concerned, I am willing now to let the President of the United States take his bill and do the best he can with it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate and delay a vote on the conference report further than to make some reference to a statement of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] earlier in the day, when he referred to the neglect of the Congress in matters of agriculture while giving attention to other industries in the way of tariff legislation. Only for the sake of the record, and nothing more, I want to place in the RECORD a statement of fact dealing with the act of 1913, which is the Underwood Act, representing the Democratic viewpoint on tariff legislation.

On the free list in that act I find articles like fruits, berries, and so forth, corn and cornmeal; and I realize that the largest product outside of cotton in the United States is corn, so it becomes quite important; lard and lard compounds, milk, cream, and so forth, potatoes, wheat—and wheat is one of our large productions of which we have a surplus—wool, wool waste, and so forth. These are just a few of the leading staple articles of agricultural production in the United States that were on the free list in the act of 1913.

All of those articles were in 1922 placed on the dutiable list. To be specific, sheep $2, is in the new bill now pending before the Finance Committee $3; lard 1 cent, and in the present bill which the Finance Committee is considering, 3 cents a pound. Milk was on the free list in the Underwood Act, is 2.5 cents under the present law, and in the pending bill is 5 cents per gallon. Butter was 8 cents under the law of 1922, and will be 12 cents under the pending tariff bill. Poultry was 6 cents per pound and is given a slight increase, under the terms of the bill now being considered by the Finance Committee, to 10 cents per pound. Eggs, which were on the free list in the Underwood Act, were 8 cents per dozen in the law of 1922, the present law, and by the bill now being considered by the Finance Committee will be 10 cents per dozen. I am mentioning only a few of the articles of tremendous production in the United States. Barley, hulled and unhulled, 20 cents per bushel of 48 pounds; buckwheat, which was on the free list in the Underwood Act, 10 cents per hundred pounds under the present law and increased to 25 cents per hundred pounds in the bill now before the Finance Committee. Oats, hulled or unhulled, 15 cents per bushel of 32 pounds; unhulled ground oats, 45 cents for 100 pounds; oatmeal, rolled oats, and so forth, 80 cents per 100 pounds.

Wheat, which, mark you, was on the free list in the Underwood Act, was made 30 cents originally in the present law. As everyone will recall, it has been increased under the flexible provisions of the tariff act and is now given 42 cents per bushel. Wheat flour, crushed or cracked wheat, and similar wheat products not specially provided for, were given 78 cents under the present law and are increased by the bill pending before the Finance Committee to $1.04 per hundred pounds. I might go on indefinitely with similar items which I have marked in the pending bill. I mention these simply to keep the record straight.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] announced that the Congress was negligent of agriculture, but was not negligent of other industries, and then gave as a basis for his argument the increased percentage of protection on nonagricultural industries and the low percentage on agricultural industries, when the facts are that the emergency tariff act of 1921, singling out 16 items of agriculture, applied the rate as it was recommended by the best agricultural talent of the country. Those rates were incorporated in the emergency tariff act which was written into permanent law in the act of 1922. If we speak of percentage of increase, then the percentage of all those items is infinitive for they were on the free list in the Democratic legislation and now are quite highly protected.

It seems to me that the statement that the Congress has been negligent of the claims of agriculture is not borne out in fact.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet and as touching the other subject which is now before us——

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he leaves that subject?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I did not hear the first part of the Senator's presentation, but if he has not already done so, on the question of proportionate increase in ad valorem and specific duties on agricultural products as compared with nonagricultural products in the 1922 act, which appears in tables in Tariff Readjustment of 1929, Volume XVII, at pages 10357, 10358, and 10359, I would suggest that he put those tables in the RECORD.

Mr. FESS. I thank the Senator for the suggestion. I ask unanimous consent that the tables referred to by the Senator from New Jersey may be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Source: Foreign Commerce and Navigation of the United States, calendar year 1927. Prepared in Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture Charles L. Luedtke, Associate Agricultural Economist.

Mr. FESS. The call for the special session was worded in this language:

Whereas legislation to effect further agricultural relief and legislation for limited changes of the tariff can not in justice to our farmers, our labor, and our manufacturers be postponed.

That is the language of the call of the special session and is inclusive of the items to be considered in connection with the legislation. Then I find in the RECORD this statement:

In considering the tariff for other industries than agriculture, we find that there have been economic shifts necessitating a readjustment of some of the tariff schedules. Seven years of experience under the tariff bill enacted in 1922 have demonstrated the wisdom of Congress in the enactment of that measure. On the whole it has worked well. In the main our wages have been maintained at high levels; our exports and imports have steadily increased; with some exceptions our manufacturing industries have been prosperous. Nevertheless, economic changes have taken place during that time, which have placed certain domestic products at a disadvantage and new industries have come into being, all of which creates the necessity for some limited changes in the schedules and in the administrative clauses of the laws as written in 1922.

It would seem to me that the test of necessity for revision is in the main whether there has been a substantial slackening of activity in an industry during the past few years, and a consequent decrease of employment due to insurmountable competition in the products of that industry. It is not as if we were setting up a new basis of protective duties. We did that seven years ago. What we need to remedy now is whatever substantial loss of employment may have resulted from shifts since that time.

No discrimination against any foreign industry is involved in equalizing the difference in costs of production at home and abroad and thus taking from foreign producers the advantages they derive from paying lower wages to labor. Indeed, such equalization is not only a measure of social justice at home, but by the lift it gives to our standards of living we increase the demand for those goods from abroad that we do not ourselves produce.

That is the language of the President of the United States when he specially addressed the Congress at the opening of the special session.

Before I take my seat, Mr. President, I want to read a statement from the Republican platform adopted at Kansas City.

Nor have these manifest benefits been restricted to any particular section of the country. They are enjoyed throughout the land either directly or indirectly. Their stimulus has been felt in industries, farming sections, trade circles, and communities in every quarter.

Please take note of this language:

However, we realize that there are certain industries which can not now successfully compete with foreign producers because of lower foreign wages and a lower cost of living abroad, and we pledge the next Republican Congress to an examination and, where necessary, a revision of these schedules to the end that American labor in these industries may again command the home market, may maintain its standard of living, and may count upon steady employment in its accustomed field.

That is the language of the platform adopted at Kansas City and is the only official voice of the party now in control. So, while I wish it were possible for us to limit the revision of the tariff to repair only those broken places in the tariff structure which have come since 1922, I would not be justified in making the statement that either the platform, the President, or any responsible spokesman for the party has ever committed the party to a limitation of tariff legislation to agriculture alone.

I am for agricultural relief, if it can be afforded. I am also for such relief for nonagricultural industries which are obviously in a bad condition because of foreign competition. I think that we are not fair to the President of the United States when we say that he intended to limit tariff legislation to agricultural commodities alone.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, it seems to me half the time of the session has been consumed by Republicans trying to show what the President thought and what the Republican platform said. They have been successful only in showing that whatever the President thought he has kept to himself. I did not intend to comment upon that situation; that is the prerogative of Republicans, pseudos and others; but I should like to say that I think there is a great deal of wisdom in the squib which appeared in the newspaper the other day that 1929 would go down in history as the year in which the farmer was relieved of any belief that he was to be relieved. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the administration has been ridden and ridden hard by the industrialists, but they have won a victory that has made the President and the majority of the Senate and of the House declare that prosperity is the special right of those engaged in commerce and industry, and that agriculture is their bondsman, destined and doomed to make brick without straw. No one honestly believes that it is just to give to the industrialists protection and deny it to the agriculturists, yet that is what this administration and the House have decreed. Stripped of all pretense, it is a demand that the farmer shall feed those engaged in other occupations for half the cost of production.

Now and then it is well to take stock in politics to ascertain just what political promises contained in platforms and party speeches really mean. The Republican Party stood pledged by the Kansas City platform and the declarations of its candidates and its supporters to bring agriculture up to a basis of equality so far as governmental favors are concerned with those engaged in other occupations. The opportunity to do so was presented by the debenture plan incorporated in the farm bill. Mr. Hoover and those of the Senate and the House who obey his bidding have repudiated their platform, frankly admitted that they sought and obtained the farmers' support last fall under false pretenses, and that they are the obedient servants and instruments of the industrialists and the enemies of agriculture.

I repeat, no one voted against the debenture plan without knowing he was voting against the interest of agriculture. There can be no pretense nor excuse save the bare and naked fact that those who so voted want some to reap where they have not sowed and to eat their bread in the sweat of other men's brows.

What is the debenture plan? Is it a new idea injected into legislation? Is it wholly an untried experiment? Of course everyone knows it is not. It is a benefit that has been conferred by the tariff and its drawback provisions on industry for more than a century. The plan simply provides, since farm products, to a large extent, must find a market beyond our borders where tariff protection can not go, that for the commodities so exported, and, of course, denied any benefit from the tariff, 50 per cent of whatever rate Congress thought was fair as a tariff protection on such articles shall be paid to the farmer on his products which had thus to be sold in the open market of the world. As an instance, Congress has said that wheat is entitled to a tariff duty of 42 cents per bushel in order to equalize the cost of producing in America and in other countries, where the standards of living were lower, and, therefore, the cost of living less than here. Since a large quantity of American wheat has to be shipped abroad for a market and the price for which it sells fixes the market price for the time being of wheat in America, the debenture plan provided that for every bushel of wheat sold abroad, the farmer should receive the world price, plus 21 cents a bushel, that being one-half the tariff rate. As an example, if the farmer should export 1,000 bushels of wheat, he would get the world price and 21 cents a bushel, or $210, for his 1,000 bushels of wheat.

It was provided under the debenture plan that cotton, upon which there is no tariff, should be entitled to 2 cents a pound. As an example, should a cotton grower ship abroad 100 bales of cotton he would get the world's price plus $10 a bale, or $1,000. Other commodities were to be treated according to their tariff rates which Congress has heretofore fixed.

The enemies of agriculture said that the farmer would not get the benefit of the debenture plan; that it would go to the export merchant. Of course they did not believe that, or they would have been for the bill. It is as well to say that the farmer will not get what the market price is at his nearest town for his produce, because he sells it to somebody who ships it somewhere else. Those who made that argument did not believe it, because, joined with the statement that the middleman would get the benefit and not the farmer, is the other statement invariably made that the debentures would stimulate overproduction. In other words, they professed to believe that the farmer is such an idiot that, while getting nothing out of the debenture, he would work his head off to add to the profits of the middleman. The farmer has not always shown wisdom in selecting the candidate for which he cast his vote, but certainly he is not the idiot that these, his enemies, picture him to be.

Not alone would the debenture give to the farmer the amounts I have indicated, but whenever the exportation had taken from this country our surplus, the domestic market would react to the tariff provision and the wheat growers, for instance, would get the world price, plus 42 cents per bushel. In other words, no one could import wheat to sell in competition with that of the domestic producer without paying the world price plus the tariff and the freight.

This is so obvious that everyone understands it. The President and those in both the House and the Senate who opposed the debenture plan did so because they were unwilling for the farmer to share in the benefits of the protective policy. They want him to carry the burden by being compelled to buy in a protected market but to sell in an unprotected market.

This is the controversy that has been waged in Congress for the last six weeks. If it has done nothing else it has compelled the administration and its supporters in the two Houses of Congress to throw off the mask of hypocrisy and stand revealed as the subservient instruments of industry and the avowed enemies of agriculture. Every farmer will know it, he knows it now, notwithstanding the fact that the greater number of newspapers, being the mouthpieces of special interests, have sought to obscure it. The facts are obvious and the general intelligence is too high to be deceived. At least, then, this discussion has had its advantages. It has compelled those in public office to strip themselves of pretense, whatever they may say to the contrary, and stand revealed either as the friends or the enemies of agriculture, and to declare, if they oppose the plan, that they wish those who consume to be fed and clothed by those who produce at less than half the cost of production.

Mr. President, I am going to vote against the conference report, and I am going to do so for two reasons: In the first place, if I shall vote for it, I will have said by my vote that I believe it in some respects redeems the pledges made to the farmer; I will have to say that I believe he is receiving substantially what he is entitled to receive. I know that is not true, and, knowing it to be untrue, I can not keep my self-respect and vote for a measure which I know does not measure up to what the farmer has a right to except, I shall vote against the conference report.

Mr. President, it has been hailed as a great victory for the President that after he graciously permitted the body at the other end of the Capitol to vote—but confined their activities solely to a vote, denying them the right to express any reasons why they were for or against the debenture—the House has agreed with the President. It is not a victory, Mr. President, for either branch of Congress. It is a victory for those who are willing that some shall toil and starve and go naked while others shall be fed and clothed in silk and toil not. That is all this victory means. It is so obvious, save as to one man who has had the courage to disregard local interests—I refer to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]—that one can lay his hand upon the reason of every man who has opposed the debenture. Mr. President, I am not accusing such an one of bad faith.

I do not know, Mr. President, what the effect upon the political future of those who have voted on one side or the other of this measure will be. I have never joined that class of prophets who are able to predict that the country is going to rise up and sweep out of office those who do not agree with me, but I say, Mr. President, there is a greater price they have paid than that; they have paid a price that no man ought to be required to pay for an office; they have paid the price of surrendering their opinions and harkening only to the voice at the White House.

I wish, Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD, in connection with my remarks, an editorial which appeared in the Philadelphia Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record, June 9, 1929]

DR. CONGRESS, MR. FARMER, AND THE DEBENTURE BRIDGE

A doctor rushing to a bedside to save a life has, we will suppose, to cross a wide and deep river over which there is only one bridge, or, at least, only one that he knows of.

If he does not like the looks of that bridge, is he going to conquer his prejudice or indulge it and turn back, leaving the sick man to die?

Congress is the doctor.

The farmer is the sick man.

And the debenture plan was the only bridge in sight.

Congress said: "The bridge doesn't look good to me. I don't like its looks and I don't think it's quite safe."

"Besides," said Congress, "the sick man may pull through all right, even without me."

But the voice of duty will not down. Also, the neighbors are bound to talk if the patient dies undoctored, and that will ruin an excellent practice.

The neighbors being the voters back home.

How different it was when Mr. Farmer was well and active and Mr. Manufacturer was sick!

Old Dr. Congress took the same old bridge, the subsidy bridge, to get to the bedside and practice his healing art.

Listen to Senator CARAWAY, of Arkansas:

"This provision [export debenture] does not introduce any new principle. There has been in the tariff bills for a century a provision for a drawback. We will suppose the case of a man who is manufacturing carpets in Philadelphia. He imports 100,000 pounds of wool from Australia to weave his carpets, and pays $31,000 at the customhouse as a customs charge, because the tariff on wool is 31 cents a pound. He files a certificate that he is going to weave this wool into carpets and export them, which he does, and he then goes to the Treasury and gets 99 cents on every dollar that he paid into the Treasury and puts it in his pocket. Now, the farmer says, 'You give me back just 50 cents on the dollar and I will be satisfied,' and they say, 'Oh, no; you are a robber and a plunderer.'"

The answer to that, of course, is: "CARAWAY is a wild and woolly Democrat, and what he says doesn't matter."

Well, Louis J. Taber, national master of the grange, is nonpartisan on farm relief, and he says:

"The export debenture is no more a subsidy than is the protective tariff. The very purpose of our protective tariff is to prevent foreign low-cost goods from coming into the United States. By this means large quantities of dutiable goods are kept out and hundreds of millions of dollars in duties are prevented from entering our Treasury. For instance, when the duty on aluminum was more than quadrupled in 1922 the value of imports dropped from an average of about $2,000,000 for the preceding three years to an average of $514,000 for the succeeding four years, and the net loss in tariffs collected for three years on aluminum hollow ware alone was $391,000. This protection results in great benefits to manufacturers and their employees, and the cost of this protection is borne by the consumers, the general public. Exactly the same thing happens where the debenture plan is in operation."

As it has been in Germany for years.

The essence of all the argument, pro and con, is this: Old Dr. Congress will cross the bridge to serve Mr. Manufacturer, but not to save the life of Mr. Farmer.

And an experiment with the debenture plan, even when the whole world (save China) suffers from a glut of wheat, would have been infinitely preferable to a continuation of this Republican policy of discrimination against the agricultural section of America and in favor of the manufacturing section.

Archæologists are excited over the unearthing in Mesopotamia of a sculptured human head apparently representing a public official. The rarity of the find lies in the fact that the material is terra cotta, not solid ivory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen	Frazier	King	Simmons
Ashurst	George	La Follette	Smith
Bingham	Gillett	McKellar	Smoot
Blease	Glass	McNary	Steck
Borah	Glenn	Metcalf	Steiwer
Bratton	Goff	Moses	Swanson
Brookhart	Goldsborough	Norbeck	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Greene	Norris	Thomas, Okla.
Burton	Harris	Nye	Townsend
Capper	Harrison	Oddie	Trammell
Caraway	Hastings	Overman	Tyson
Connally	Hatfield	Patterson	Vandenberg
Copeland	Hawes	Pine	Wagner
Couzens	Hayden	Ransdell	Walcott
Cutting	Hebert	Reed	Walsh, Mass.
Dale	Heflin	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh, Mont.
Deneen	Howell	Robinson, Ind.	Warren
Dill	Johnson	Sackett	Waterman
Edge	Jones	Schall	Watson
Fess	Kean	Sheppard	Wheeler
Fletcher	Keyes	Shortridge

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. FESS, Mr. MCKELLAR, and others called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. BLACK's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BLACK] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS]. I am advised that if that Senator were present the would vote as I shall vote. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NORBECK (when Mr. MCMASTER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. MCMASTER] is unavoidably absent, being out of the city. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. Understanding that on this matter, however, a special pair has been arranged between him and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I am therefore free to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SCHALL (when Mr. SHIPSTEAD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when Mr. STEPHENS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness in his family. He is paired on this question with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If present and at liberty to vote, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. Understanding that he would vote as I purpose to vote, I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MOSES. The senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is absent from the Senate because of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON]. Inasmuch as both those Senators would vote the same way on this bill, the Senator from Virginia has already voted. If the Senator from Maine were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BLAINE]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. GOULD], who is also unavoidably absent. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay." If the junior Senator from Maine were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KING. Upon this question I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] is out of the city. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is necessarily absent on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is necessarily out of the city, and that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily detained on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 74, nays 8, as follows:

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 19) submitted by Mr. JONES, May 6, 1929, to amend paragraph 2 of Rule XXXVIII relating to proceedings on nominations in executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON INTERNAL REVENUE TAXATION

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there is a vacancy upon the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation caused by the death of the late Senator Jones, of New Mexico. I ask that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] be appointed to fill the vacancy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request is granted, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to membership on the joint committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries, and it was signed by the Vice President.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. WATSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 17, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, June 14, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. John Compton Ball, of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, we bow before Thee in humble acknowledgment of Thy greatness and goodness, and plead that Thou wilt bestow upon us the wisdom needed for this day in the discharge of every duty.

We thank Thee to-day for the Star-Spangled Banner that waves over our land and rejoice that its colors come from Thy heavens—

It's blue from Thy skies,
It's white from Thy clouds,
It's red from Thy sunsets,
And it's gold from Thy stars.

We pray that we, with the oncoming youth of our land, may see in this trinity of color the graces of good citizenship, purity, truth, and sacrifice all crowned with the gold of character. Hasten the day, O God, when the exalted principles for which our flag stands shall rule not only our own Nation but all the nations of the earth, and all peoples shall be united in one brotherhood and Thy peace cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 312) entitled "An act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress."

CONFERENCE REPORT—FARM RELIEF BILL

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill H. R. 1, the farm relief bill, and agree to the same. The conference report is identical with the one voted on yesterday. The debenture plan has been eliminated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the conference report on the bill H. R. 1——

Mr. HASTINGS. But you have not submitted it yet.

Mr. HAUGEN. We have filed the report, but it has not been printed.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the conference report and agree to it. The gentleman ought to ask unanimous consent to take it from the Speaker's table and consider it. There may be some gentlemen here who are not willing to give unanimous consent to agreeing to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the report has not been filed.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Iowa has physically filed the report with the Clerk.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is now with the enrolling clerk. It has been filed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the proper procedure is for the gentleman to formally file the report.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has a right to file the report, and then it would lie over for one day under the rule.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the bill H. R. 1. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Reserving the right to object, is it the intention of those in charge to permit debate on the conference report?

Mr. HAUGEN. That is for the House to determine. I did not think it necessary to have any extended debate and I have no request for time.

Mr. CANNON. In view of the fact that those who wished to suggest amendments have not been permitted to control time for debate at any time since this bill has been under consideration during the extra session, I wondered if the gentleman was going to be consistent and continue to refuse them an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman from Iowa has control of one hour.

Mr. CANNON. And gentlemen on that side have had control of unlimited time at all stages of the discussion since the introduction of the bill. They took all the time they desired for debate on the conference report but refused to allow any Member who voted against it any time whatever. Again yesterday when the Senate compelled the House to vote on the debenture plan they monopolized all the time and no man who favored the debenture plan was allowed to utter a single word in its behalf. In all the history of the House there is no parallel to the shameless refusal to permit the minority to present their views that has been practiced in the passage of this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am trying to help the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I did not observe any effort on the part of the gentleman to help us get time for debate when the conference report came up before, or when the Senate amendments were taken up yesterday.

However, it is now too late to affect the bill. The time for amendment and debate has passed. But now that the farce is over, and the President's bill is going back to him just as he sent it down to the House with the exception of the few improvements the Senate compelled the House to accept, you may be interested in knowing what the farm organizations and the farmers for whose benefit the bill is ostensibly drafted think of it. Here is the opinion of the farmers themselves:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY CORN BELT FEDERATION OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS DES MOINES, IOWA, JUNE 11, 1929

We, the members of the Corn Belt committee, which speaks for more than a million organized farmers, desire to say that, in our opinion, the so-called House farm relief bill as amended in conference, does not manifest the slightest effort to make the tariff effective in behalf of our surplus farm commodities, and without this the pledge of the Republican Party to assure equality for agriculture in the last campaign becomes utterly farcical. However, under all the circumstances, we have no desire to in anywise interfere with the passage or operation of this measure. Those who sponsor it are under a definite and solemn pledge to the farmers of America, and if they fail to live up to that pledge, the responsibility will be upon them.

We here and now reiterate the former position of this committee that the equalization fee principle is the only one that will assure genuine equality to agriculture, make the tariff effective, and place the loss on the various farm surpluses where it belongs, and where it will act as a deterrent against overproduction, and yet we deeply appreciate the courage of certain Members of the Senate who apparently realize that the only thing that will save agriculture from final and complete collapse is a higher price for what the farmer produces.

With reference to the House tariff revision bill, we desire to go on record as saying that it is the most indefensible measure of the kind ever offered in the history of Congress. Pretending to revise the tariff "in the interest of agriculture," certain selfish interests have been promised new advantages which are without conscience or reason, and which, if enacted into law, will mulct the consumers of the country, farmers included, out of hundreds of millions of dollars of additional tribute per year. In connection with both the pending farm relief and tariff legislation we have a feeling bordering on contempt for certain Corn Belt Congressmen who, throughout the special session, have acted as mere errand boys for special privilege.

We redeclare ourselves for the principle of production cost which brought this committee into being, and which, properly interpreted, means that the farmer is entitled to the same living standard as that enjoyed by other classes in our great Nation.

F. W. MURPHY,
Minnesota, Chairman.
T. C. CASHMAN,
Vice President Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.
CHAS. E. HEARST,
President Iowa Farm Bureau.
MILO RENO,
President Iowa Farmers' Union.
H. G. KEENEY,
President Nebraska Farmers' Union.
C. B. STEWARD,
Secretary Nebraska Farm Bureau.
RALPH SNYDER,
President Kansas Farm Bureau.

This resolution is also indorsed by Mr. William Hirth, president of the Missouri Farmers' Association, and the first chairman of the Corn Belt committee, who could not attend the Des Moines meeting.

In this connection let me also quote from the statement issued yesterday by the National Grange in reply to those Members who seek to hide behind the plea that they voted against a plan to effectuate farm tariffs because they were afraid the President would veto the bill:

They are afraid that the President might veto the bill if the debenture plan were included. If the President should veto the bill, as Senator NORRIS aptly declared on the floor of the Senate last Saturday, the bill could easily be repassed in two days with the debenture plan eliminated. The farmers have been waiting for nine years for relief and we believe that they would be willing to wait a few days longer in order to get real relief, if such a course would bring it.

And the following excerpt from the same statement in direct reply to the President's assertion that it "is opposed by many leading farm organizations" is particularly pertinent:

An effort has been made to create the impression that some of the farm organizations are opposed to this plan. If any such there be, it has not come to our knowledge. At a conference held on April 6, the executive heads of the three national farm organizations, the Farm Bureau, the Farmers' Union, and the National Grange, issued a statement outlining certain fundamentals which must be met by any legislation to permit it to qualify properly as farm relief. The first item in this list was:

"It should make the tariff effective on all farm crops so that surpluses will not be permitted to depress the domestic price to the world level of prices."

The only proposition now pending before Congress meeting this specification is the debenture. We hope that the House may vote to retain this provision in the farm bill. For years students of the agricultural situation both in and out of Congress have been insistent that the surplus question must be dealt with in order to provide adequate farm relief, and the debenture plan does aim to solve this problem.

And now, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman desires to complete the passage of the bill without having permitted the other side of the questions presented to be discussed, and wishes to adopt the conference report without debating it, I shall not object. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order it printed.

The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as read. It has been read once in full.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SECTION 1. (a) That it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, so that the industry of agriculture will be placed on a basis of economic equality with other industries, and to that end to protect, control, and stabilize the currents of interstate and foreign commerce in the marketing of agricultural commodities and their food products—

"(1) by minimizing speculation.

"(2) by preventing inefficient and wasteful methods of distribution.

"(3) by encouraging the organization of producers into effective associations or corporations under their own control for greater unity of effort in marketing and by promoting the establishment and financing of a farm marketing system of producer-owned and producer-controlled cooperative associations and other agencies.

"(4) by aiding in preventing and controlling surpluses in any agricultural commodity, through orderly production and distribution, so as to maintain advantageous domestic markets and prevent such surpluses from causing undue and excessive fluctuations or depressions in prices for the commodity.

"(b) There shall be considered as a surplus for the purposes of this act any seasonal or year's total surplus, produced in the United States and either local or national in extent, that is in excess of the requirements for the orderly distribution of the agricultural commodity or is in excess of the domestic requirements for such commodity.

"(c) The Federal farm board shall execute the powers vested in it by this act only in such manner as will, in the judgment of the board, aid to the fullest practicable extent in carrying out the policy above declared.

"FEDERAL FARM BOARD

"SEC. 2. A Federal farm board is hereby created, which shall consist of eight members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and of the Secretary of Agriculture ex officio. In making the appointments the President shall give due consideration to having the major agricultural commodities produced in the United States fairly represented upon the board. The terms of office of the appointed members of the board first taking office after the date of the approval of this act shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, two at the end of the first year, two at the end of the second year, one at the end of the third year, one at the end of the fourth year, one at the end of the fifth year, and one at the end of the sixth year after such date. A successor to an appointed member of the board shall have a term of office expiring six years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that any person appointed to fill a vacancy in the board occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, shall be appointed for the remainder of such term. One of the appointed members shall be designated by the President as chairman of the board and shall be the principal executive officer thereof. The board shall select a vice chairman who shall act as chairman in case of the absence or disability of the chairman. The board may function notwithstanding vacancies, and a majority of the appointed members in office shall constitute a quorum. Each appointed member shall be a citizen of the United States and shall not actively engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as a member of the board; nor shall any appointed member during his term of office engage in the business (except such business as is necessary to the operation of his own farm or farms) of buying and selling, or otherwise be financially interested in, any agricultural commodity or product thereof. Each appointed member shall receive a salary of $12,000 a year, together with necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law, while away from his official station upon official business.

"ADVISORY COMMODITY COMMITTEES

"SEC. 3. (a) The board is authorized to designate, from time to time, as an agricultural commodity for the purposes of this act (1) any regional or market classification or type of any agricultural commodity which is so different in use or marketing methods from other such classifications or types of the commodity as to require, in the judgment of the board, treatment as a separate commodity under this act; or (2) any two or more agricultural commodities which are so closely related in use or marketing methods as to require, in the judgment of the board, joint treatment as a single commodity under this act.

"(b) The board shall invite the cooperative associations handling any agricultural commodity to establish an advisory commodity committee to consist of seven members, of whom at least two shall be experienced handlers or processors of the commodity, to represent such commodity before the board in matters relating to the commodity. Members of each advisory committee shall be selected by the cooperative associations from time to time in such manner as the board shall prescribe. No salary shall be paid to committee members, but the board shall pay each a per diem compensation not exceeding $20 for attending committee meetings called by the board and for time devoted to other business of the committee authorized by the board, and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law for civilian employees in the executive branch of the Government. Each advisory committee shall be designated by the name of the commodity it represents, as, for example, the 'cotton advisory committee.'

"(c) Each advisory committee shall meet as soon as practicable after its selection, at a time and place designated by the board. Each advisory committee shall meet thereafter at least twice a year upon call of the board, and may meet at other times upon call of a majority of the members thereof. Each advisory committee shall select a chairman and secretary.

"(d) Each advisory committee may by itself or through its officers, (1) confer directly with the board, call for information from it, or make oral or written representations to it, concerning matters within the jurisdiction of the board and relating to the agricultural commodity, and (2) cooperate with the board in advising the producers through their organizations or otherwise in the development of suitable programs of planting or breeding in order to secure the maximum benefits under this act consistent with the policy declared in section 1.

"GENERAL POWERS OF BOARD

"SEC. 4. The board—

"(1) shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia, and such other offices in the United States as in its judgment are necessary.

"(2) shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"(3) shall make an annual report to Congress upon the administration of this act and any other matter relating to the better effectuation of the policy declared in section 1, including recommendations for legislation.

"(4) may make such regulations as are necessary to execute the functions vested in it by this act.

"(5) may appoint and fix the salaries of a secretary and such experts, and, in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended, and subject to the provisions of the civil service laws, such other officers and employees, as are necessary to execute such functions.

"(6) may make such expenditures (including expenditures for rent and personal services at the seat of government and elsewhere, for law books, periodicals, and books of reference, and for printing and binding) as are necessary to execute such functions. Expenditures by the board shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the chairman of the board.

"(7) shall meet at the call of the chairman, the Secretary of Agriculture, or a majority of its members.

"SPECIAL POWERS OF BOARD

"SEC. 5. The board is authorized and directed—

"(1) to promote education in the principles and practices of cooperative marketing of agricultural commodities and food products thereof.

"(2) to encourage the organization, improvement in methods, and development of effective cooperative associations.

"(3) to keep advised from any available sources and make reports as to crop prices, experiences, prospects, supply, and demand, at home and abroad.

"(4) to investigate conditions of overproduction of agricultural commodities and advise as to the prevention of such overproduction.

"(5) to make investigations and reports and publish the same, including investigations and reports upon the following: Land utilization for agricultural purposes; reduction of the acreage of unprofitable marginal lands in cultivation; methods of expanding markets at home and abroad for agricultural commodities and food products thereof; methods of developing by-products of and new uses for agricultural commodities; and transportation conditions and their effect upon the marketing of agricultural commodities.

"REVOLVING FUND

"SEC. 6. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $500,000,000 which shall be made available by the Congress as soon as practicable after the approval of this act and shall constitute a revolving fund to be administered by the board as provided in this act.

"LOANS TO COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS

"SEC. 7. (a) Upon application by any cooperative association the board is authorized to make loans to it from the revolving fund to assist in—

"(1) the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities and food products thereof;

"(2) the construction or acquisition by purchase or lease of physical marketing facilities for preparing, handling, storing, processing, or merchandising agricultural commodities or their food products;

"(3) the formation of clearing-house associations;

"(4) extending membership of the cooperative association applying for the loan by educating the producers of the commodity handled by the association in the advantages of cooperative marketing of that commodity; and

"(5) enabling the cooperative association applying for the loan to advance to its members a greater share of the market price of the commodity delivered to the association than is practicable under other credit facilities.

"(b) No loan shall be made to any cooperative association unless, in the judgment of the board, the loan is in furtherance of the policy declared in section 1 and the cooperative association applying for the loan has an organization and management, and business policies, of such character as to insure the reasonable safety of the loan and the furtherance of such policy.

"(c) Loans for the construction or acquisition by purchase or lease of physical facilities shall be subject to the following limitations:

"(1) No such loan for the construction or purchase of such facilities shall be made in an amount in excess of 80 per cent of the value of the facilities to be constructed or purchased.

"(2) No loan for the purchase or lease of such facilities shall be made unless the board finds that the purchase price or rent to be paid is reasonable.

"(3) No loan for the construction, purchase, or lease of such facilities shall be made unless the board finds that there are not available suitable existing facilities that will furnish their services to the cooperative association at reasonable rates; and in addition to the preceding limitation, no loan for the construction of facilities shall be made unless the board finds that suitable existing facilities are not available for purchase or lease at a reasonable price or rent.

"(d) Loans for the construction or purchase of physical facilities, together with interest on the loans, shall be repaid upon an amortization plan over a period not in excess of 20 years.

"MISCELLANEOUS LOAN PROVISIONS

"SEC. 8. (a) Loans to any cooperative association or stabilization corporation and advances for insurance purposes shall bear interest at a rate of interest per annum equal to the lowest rate of yield (to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per cent) of any Government obligation bearing a date of issue subsequent to April 6, 1917 (except postal-savings bonds), and outstanding at the time the loan agreement is entered into or the advance is made by the board, as certified by the Secretary of the Treasury to the board upon its request: Provided, That in no case shall the rate exceed 4 per cent per annum on the unpaid principal.

"(b) Payments of principal or interest upon any such loan or advance shall be covered into the revolving fund.

"(c) Loans to any cooperative association or stabilization corporation shall be made upon the terms specified in this act and upon such other terms not inconsistent therewith and upon such security as the board deems necessary.

"(d) No loan or insurance agreement shall be made by the board if in its judgment the agreement is likely to increase unduly the production of any agricultural commodity of which there is commonly produced a surplus in excess of the annual marketing requirements.

"STABILIZATION CORPORATIONS

"SEC. 9. (a) The board may, upon application of the advisory commodity committee for any commodity, recognize as a stabilization corporation for the commodity any corporation if—

"(1) the board finds that the marketing situation with respect to the agricultural commodity requires or may require the establishment of a stabilization corporation in order effectively to carry out the policy declared in section 1; and

"(2) the board finds that the corporation is duly organized under the laws of a State or Territory; and

"(3) the board finds that all the outstanding voting stock or membership interests in the corporation are and may be owned only by cooperative associations handling the commodity; and

"(4) the corporation agrees with the board to adopt such by-laws as the board may from time to time require, which by-laws, among other matters, shall permit cooperative associations not stockholders or members of the corporation to become stockholders or members therein upon equitable terms.

"(b) Any stabilization corporation for an agricultural commodity (1) may act as a marketing agency for its stockholders or members in preparing, handling, storing, processing, and merchandising for their account any quantity of the agricultural commodity or its food products, and (2) for the purpose of controlling any surplus in the commodity in furtherance of the policy declared in section 1, may prepare, purchase, handle, store, process, and merchandise, otherwise than for the account of its stockholders or members, any quantity of the agricultural commodity or its food products, whether or not such commodity or products are acquired from its stockholders or members.

"(c) Upon request of the advisory committee for any commodity the board is authorized to make loans from the revolving fund to the stabilization corporation for the commodity for working capital to enable the corporation to act as a marketing agency for its stockholders or members as hereinbefore provided. Not less than 75 per cent of all profits derived by a stabilization corporation each year from its operations as such a marketing agency shall be paid into a merchandising reserve fund to be established by the corporation. No such payment shall be required whenever the fund is in such amount as, in the judgment of the board, constitutes a sufficient reserve for such operations of the corporation. Out of the remainder of such profits for the year the corporation shall repay any outstanding loan made under this subdivision and the accrued interest thereon, or if all such loans and accrued interest have been fully repaid, then it may distribute a patronage dividend to its stockholders or members. Such patronage dividend shall be paid to each stockholder or member on the basis of the total volume of the commodity or its products for the year marketed for his account through the corporation.

"(d) Upon request of the advisory committee for any commodity the board is authorized to make loans from the revolving fund to the stabilization corporation for the commodity to enable the corporation to control any surplus in the commodity as hereinbefore provided and for meeting carrying and handling charges and other operating expenses in connection therewith. The board shall require a stabilization corporation to establish and maintain adequate reserves from its profits from its surplus control operations before it shall pay any dividends out of such profits. All losses of the corporation from such operations shall be paid from such reserves, or if such reserves are inadequate, then such losses shall be paid by the board as a loan from the revolving fund. Any amounts so loaned for payment of losses shall be repaid into the revolving fund by the corporation from future profits from its surplus control operations. Any stabilization corporation receiving loans under this subdivision for surplus control operations shall exert every reasonable effort to avoid losses and to secure profits, but shall not withhold any commodity from the domestic market if the prices have become unduly enhanced, resulting in distress to domestic consumers. Stockholders or members of the corporation shall not be subject to assessment for any losses incurred in surplus control operations of the corporation.

"(e) A stabilization corporation shall keep such accounts, records, and memoranda, and make such reports with respect to its transactions, business methods, and financial condition, as the board may from time to time prescribe; shall permit the board to audit its accounts annually and at such other times as the board deems advisable; and shall permit the board, upon its own initiative or upon written request of any stockholder or member, to investigate the financial condition and business methods of the corporation.

"(f) No loan shall be made to any stabilization corporation unless, in the judgment of the board, the loan is in furtherance of the policy declared in section 1.

"CLEARING HOUSE ASSOCIATIONS

"SEC. 10. Upon application of any cooperative association handling an agricultural commodity or of producers of an agricultural commodity, the board is authorized, if it deems such association or producers representative of the commodity, to assist in forming producer-controlled clearing house associations adapted to effecting the economic distribution of the agricultural commodity among the various markets and to minimizing waste and loss in the marketing of the commodity, if such assistance, in the judgment of the board, will be in furtherance of the policy declared in section 1. The board may provide for the registration, and for the termination of the registration, of any clearing house association in accordance with such regulations as the board may prescribe. Such clearing house associations are authorized to operate under rules adopted by the member cooperative associations and approved by the board. Independent dealers in, and handlers, distributors, and processors of, the commodity, as well as cooperative associations handling the commodity, shall be eligible for membership in the clearing house association: Provided, That the policy of such clearing house association shall be approved by a committee of producers which, in the opinion of the board, is representative of the commodity. Clearing house associations shall utilize the Market News Service and other facilities of the Department of Agriculture as far as possible.

"PRICE INSURANCE

"SEC. 11. The board is authorized, upon application of cooperative associations, to enter into agreements, subject to the conditions hereinafter specified, for the insurance of the cooperative associations against loss through price decline in the agricultural commodity handled by the associations and produced by the members thereof. Such agreements shall be entered into only if, in the judgment of the board, (1) coverage is not available from private agencies at reasonable rates, (2) the insurance will be in furtherance of the policy declared in section 1, (3) the agricultural commodity is regularly bought and sold in the markets in sufficient volume to establish a recognized basic price for the market grades of the commodity, and (4) there is available with respect to the commodity such market information as will afford an accurate record of prevailing prices for the commodity covering a period of years of sufficient length to serve as a basis to calculate the risk and fix the premium for the insurance. The agreements shall require payment of premiums so fixed and shall include such other terms as, in the judgment of the board, are necessary. The board may make advances from the revolving fund to meet obligations under any insurance agreement, but such advances together with the interest thereon shall, as soon as practicable, be repaid from the proceeds of insurance premiums.

"ADMINISTRATIVE APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 12. For expenditures in executing the functions vested in the board by this act (including salaries and expenses of members, officers, and employees of the board and per diem compensation and expenses of the commodity committees), incurred prior to July 1, 1930, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $1,500,000. No part of the moneys appropriated in pursuance of this authorization shall be available for expenditures, including loans and advances, for the payment of which the revolving fund or insurance moneys are authorized to be used.

"AVOIDANCE OF DUPLICATION

"SEC. 13 (a) The board shall, in cooperation with any governmental establishment in the Executive branch of the Government, including any field service thereof at home or abroad, avail itself of the services and facilities thereof in order to avoid preventable expense or duplication of effort.

"(b) The President may by Executive order direct any such governmental establishment to furnish the board such information and data as such governmental establishment may have pertaining to the functions of the board; except that the President shall not direct that the board be furnished with any information or data supplied by any person in confidence to any governmental establishment in pursuance of any provision of law or of any agreement with a governmental establishment.

"(c) The board may cooperate with any State or Territory, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or with any person.

"(d) The board shall, through the Secretary of Agriculture, indicate to the appropriate bureau or division of the Department of Agriculture any special problem on which a research is needed to aid in carrying out the provisions of this act.

"(e) The President is authorized, by Executive order, to transfer to or retransfer from the jurisdiction and control of the board the whole or any part of (1) any office, bureau, service, division, commission, or board in the executive branch of the Government engaged in scientific or extension work, or the furnishing of services, with respect to the marketing of agricultural commodities, (2) its functions pertaining to such work or services, and (3) the records, property, including office equipment, personnel, and unexpended balances of appropriation, pertaining to such work or services.

"EXAMINATION OF BOOKS AND ACCOUNTS OF BOARD

"SEC. 14. Vouchers approved by the chairman of the board for expenditures from the revolving fund pursuant to any loan or advance or from insurance moneys pursuant to any insurance agreement, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all financial transactions of the board shall, subject to the above limitations, be examined by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe. Such examination, with respect to expenditures from the revolving fund pursuant to any loan or advance or from insurance moneys pursuant to any insurance agreement, shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the Congress and to the board of expenditures and of loan and insurance agreements in violation of law, together with such recommendations thereon as the Comptroller General deems advisable.

"MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"SEC. 15 (a) As used in this act, the term 'cooperative association' means any association qualified under the act entitled 'An act to authorize the association of producers of agricultural products,' approved February 18, 1922. Whenever in the judgment of the board the producers of any agricultural commodity are not organized into cooperative associations so extensively as to render such cooperative associations representative of the commodity, then the privileges, assistance, and authority available under this act to cooperative associations, shall also be available to other associations and corporations producer-owned and producer-controlled and organized for and actually engaged in the marketing of the agricultural commodity. No such association or corporation shall be held to be producer-owned and producer-controlled unless owned and controlled by cooperative associations as above defined and/or by individuals engaged as original producers of the agricultural commodity.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any member, officer, or employee of the board to speculate, directly or indirectly, in any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or in contracts relating thereto, or in the stock or membership interests of any association or corporation engaged in handling, processing, or disposing of any such commodity or product. Any person violating this subdivision shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"(c) It shall be unlawful (1) for any cooperative association, stabilization corporation, clearing-house association, or commodity committee, or (2) for any director, officer, employee, or member or person acting on behalf of any such association, corporation, or committee, to which or to whom information has been imparted in confidence by the board, to disclose such information in violation of any regulation of the board. Any such association, corporation, or committee, or director, officer, employee, or member thereof, violating this subdivision, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

"(d) The inclusion in any governmental report, bulletin, or other such publication hereafter issued or published of any prediction with respect to cotton prices is hereby prohibited. Any officer or employee of the United States who authorizes or is responsible for the inclusion in any such report, bulletin, or other publication of any such prediction, or who knowingly causes the issuance or publication of any such report, bulletin, or other publication containing any such prediction, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $500 or more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both: Provided, That this subdivision shall not apply to the members of the board when engaged in the performance of their duties herein provided.

"(e) If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional, or the applicability thereof to any person, circumstance, commodity, or class of transactions with respect to any commodity is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provision to other persons, circumstances, commodities, and classes of transactions shall not be affected thereby.

"(f) This act may be cited as the 'agricultural marketing act.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 1) to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause. The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, with an amendment which is a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The essential differences between the House bill and the Senate amendment, and the nature of the corresponding provisions of the substitute agreed upon by the conferees, are set forth in the following discussion:

DECLARATION OF POLICY

The House bill (sec. 1) declared it to be the policy of Congress to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce so that the industry of agriculture would be placed on a basis of economic equality with other industries. This end was to be obtained by (1) minimizing speculation, (2) preventing inefficient and wasteful methods of distribution, (3) limiting undue and excessive price fluctuations, (4) encouraging the organization of producers into cooperative associations and promoting the establishment and financing of a farm-marketing system of producer-owned and producer-controlled cooperative associations and other agencies, and (5) aiding in preventing and controlling surpluses in any agricultural commodity, through orderly production and distribution, so as to maintain advantageous domestic markets and prevent such surpluses from unduly depressing the prices for the commodity.

The Senate amendment (sec. 1) declared it to be the policy of the United States to minimize price fluctuations by controlling surpluses, and by encouraging producers to organize effective associations or corporations under their own control for greater unity of effort in marketing. The Senate amendment described a surplus as a "seasonal or year's total surplus, produced in the United States and either local or national in extent; that is, in excess of the requirements for the orderly marketing of any agricultural commodity or in excess of the domestic requirements for such commodity." The substitute (sec. 1) retains substantially the provisions of the House bill, together with the provisions in the Senate amendment defining a surplus. The Senate amendment (sec. 1 (2)) contained a provision declaring that the objects hereinbefore referred to should be accomplished in such manner as to bring about a substantial and permanent improvement in agriculture and promote the best interests of the country as a whole. It also declared (sec. 14 (f)) it to be the purpose of this act to organize, encourage, and utilize existing cooperative farm organizations and farm cooperative marketing agencies. Both of these provisions have been omitted from the substitute.

FEDERAL FARM BOARD

The House bill (sec. 2 (a)) provides for a Federal farm board, to consist of a chairman and five other appointed members, the chairman to serve at the pleasure of the President and his salary to be fixed by the President. The House bill also provided that the President should designate any appointed member to act as chairman in case of the absence or disability of the chairman. These provisions are omitted from the substitute.

The Senate amendment (sec. 2) provided for a Federal farm board, to consist of 12 appointed members, 1 from each of the 12 Federal land-bank districts, the chairman to be designated by the President and to be the principal executive officer of the board and the board to select a vice chairman. It also provided that the terms of office and the salary of all appointed members, including the chairman, should be the same, namely, $12,000 a year. The Senate amendment further provided that no appointed member should during his term of office engage in the business of buying and selling or otherwise be financially interested in any agricultural commodity or product thereof, except such business as was necessary in the operation of his own farm or farms.

The substitute (sec. 2) provides for a Federal farm board to consist of eight appointed members and retains the provisions of the Senate amendment providing that the salaries and terms of office of all the appointed members, including the chairman, shall be the same, namely, $12,000 a year. It also contains a provision requiring the President to give due consideration to having the major agricultural commodities produced in the United States fairly represented upon the board rather than to select them from the several land-bank districts. The provisions of the Senate amendment requiring the President to designate the chairman of the board and authorizing the board to select a vice chairman are adopted in the substitute as well as the provision providing that no appointed member should, during his term of office, engage in the business of buying and selling or otherwise be financially interested in any agricultural commodity or product thereof.

The Senate amendment (sec. 2) contained a clause providing, as a qualification to membership on the board, that each appointed member shall have demonstrated his capacity and fitness by a record of success in agricultural activities. This provision is omitted from the substitute.

ADVISORY COMMODITY COMMITTEES

The House bill (sec. 3 (b)) provided that the board should invite the cooperative associations for any commodity to establish advisory commodity committees to consist of seven members, at least two of whom were to be experienced handlers and processors of the commodity. Members were to be selected by cooperative associations in such manner as the board might prescribe. The Senate amendment (sec. 4 (a)) provided for the establishment of an advisory council for each commodity prior to the first certification of a stabilization corporation for that commodity. Each council was to consist of seven members selected by the board from persons nominated by the cooperative associations for the commodity in such manner as the board should prescribe.

The substitute retains the House provisions with the addition of certain provisions from the Senate amendment (sec. 4) not found in the House bill and covering such details as meetings of the advisory committee, the selection of its chairman and secretary, and an outline of the functions and authority of the committee. Among these latter are conferences with the board, calling for information from it, making oral or written representations to it, and cooperation with it in advising producers of the commodity in the development of suitable programs of planting and breeding.

While the House bill (sec. 3 (a)) and the Senate amendment (sec. 5 (a)) both give the board power to provide for combined treatment of one or more agricultural commodities as one commodity or separate treatment for different classifications or types of a single commodity, neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment defines the term "agricultural commodity." However, the Senate amendment (sec. 1 (3)) provided that the term shall include, among other matters, cornstalks, wheat, oat and rice stalks, cotton stalks, and other like agricultural products. This provision is omitted from the substitute.

GENERAL POWERS OF THE BOARD

The substitute (sec. 4) makes no change from the House bill (sec. 2 (b)) in the general powers of the board except that it omits from the House bill the requirements that the principal office of the board shall be located in the Department of Agriculture and retains the provisions in the Senate amendment (sec. 3 (a) and (f)) to the effect that the board shall have its principal office in the District of Columbia, meet at the call of the chairman, the Secretary of Agriculture, or a majority of its members.

The Senate amendment (sec. 3 (e)) provided that the appointment of experts should be subject to the civil service laws and their salaries should be fixed in accordance with the classification act of 1923. The House bill did not contain these restrictions, and they have been omitted from the substitute.

SPECIAL POWERS

The substitute (sec. 5) contains the identical provisions of the House bill (sec. 4) with the exception of omitting therefrom the requirement that the board shall have authority to make investigations and reports upon the economic need for reclamation and irrigation projects.

REVOLVING FUND

The provisions of the House bill (sec. 5 (a)) and of the Senate amendment (sec. 8) establishing a revolving fund of $500,000,000 were identical. The substitute (sec. 6) of course makes no change.

LOANS TO COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS

The House bill provided for loans (sec. 5 (b)) to cooperative associations for effective merchandising, for the construction or acquisition by purchase or lease of storage or other physical marketing facilities, for the formation of clearing-house associations, and for the extension of membership of cooperative associations through education in the advantages of cooperative marketing. The Senate amendment (sec. 6 (c)) provided for loans to cooperative associations for the acquisition by purchase, construction, or otherwise of facilities and equipment for preparing, handling, storing, processing, or sale or other disposition of agricultural commodities, for working capital for cooperative associations, and for the purchasing of supplies and equipment by cooperative associations for use in the production of agricultural commodities by their members. The substitute (sec. 7 (a)) retains the provisions of the House bill, except that the provision for the loans for physical facilities is broadened so that physical facilities may be acquired for any phase of marketing, such as preparing, handling, storing, processing, or merchandising agricultural commodities or their food products.

The House bill (sec. 5 (b)) contained certain provisions not found in the Senate amendment restricting the loans for physical facilities to 80 per cent of their value and further restricting them so as to avoid unnecessary duplication of existing facilities if the services of existing facilities were available at reasonable rates or the facilities could be purchased or leased for a reasonable price or rent. The substitute (sec. 7 (c)) retains these House provisions.

In addition to the loans above set forth the Senate amendment (sec. 6 (c)) provided for loans to agricultural purchasing associations (as well as to cooperative marketing associations) for the purchase of supplies and equipment for use in production. The House bill contained no similar provision, and the substitute likewise omits the provision.

The Senate amendment (sec. 6 (d)) also provided for loans to cooperative associations for the purpose of enabling them to advance to their members a greater share of the market price of the commodity delivered to them than is practicable under other credit facilities. These loans were to be secured by a lien upon the commodity and, together with advances made by intermediate credit banks and other agencies upon the commodity, were not to exceed 85 per cent of its market value. The House bill had no such provision. The substitute (sec. 7 (a)(5)) retains the Senate provision, but with modifications eliminating the per cent limitation and leaving the matter of security to the discretion of the board.

MISCELLANEOUS LOAN PROVISIONS

The House bill (sec. 5 (a)) provided that all loans to cooperative associations or stabilization corporations or advances for insurance purposes should be at a rate of interest fixed by the board. The Senate amendment (sec. 6 (f)) provided that such loans and advances should bear interest at a rate of interest per annum equal to the lowest rate of yield of any Government obligation bearing a date of issue since April 6, 1917 (except postal-savings bonds), and outstanding at the time of the loan or advance, provided that in no case should this rate exceed 4 per cent per annum on the unpaid principal. The substitute (sec. 8 (a)) retains the Senate provision with an amendment to clear up a minor administrative difficulty. The House bill (sec. 5 (a)) provided that payments of interest should be covered into the Treasury, while the Senate amendment (sec. 6 (f)) provided that such payments should be covered into the revolving fund. The substitute (sec. 8 (b)) retains the Senate provision.

The Senate amendment (sec. 6) in many cases specified the nature of security upon which the various loans were to be made. The House bill (sec. 5 (b)) and the committee substitute (sec. 8 (c)) leave this matter to the discretion of the board.

The House bill (sec. 5 (e)) required that no loan or insurance agreement should be made by the board if, in its judgment, the agreement is likely to increase unduly production of a commodity of which there is commonly produced a surplus in excess of the annual domestic requirements. The Senate amendment had no such provision. The committee substitute (sec. 8 (d)) retains the House provision with a modification which limits the restriction to commodities of which there is commonly produced a surplus in excess of the annual requirements for orderly distribution among both domestic and foreign markets.

The Senate amendment provided for the allocation of the revolving fund among the various classes of loans for cooperative associations and stabilization corporations by specifying maximum amounts which the amount of the outstanding loans for the particular purpose could not exceed. The House bill contained no such restrictions, and the substitute likewise omits such restrictions.

STABILIZATION CORPORATIONS

Dual functions: Both the House bill and the Senate amendment recognized two main functions of stabilization corporations. First, the stabilization corporation for any commodity was to engage in surplus control operations for the purpose of stabilizing the market for the commodity. This was to be done through purchasing, storing, and merchandising the commodity. In the second place, the stabilization corporations were to act as marketing agents. They were to be central marketing agencies through which their stockholders or members, namely, the cooperative associations, might on their own account dispose of the commodity produced or lawfully acquired by them, retaining the profits and suffering the losses. (See sec. 6 (b) of the House bill and sec. 5 (d) of the Senate amendment.)

Loans: The House bill (sec. 6 (b)) provided that loans from the revolving fund might be made to a stabilization corporation for working capital for its surplus control operations. The Senate amendment not only provided for similar loans to a stabilization corporation (sec. 6 (b)) but also authorized the board to subscribe to stock of a stabilization corporation from the revolving fund in order that the corporation might have available working capital for its merchandising operations on account of its members (sec. 5 (f)). The substitute provides for obtaining working capital for both surplus-control operations and merchandising operations by means of loans (sec. 9 (c) and (d)), which will supplement the funds accumulated in its reserves or obtainable from existing banking facilities.

Reserves: The House bill (sec. 6 (d)) required a stabilization corporation to establish and maintain reserves before it could pay dividends out of its profits from any source. Losses which exceed its capital and reserves for all purposes were to be met out of future profits from any source and were not permitted to be assessed against stockholders or members. The Senate amendment segregated the two operations of the corporation, namely, surplus control operations and merchandising operations on account of its members. To this end the Senate amendment provided that 75 per cent of all profits made from surplus control operations should be paid into a surplus control reserve fund so long as that fund was inadequate in the judgment of the board. The remainder of the profits from the surplus control operations could be distributed as a patronage dividend. All losses from surplus control operations were payable from the surplus control reserve fund, or, if that fund was inadequate, then from the revolving fund, subject to repayment with interest from future profits from surplus control operations. The profits of a stabilization corporation from its merchandising operations for the account of its members were in nowise subject to liability for losses from the surplus control operations. On the other hand, the Senate amendment provided that 75 per cent of its profits from merchandising operations for the account of its members should be paid into a merchandising reserve fund so long as that fund was inadequate in the judgment of the board. Out of the remainder of such profits there was required to be paid a cash dividend on the outstanding stock which had been issued in order to obtain working capital, and any balance might be distributed as a patronage dividend.

The substitute (sec. 9 (c) and (d)) retains the segregation principle provided in the Senate amendment. A merchandising reserve fund is established into which go 75 per cent of the profits derived by the stabilization corporation from its operations as a marketing agency for its members so long as that fund is inadequate in the judgment of the board. The remainder of its profits from its merchandising operations are to be used for repayment of the loan (which loan, as above noted, takes the place of the stock issue provided in the Senate amendment) for working capital for its merchandising operations and interest thereon, and thereafter for patronage dividends. As to profits from surplus control operations, these are required to be paid into such reserves as the board may require the stabilization corporation to establish and maintain. Any excess may be paid out in dividends of such character as the corporation may lawfully declare and may in its discretion so declare.

Establishment: The House bill (sec. 6 (a)) provided for the establishment of stabilization corporations only upon application of the advisory commodity committee for the commodity. The Senate bill (sec. 5 (a)) permitted any qualified corporation to make application for certification as a stabilization corporation for a commodity. The substitute retains the requirement of the House bill.

Accounts: The substitute (sec. 9 (e)) retains the provisions found in the Senate amendment (sec. 5 (c)), but not in the House bill, to the effect that the board may prescribe accounts, records, and memoranda of a stabilization corporation, may require it to make reports with respect to its transactions, business methods, and financial condition, may audit its accounts annually and at such other times as the board deems advisable, and may, upon its own initiative or upon written request of a stockholder or member of the stabilization corporation, investigate the financial condition and business methods of the corporation.

The substitute (sec. 9 (d)) also retains the provision found in the House bill (sec. 6 (c)), but not the Senate amendment, to the effect that a stabilization corporation shall exert every reasonable effort to avoid losses and to secure profits, but shall not withhold any commodity from the domestic market if the prices thereof have become unduly enhanced resulting in distress to domestic consumers.

By-laws: The House bill (sec. 6 (a) (4)) required the stabilization corporation, before being recognized as such by the board, to agree with the board to adopt such by-laws as the board may from time to time require and, among other matters, by-laws which permitted cooperative associations not stockholders or members of the corporation to become stockholders or members therein upon equitable terms. The Senate amendment (sec. 5 (a) (3)) required a stabilization corporation to agree with the board, before being certified as a stabilization corporation, to adopt by-laws, and make such changes therein as in the judgment of the board were necessary to enable the corporation effectively to conform to the requirements of the act. The Senate amendment (sec. 5 (a)) further provided that the board shall prescribe the terms upon which a cooperative association should be entitled to admission to membership in a stabilization corporation. The Senate amendment further provided (sec. 5 (b)) that upon becoming a member of the stabilization corporation, a cooperative association should subscribe for shares of stock in the corporation in number equal to the number of members of the cooperative association. The substitute (sec. 9 (a)) retains the provisions of the House bill upon the above matters.

Duration: The charter of a corporation must be satisfactory to the board before the corporation will be recognized by the board as a stabilization corporation. Further, the board controls the by-laws of the corporation. It therefore follows that the surplus control operations and the merchandising operations of a stabilization corporation are subject to control by the board in the interest of effectuating the declared policy. The Senate amendment (sec. 5 (a)) provided that the authority of a corporation to act as a stabilization corporation would expire at the end of five years unless renewed. The House bill and the substitute omit this provision as unnecessary in view of the control which the board has over the stabilization corporation, as above set forth, and in view of the power of the board to supervise the reserves of a stabilization corporation.

Federal instrumentalities: The Senate amendment (sec. 5 (a)) also declared stabilization corporations to be Federal instrumentalities. The House bill had no similar declaration and it is omitted in the substitute.

CLEARING-HOUSE ASSOCIATIONS

The substitute (sec. 10) retains the provisions of the House bill (sec. 5 (c)) with the exception of a clerical change and the addition of the provisions of the Senate amendment (sec. 9) which required clearing-house associations to utilize the market news service and other facilities of the Department of Agriculture, as far as possible, and which gave the board power to terminate the registration of any clearing-house association.

Under the provisions of the Senate amendment only cooperative associations handling perishable commodities could form a clearing-house association. The House bill and the substitute make possible clearing-house associations for all commodities.

PRICE INSURANCE

The House bill (sec. 5 (d)) authorized the board to enter into insurance agreements with cooperative associations only upon application of the advisory commodity committee for the commodity. It also provided that such agreements should be entered into only if, in the judgment of the board, the agricultural commodity was regularly traded in upon an exchange in sufficient volume to establish a recognized basic price for the commodity and such exchange had accurate price records of sufficient value to serve as a basis to calculate the risk and fix the premiums for the insurance.

The Senate amendment (sec. 7) contained no provision requiring the advisory commodity committee to make application for the insurance on behalf of the cooperative associations for the commodity. The Senate amendment also provided that such insurance agreements should be entered into if in the judgment of the board the agricultural commodity was regularly bought and sold in the markets in sufficient volume to establish a recognized basic price for the commodity and there was available with respect to the commodity such market information as would afford an accurate record of prevailing prices for the commodity of sufficient value to serve as a basis to calculate the risk and fix the premiums for the insurance.

The substitute (sec. 11) adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment.

The House bill (sec. 5 (a)) provided that the interest rate on insurance moneys temporarily advanced from the revolving fund should be fixed by the board. The substitute omits this provision and fixes the rate of interest the same as for loans. (See sec. 8 (a) of substitute.)

ADMINISTRATIVE APPROPRIATION

The House bill (sec. 8 (a)) authorized an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the administrative expenses of the board incurred prior to July 1, 1930, whereas the Senate amendment (sec. 11) authorized an appropriation of $500,000 for the administrative expenses of the board incurred prior to July 1, 1930. The substitute (sec. 12) retains the provision of the House bill.

AVOIDANCE OF DUPLICATION

Cooperation with governmental establishments: The House bill (sec. 7) and the Senate amendment (sec. 13) were substantially the same in providing for the cooperation with governmental establishments in the executive branch of the Government; authorizing the President to direct any governmental establishment to furnish the board with information and data pertaining to the functions of the board; and authorizing the board to cooperate with any State or Territory, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or with any person. However, the House bill, in authorizing cooperation with any governmental establishment in the executive branch of the Government, included in addition any field service thereof, at home or abroad. The substitute (sec. 13 (a), (b), and (c)) adopts the language of the Senate amendment but includes the provision of the House bill relating to cooperation with the field service of any governmental establishment at home or abroad.

The Senate amendment (sec. 3 (g)) directed the board through the Secretary of Agriculture to indicate to the appropriate bureau or division of the Department of Agriculture any special problem on which a research is needed by the board to aid it in carrying out the provisions of the act. No such provision was contained in the House bill. The substitute (sec. 13 (d)) adopts the Senate amendment.

Transfer of bureaus, etc.: The House bill (sec. 9) authorized the President to transfer to or retransfer from the jurisdiction and control of the board the whole or any part of any office, bureau, service, division, commission, or board in the executive branch of the Government engaged in scientific or extension work, or the furnishing of service with respect to the marketing of agricultural commodities, together with the records, property, personnel, and appropriations pertaining thereto. No such provision was contained in the Senate amendment. The substitute adopts the provision of the House bill with a clerical change.

EXAMINATION OF BOOKS AND ACCOUNTS OF BOARD

The House bill (sec. 10) and the Senate amendment (sec. 12), which provided that vouchers approved by the chairman of the board for expenditures from the revolving fund should be final and conclusive on all officers of the Government and which provided that the General Accounting Office should examine such expenditures only for the purpose of making a report to Congress of expenditures and advances and of loan and insurance agreements made in violation of law, were substantially the same except for a provision in the Senate amendment which related to export debentures. The substitute (sec. 14) retains the provisions of the House bill with clerical changes found necessary in order that the language in this section should conform to the language of other portions of the substitute.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

The definition of the term "cooperative association" and the provisions prohibiting the members, officers, and employees of the board from speculating in agricultural commodities or food products thereof were identical in both the House bill (sec. 8 (b)) and the Senate amendment (sec. 14 (d)), and are therefore adopted in the substitute (sec. 15 (a) and (b)) without change.

The provisions of the House bill (sec. 8 (d)) and the Senate amendment (sec. 14 (c)) prohibiting cooperative associations, stabilization corporations, clearing-house associations, and advisory committees or any director, officer, or employee to which or to whom information has been imparted in confidence to disclose such information in violation of any regulation of the board, were substantially the same. The House bill, however, provided that such prohibition should extend to any member of such association, corporation, or committee, or any person acting on behalf of any such association, corporation, or committee, and except that the penalty provisions of the House bill provided for a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both. The Senate amendment provided for a fine of $2,000 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both. The substitute (sec. 15 (c)) incorporates the provisions of the House bill, except that the penalty provisions are fixed at a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both.

The Senate amendment (sec. 14 (e)) contained a provision which prohibited the inclusion in any governmental report, bulletin, or other publication of any prediction with respect to the prices of cotton. No such provision was contained in the House bill. The Senate amendment is incorporated in the substitute with slight clerical changes. The penalty provisions contained in the Senate amendment have been reduced in the substitute from a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000 to a fine of not less than $500 or more than $5,000.

The Senate amendment (sec. 14 (a)) contained a separability clause which did not appear in the House bill and which is adopted in the substitute (sec. 15 (e)).

The House bill (sec. 11) provided that the act may be cited as the "Federal farm board act" and the Senate amendment (sec. 14 (g)) provided that the act may be cited as the "Agricultural surplus control act." The substitute (sec. 15 (f)) provides that the act may be cited as the "agricultural marketing act."

EXPORT DEBENTURES

The Senate amendment provided for the issuance of export debentures by the Secretary of Agriculture to exporters of agricultural commodities or their products. The debenture rates were one-half the rate of tariff duty in effect with respect to the particular commodity, except that so long as no import duty was imposed on cotton the debenture rate thereon would be 2 cents per pound. Proportionate rates were provided for products of the commodity. Debentures if presented within one year were receivable at face value in payment of duties collectible against any imported articles. In order to prevent undue stimulation in the production of any commodity by reason of the issuance of debentures, reductions in debenture rates were authorized. The greater the increase in production over the average annual production for the preceding five years, the greater the amount of the reduction in the debenture.

The House bill contained no provision upon this subject, and the substitute likewise omits the debenture provisions.

SESQUICENTENNIAL OF THE DEATH OF COUNT PULASKI

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon Senate Joint Resolution 50, which pertains to a celebration in honor of Count Pulaski, at Savannah, Ga., and to incorporate therewith a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated and to couple with that extension a newspaper article. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include Senate Joint Resolution 50, pertaining to a celebration in honor of Count Pulaski, at Savannah, Ga., and to incorporate therewith a newspaper article.

Recently the House passed Senate Joint Resolution 50, which is as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 50

Joint resolution to provide for the observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski

Whereas October 11, 1779, marks in American history the date of the heroic death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, who died from wounds received on October 9, 1779, at the siege of Savannah, Ga.; and

Whereas the States of Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, South Carolina, Pennsylvania, New York, Minnesota, Maryland, New Jersey, Illinois, and other States of the Union have by legislative enactment designated October 11, 1929, to be "General Pulaski's Memorial Day"; and

Whereas October 11, 1929, marks the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of General Pulaski, and it is but fitting that such date should be observed and commemorated with suitable patriotic exercises: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is requested, by proclamation, (1) to invite the people of the United States to observe October 11, 1929, as the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the death of Brig. Gen. Casimir Pulaski, Revolutionary War hero, by holding such exercises and ceremonies in schools, churches, or other suitable places as may be deemed appropriate in commemoration of the death of General Pulaski; and (2) to provide for the appropriate display of the flag of the United States upon all governmental buildings in the United States on such date.

The people of Savannah, our State, and the whole country are deeply interested in this matter. The celebration to be held in Savannah on October 11, 1929, is a national affair and will be a big event.

In words more fitting than I can employ a friend and constituent of mine, Hon. Thomas Gamble, an outstanding writer on historical subjects, has prepared an article with respect to Count Pulaski and the battle in which he fell at Savannah, which appeared in the Savannah Press on June 8 and is headed, "Savannah Soil Sacred with Blood of American Patriots and Allies." This is a most interesting article and should be preserved. It tells of events that helped save our country. It gives historical data in connection with the proposed national Pulaski memorial celebration to be held in October at Savannah, Ga., the House and the country should have, and I am therefore incorporating this article as a part of my remarks, which article is as follows:

[From the Savannah Press, Saturday, June 8, 1929]

SAVANNAH SOIL SACRED WITH BLOOD OF AMERICAN PATRIOTS AND ALLIES—SESQUICENTENNIAL SHOULD COMMEMORATE THE VALOROUS DEEDS AND SACRIFICES OF ALL WHO FOUGHT IN THE ASSAULT OF OCTOBER 9, 1779

With the perspective obtained by the passage of many years and accumulated information from French, American, and English authoritative sources, historians have become somewhat unanimous in their opinion that Savannah could have been easily captured by the French forces under Count d'Estaing before the arrival of the American forces under Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, and that after the combination of the two forces it would still have been possible for them to have successfully stormed the British defenses if action had been immediate and aggressive.

With the calm assurance of overwhelming strength and superior military skill, and encouraged by his recent easy victories in the West Indies, Count d'Estaing pursued a policy that was all in favor of the British. If General Prevost had been permitted to outline his enemy's course he would probably have done no better for the British interests than the French commander did.

Induced by the urgent advices of the French minister and the appeals of the American commander, General Lincoln, and eager to add fresh laurels to those which he had won at St. Vincent and Grenada, Count d'Estaing arrived in Savannah waters early in September, 1779. His was a formidable fleet, 32 vessels with nearly 2,000 cannon, and it brought land forces to the number of 4,000, in addition to the hundreds of men from the crews who could be used ashore. From the rendezvous in Ossabaw Sound 1,200 troops were landed at Beaulieu on September 12, and as speedily as possible marched to within 3 miles of the city. During the next few days 2,300 more men were landed. In the meantime Pulaski, with his legion of 250 cavalry and infantry, had united with the forces of Gen. Lachlan McIntosh at Augusta and marched to Savannah. General Lincoln at the same time had moved part of his forces from Charleston. At Beaulieu there was all the fervor of a Gallic reception when Pulaski and D'Estaing met. McIntosh with his troops took position on the Ogeechee Road awaiting news of the coming of Lincoln from Carolina. It was not until the 15th that Lincoln's forces crossed the river and reached Cherokee Hill, where McIntosh united with him. Under Lincoln, it is estimated, were now 1,000 Continentals and 1,100 militia. Perhaps to secure all the honor for himself and his King and country, Count d'Estaing, without awaiting conference with Lincoln, on the 16th summoned General Prevost to surrender Savannah and his army to the King of France—an ignoring of the Americans which rankled although not openly resented.

Inside the little town, with its then meager and weak defenses, mounting but 23 guns when the French arrived, were less than 2,000 British, Hessian, and loyalist soldiers under General Prevost. Not anticipating an attack, the old defenses, it appeared, had not been strengthened and the garrison had been reduced. A more aggressive commander than the count, with such overwhelming and efficiently equipped forces as the French had, could have overcome any British resistance and swept into the city with a minor loss of life. But, as Greene says, "The leadership was poor and the action was slow." Historians are inclined to the opinion that after the forces of the French had been placed in position before the city a demand for surrender without conditions, and with the announcement of a purpose to make an immediate assault, would have forced a quick capitulation. Instead of pursuing the policy that conditions seemed to dictate, the French commander, in a somewhat egotistical and bombastic manner, indulged himself in a correspondence with General Prevost. Read at this time, a century and a half after the tragedy of the subsequent siege and assault, D'Estaing's letters indicate a commander whose self-confidence had been fed by his minor successes in the West Indies, and whose military acumen was swallowed up in a vainglorious spirit.

Prevost was reminded, with a few rhetorical flourishes, of what D'Estaing, had already accomplished in the West Indies, with intimations of the hopelessness of his position, and of the advisability and necessity of surrendering. Prevost, it would seem, psychoanalyzed the opposing commander, played for time, and won every point of the game. He asked for specific terms but continued strengthening his defenses. The count alluded to this in his reply, but disdainfully, as though the enemy's protective efforts were of no significance and could not possibly avail him. "I am informed," wrote he, "that you continue intrenching yourself. It is a matter of very little importance to me. However, for form's sake, I must desire that you desist during our conferences"—and then granted a truce until the next night, and the intrenching went on.

The French fleet commanded the approaches to the river. By sinking small vessels in the channel below the city the British kept it from sailing close enough to bombard. At the upper end of Hutchinson Island other channel obstructions and a boom across the river prevented the French from approaching by way of the back river. Over at Beaufort was Lieutenant Colonel Maitland, an experienced, brave, sagacious officer, with 800 of the flower of the British forces in the south. To him went an urgent call to reinforce Prevost. Above the city were the Americans, below the city were the French. It seemed impossible to effect the passage. Just as a negro had come to the assistance of the British in their attack and capture of Savannah 10 months before, so one now revealed to Maitland the existence of Wall Cut, and the possibility of his troops safely reaching Savannah through that passage. Taking advantage of a high tide and a fog the entire 800 British reinforcements reached Savannah. General Prevost was now more nearly on a level with his enemies, considering the advantage he enjoyed in being behind strengthened defenses. While Count d'Estaing had been dillydallying and granting time, the British engineer in the city had not been idle. The garrison and every negro who could wield a pick or lift a shovel had been impressed into service. Earthworks had been thrown up which greatly improved the position of the British. A hundred or more cannon had been landed from the small war vessels in the harbor and mounted. With more than 2,500 troops, nearly all seasoned soldiers, and 126 cannon, General Prevost could await developments with the assurance that the disparity between his forces and those of his combined foes had been largely overcome by the character of the defenses constructed by engineering skill.

The French and American forces had now entirely invested the city. The French held the lines to the east and the south. The American Continentals and militia had been assigned their position on the west. Within a few hours after Colonel Maitland and his forces reached the city on September 17, D'Estaing received a note from Prevost. It needed but a few lines to inform the French commander that Savannah would be defended and that when the evening gun was fired at an hour before sundown it should be the signal for recommencing hostilities. One feels the cold precision of the military man in the brevity of Prevost's communication. One can imagine the chagrin and disappointment of D'Estaing, faced with the necessity of an assault or recourse to a probably prolonged siege. The assurance with which D'Estaing had landed, his absolute confidence that Savannah would fall a quick and an easy prey, seem to have oozed. Knowledge of the British reinforcements and of the strengthened defenses of the city determined a policy of slow siege rather than of quick assault. The lines of the French and Americans were accordingly drawn in until they were within 1,200 yards of the English and covering a front of 3,200 yards. From the fleet by way of Thunderbolt came additional men with cannon, mortars, ammunition, with engineers to direct the construction of the works. Four thousand five hundred French and over 2,000 Americans formed the cordon that slowly drew its lines closer and closer to the besieged British. On the day of the assault the main French lines were less than 1,000 feet from those of the British. Those were days of short-range guns.

On the eighth day after the truce ended fire was opened upon the town. Proving ineffective it was suspended until the erection of other batteries, so that it was not until the night of October 3 that the actual bombardment began. Before this Maj. John Jones was sent with a flag to induce Prevost to permit the women and children to leave the town. In Savannah were the wife and children of General McIntosh and kinfolk of other patriot officers and soldiers. To Prevost their presence appeared an advantage, as tending to check or limit a bombardment. The request was refused, but later Prevost, whose wife and children were daily endangered by the shells falling into the town, sought a similar permission from the allied forces—and met with a similar refusal. For five days shot and shell fell at intervals into the town, sometimes furiously for a time, and then intermittently, and at no time doing any material damage to the defenders or their protective works. In all, a thousand shells are said to have been fired, with many hundreds of solid shot, and some "carcasses"—hollow shells filled with combustibles—intended to fire the buildings. The latter were ineffective, the damage from fires being of no consequence. In fact, so far as the defenses of the city went, the bombardment was singularly void of results. The civilians suffered as much or more than the soldiers. Women and children, and men not in the armed service, sought refuge in cellars and under the bluff on the bay, while a few—Governor Wright and Lieutenant Governor Graham among them—found a safer refuge in the camp of the British, which the cannonaders evidently found more difficult to hit than the houses in the town. On the bay, on Broughton Street, and at other points a number of whites and negroes were killed or injured. An encampment was established in what is now the Yamacraw section, and there many of the inhabitants congregated as somewhat out of range and the place of greatest safety. Some sought refuge in the barns of the rice fields of Hutchinson Island and a few were accommodated on the English ships in the harbor. Royal Chief Justice Stokes, in a letter to his wife, said that "The appearance of the town afforded a melancholy prospect, for there was hardly a house that had not been shot through, and some of them almost destroyed." Some of the houses, he wrote, were riddled and in the streets and on the commons there were many large holes made in the ground by the shells.

For protection banks of sand were thrown up in front of some houses and efforts were made to convert cellars into bomb-proof refuges by strengthening their roofs and piling sand thereon several feet in depth. The chief justice was greatly distressed because casks of rum had been stored in the cellar of the house he occupied. He feared its explosion. Neither in the day nor at night were the inhabitants of the town freed from danger. It was a thoroughly shell-shocked community before the hour of the final assault, but so far as any military damage was concerned the French and Americans might almost have saved their ammunition. The records show that but a handful of casualties occurred among the British soldiers and that the harm to their defenses or to their morale was almost negligible.

Minor sorties from the English intrenchment had resulted in an immediate repulse by the French, but the infliction on them of a much heavier loss than the British had incurred. D'Estaing's illusion of an easy conquest was shattered. Unquestionably the advantage had been in favor of the British when the final decision came to storm their defenses. This conclusion appears to have been forced by the depleted condition of the army supplies, by the danger in which the French vessels, not altogether in a seaworthy condition, were feared to be in from autumn gales, by the scurvy raging among the sailors, by the possibility of a British fleet arriving, and the realization that there was no intention on the part of Prevost to surrender Savannah without a bloody resistance. The French intrenchments had gradually been brought closer and closer to the British lines, until at some points they were almost within infantry range of each other. A prolongation of the siege and bombardment held almost as much danger for the French and Americans as it did for the besieged. Disease was apt to destroy the efficiency of both armies. Sooner or later an assault must be made, and at a conference of the allied commanders the plans were laid for a combined attack in the early morning of October 9. Lincoln was opposed to an assault. Ten days more and the sappers, it was stated, would have brought the allies within the enemy's lines. But D'Estaing was impervious to argument. With him it was now an immediate assault or an abandonment of the siege.

Savannah, it must be envisaged, was a little town of hardly more than 400 houses, nearly all of which were frame, with possibly a thousand civilians during the siege. As capital and chief port of the colony it had a strategic and political importance beyond its values otherwise. Chief Justice Stokes wrote that "Insignificant as some may think Savannah is, the place is the key of the southern provinces and the Gibraltar of the Gulf passage, for to the south of this province there is not a port on the continent that will receive a sloop of war." Allowing for exaggeration, the importance of Savannah to the royalist cause in controlling Georgia and in recovering the Carolinas was sufficiently appreciated to justify a desperate defense. The city's bounds were then the present Lincoln Street on the east, Jefferson Street on the west, the river on the north, and Oglethorpe Avenue on the south. Outside of this limited area, hardly more than 2,000 feet square, there were but a few scattered dwellings. The intrenched English forces swept in almost a semicircle from the edge of the river on the east, following the highland of what are now East Broad and Wheaton Streets, to Liberty and across to the west, passing just south of the present Cathedral. On the western front, as on the east, the edge of the high bluff was used for the defenses, facing the swampy lands which made so effective a protection in themselves against assaulting parties. The French forces were concentrated in a line to the southeast and south—on October 9, hardly a thousand feet from the British lines—and connecting on the west with the American forces in the wooded section a few hundred yards west of the present West Broad Street. Count Pulaski's famous legion of cavalry and foot was camped on the western edge of the French forces. The plan of attack centered on the western defenses of the British, regarded by the allied commanders as offering the least resistance to a surprise, an opinion probably justified if it had not been for a traitor betraying the French and American plans. The sergeant of a South Carolina company, the Charleston Grenadiers, a loyalist at heart, becoming in some way acquainted with the plans, deserted to the enemy and revealed to Prevost what had been determined on at the conference of the French and American commanders. History tells us that this scoundrel was later captured while fighting with the British and was tried and hanged by the Americans, but his treachery had levied a frightful toll. In the asault his own South Carolina comrades wiped out in valor and in blood the stigma this traitor had brought upon their State.

Reduced to their simplest terms, the plans for the assault are easily understood. Five hundred South Carolina militia under Gen. Isaac Huger were to make an attack on the eastern side of the town. This was intended as a feint to withdraw British attention from the real objective. At a central point to the south another attack was to be made by French forces. This was also a demonstration to draw the English forces from the west side, where the main attack was to occur. Neither of these secondary movements accomplished anything. Knowing their enemies' plans, the British easily held back these assaults with small losses on either side. On the west, on a line close to the West Broad Street of to-day, less than 500 troops under Colonel Maitland stood behind the earthworks mounting scores of guns, awaiting the oncoming of the French and Americans.

What is now West Broad Street then formed, as it does to-day, the boundary line of the bluff on which the town stood. Beyond it to the west lay the swampy low grounds with Musgrove Creek making its way through them to the river. Musgrove Creek was then a broader, deeper, and more important stream than in recent years, and at high tide the water in its lower course was probably 10 or more feet deep. On a line about where the Central Railroad depot now stands, and crossing the head of the Augusta Road, the British had constructed their strongest defenses on the west, the famous Spring Hill redoubt at the edge of the highland. Here were stationed South Carolina loyalists. They fought desperately in a bad cause. Another redoubt manned by militia, commanded by Maitland, and other earthworks not so strongly fortified, extended north to the river, where three English vessels lay ready to add their fire to that of the land batteries. Troops assaulting these breastworks must make their way through the marshy lands, or along the narrow Augusta Road causeway, the latter being the only solid avenue of retreat in the event of defeat, and charge up the miry face of the bluff. At the foot of the long breastworks ran a ditch, and bordering it an abatis—a mass of tree trunks with their pointed projecting branches facing the enemies, as nasty an obstacle to the oncoming troops as the barbed-wire defenses of the World War. One to-day can visualize the topography of the battle field, with West Broad Street as the crown of the fortified hill and the declivity to the west up which the assaulting forces must fight their way, torn by shot and shell as they plowed through the morass. It was a desperate venture at the best. Human valor can do much, but human valor could not overcome these obstacles in the face of the ceaseless blast from cannon and musketry which met the approach of the allies.

The element of surprise before day had fully broken was a large factor in the French-American plans and that element, unknown to them, had been lost by treachery. Under the plans, the bulk of the allied forces, led by Count d'Estaing himself, were to be thrown against these western defenses in the twilight. Once the Spring Hill redoubt, keystone of the British position, was won, the allied forces could make a rear attack on the other defenses and the town law open before them. While this main attack was in progress, all the movements being almost simultaneous, American forces under Pulaski and Laurens and McIntosh, keeping to the left of D'Estaing, were to attack the intrenchments between the French column and the river, forcing their way into the town and taking the British troops from the rear. A short distance to the west of the battle line a reserve force of French and American artillery and militia under General Lincoln and Viscount d'Noailles was held ready to strike at any critical point or favorable moment.

The story has been told in detail, with natural and sometimes striking conflicts of statements. In view of the approaching one hundred and fiftieth anniversary celebration of the battle it may be well to briefly refresh all minds. At the long Spring Hill redoubt and the other western defenses Prevost had massed some of the bravest of his forces, including South Carolina loyalists, men accustomed to the shock of battle, probably the equal in courage and intrepidity of any England had in America, with his ablest officer, Colonel Maitland, in command. Delayed in their movements by the boggy land, it was about 5 o'clock in the morning when the eager allies, feeling assured of speedy victory, swept on to the frightful carnage which marked the next hour. The French moved to the assault in two columns, the first at the extreme right under D'Estaing, with Count Dillon next in command, the second column under Count Stedingk, a Swedish colonel of artillery. Count d'Estaing led the assault in person. No one can question his bravery, however much his judgment may be criticized and condemned. Instead of finding a foe asleep, they met an enemy prepared and waiting. A frightfully destructive direct and cross fire met them. Part of the vanguard penetrated the intrenchments, only to be thrown back on their comrades, bringing confusion into their ranks. D'Estaing, twice wounded by musket balls, rallied his men for a second and a third charge.

The force under Stedingk, struggling in the deep mire, with its ranks torn by the British fire, made its way to the north across the Augusta road to attack the British right, only to come in collision with the forces under D'Estaing, swerving to the left. Irretrievable disorder was the result. Hundreds of the French troops fell dead or wounded in the ditch and the marsh. They reached the redoubt, some even clambered part way to its rampart only to be bayoneted and thrown down to the ditch below. Bogged in the marsh, many were shot down as they struggled forward. It was a frightful and fruitless sacrifice of life. Those who had swept forward with exultant cries of victory fell back as the retreat was sounded, hopelessly disorganized. As they sought safety through the marsh or along the causeway leading from Savannah to Augusta, now flanked on the north by the Central Railway embankment, the British turned their guns on them, loaded, it is said, with every available metal, pieces of old chains, nails, spikes, even broken pieces of knives and spoons. It was a veritable hail of death. An eye witness wrote: "I never saw such a dreadful scene. Several hundred lay dead in a space of a few yards, and the cries of many hundreds of wounded were still more distressing."

In the meantime, where were the Americans under Laurens and McIntosh, and the legion under Pulaski? Their ranks badly broken while crossing the mire, Laurens's South Carolinians, who were to attack Spring Hill redoubt and its contiguous battery from the left, reached the British defenses only to find, as the French on their right had done, that everything was in readiness for their reception. A terrific artillery and rifle fire from redoubt and breastworks plunged them into disorder. Valorously many fought on. Some of them defying the death-dealing storm of lead even reached the slopes of the redoubt where French and American colors were momentarily planted on the slope. The two flags of the Second South Carolina Regiment for a brief moment waved there in the face of the British as the color bearers sought to reach the ramparts, only to lose their lives under a fire that no troops could withstand. It was then and there that Sergeant Jasper received his second and mortal wound while seeking to plant the flag that had been intrusted to him by Lieutenant Bush. Here one finds those conflicting stories that tend to sustain Napoleon's dictum that history is merely accepted fiction. Some say Jasper, in a dying condition, bore the flag from the field, and credit him with a glorious utterance as he sent a message to Mrs. Bernard Elliott that her charge to "stand by the standards as long as they wave in the air of liberty" had not been forgotten. Those were days when it was deemed necessary to create dying utterances for heroes whether they uttered them or not. McCrady, South Carolina's chief historian, repudiates the story. As he tells it, Lieutenant Bush, wounded early in the action, gave the standard he was bearing to Jasper, but did not retire from the field.

Soon after the sergeant was wounded and Bush again took the colors, only to be shot down in the ditch and fall with the colors under him, where they were found by the British when they removed his body. The other standard of the regiment was borne by Lieutenant Gray, who was shot down, but it was planted on the redoubt by Sergeant McDonald, who succeeded in carrying it off. When the British took Charleston this also fell into the enemy's hands. The colors that Jasper held when he received his death wound have been described as a banner of blue silk that bore on its face the coiled rattlesnake ready to strike, and warning "Don't tread on me!" This is not in keeping with the colors taken by the British. The standards are British war trophies. Mingled with the soil somewhere just beyond the lowlands to the west of the city is the dust of Jasper and other heroes of that fateful day.

While this slaughter was in progress at the right or southern end of the allies' line of battle the second American column, commanded by Gen. Lachlan McIntosh, only recently sent south by Washington to assist the patriots of his home State, moved forward for the purpose of penetrating the British lines nearer to the river and forcing its way to the rear of the enemy. Seeing the desperate plight of the French, with D'Estaing endeavoring to rally them, McIntosh sent for directions only to be told to keep to the left of the French forces. Before McIntosh's column, slowly struggling through the morass and subjected to the British fire, could accomplish its purpose the retreat had sounded and the entire French force with the Americans under Laurens were retiring from the field. This forced McIntosh to order a retreat. Part of his force had pierced the British line. As the Americans retreated the British made a sortie and pursued them a short distance. This column had minor losses compared with the other two.

Pulaski's legion had preceded Laurens's column as it left the wooded highlands west of the swamp, and then awaited orders. At the height of the assault, the fiery Pole, who had distinguished himself in several battles by his impetuous charges, sought to force a passage between the British works and create a diversion that would relieve the pressure on D'Estaing and Laurens. It was a brave, reckless charge that in the nature of the conditions enveloping the battle was doomed to a tragic ending. With the banner in hand which the Moravian nuns of Bethlehem had made for his legion, Pulaski passed the abatis with part of his men only to face a heavy cross fire from the British and to fall from his black horse from the shock of a canister shot from one of the British cannon, which penetrated his thigh. His first lieutenant seized the banner and saved it from the enemy. Missing Pulaski, some of his men returned and bore him from the field. It was some days later before Pulaski died. While efforts have been made to place the scene of his death and burial as Greenwich, near Thunderbolt, the world has accepted the statement of his comrade in arms, Captain Bentalou, who was wounded while fighting by his side, that his death occurred on the U. S. brig Wasp, between Savannah and Charleston, and that the body was buried at sea. There was no "U. S. brig Wasp" in the Navy at that time, as so often erroneously stated, and the vessel may have been the Massachusetts brigantine Wasp, which in 1779 was commanded by Capt. Isaac Somes and was authorized to carry prisoners. This was a private armed ship. Another story had it that the body was taken ashore and buried on St. Helena Island. It was Bentalou who took the famous banner of the legion to Baltimore where it later became the precious possession of the Maryland Historical Society.

There is a somewhat pathetic picture of D'Estaing after the day of repulse. Even now it stirs one's sympathies. It is said that he shut himself up in his tent and "refused to speak for three days"—no doubt an exaggeration. When the surgeon questioned him about his condition the only answer he could draw from him was: "I have a deep wound which is not in your power to cure." He had been ordered to return home from the West Indies with the major part of his fleet, but in view of the calls upon him, D'Estaing insisted that he "would certainly have been declared a coward" had he not attacked Savannah. Throughout the country the Americans had become resentful of the absence of results from the alliance with France. D'Estaing's own lack of action was largely responsible for this sentiment. He felt this. "I saw a multitude of obstacles," said he, "but extreme bravery can conquer everything. I thought the time was ripe to prove to the Americans by a brilliant action, although it might be a bloody one, that the King's troops knew how to dare everything for them." A French writer says that back in France "his friends tried to console him in a delicate way," and that "public opinion was kind." "Savannah was pardoned." And one of the first American historians to tell the story, away back in 1789, seeking to do justice, held to the opinion that "To assault or to raise the seige was the only alternative. Prudence dictated the latter; a sense of honor adopted the former."

Over 4,000 of the allies were engaged in the assault on the British defenses on the west side of the city. Of these, over 1,100 had been killed or wounded, of whom over 300 represented American casualties. The British losses were but slightly more than 100, their total list of dead, wounded, and missing during the entire siege being given as 163. With the French disheartened and discouraged by the repulse and the frightful losses sustained, with the captains of their war vessels insisting on withdrawal, Lincoln's objections to the abandonment of the siege by D'Estaing were of no avail. The French sailed away to the West Indies and the Americans made their way back to Carolina. Savannah was destined to remain in British hands until the evacuation of the city of July 11, 1782. But even more disastrous than the repulse was the after effect on the American cause in the South. When D'Estaing sailed from Tybee, Sir Henry Clinton rapidly evolved his plan for the elimination of the Revolutionary forces in South Carolina. Moving south from New York with fleet and army he besieged the American army concentrated in Charleston. From Savannah 1,200 troops went to Clinton's assistance, giving him an army of 12,000. In the spring of 1780 General Lincoln surrendered Charleston and his army of 5,000 men, with valuable supplies, the largest force of Americans to fall into the enemy's hands during the Revolution. If Savannah had been captured—as seems now, and even then, to have been so easily within the reach of the allied forces—an entirely new face might have been given to the war and its termination brought nearer. Washington's faith in Lincoln was not shaken by that general's reverses. He sustained him in his hour of humiliation, and when Lord Cornwallis a year later surrendered with over 7,000 British at Yorktown it was into the hands of Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, as Washington's representative, that General O'Hara placed the British commander's sword as a token of submission, a special honor that retrieved, in a sense, the humiliation Lincoln had felt when his own sword passed into the hands of Clinton. Lincoln for two years thereafter served as Secretary of War. Lincoln Street is Savannah's tribute to his memory.

And what of the others whose names are forever identified with the siege and assault at Savannah. Georgia voted D'Estaing a citizen and tendered him a gift of 20,000 acres of land. Lincoln formally expressed appreciation of his services and sympathy for him in his sufferings and ill fortune, but there was little real American esteem for the French commander. In fact, there was scant love lost between the American and French forces. There was an air and assumption of superiority on the part of the French which became offensive to the Americans—the South Carolinians particularly resented it. D'Estaing's demand that Prevost surrender to the King of France created suspicions of some underlying sinister motive. After the frightful repulse of October 9, the mutual antipathies seemed to have become more intense. Reflections on the valor of the Colonial militia were not calculated to enhance good feeling or diminish the bitter disappointment of unexpected and unnecessary defeat. The common misfortune alienated instead of strengthening their ties. Perhaps their final parting came none too soon. D'Estaing's disastrous Savannah campaign clouded his successes in the West Indies and brought chagrin to the French court and people, albeit, the King received him graciously. He was eager to retrieve his fame in America, but to Rochambeau came the honor of uniting with Washington in the final campaign against Cornwallis. D'Estaing continued an admiral until the close of the war in 1783, but won no distinction. Espousing the moderate principles of the French Revolution, for a time, like Lafayette, he was in favor, and commanded the national guard. The onward sweep of radicalism left him an objection of suspicion. Testimony he bore for Marie Antoinette intensified the feeling that finally brought him to the guillotine—a fate that Rochambeau narrowly escaped by the death of Robespierre. The Viscount de Noailles, brother-in-law of Lafayette—they had married sisters—had a happier fate. He was one of the commission which arranged the terms of the surrender of Cornwallis, played an important part in the French Revolution, initiating the proposal for the abolition of all titles and feudal privileges, and, as a brigadier general, died in Santo Domingo from wounds received in one of history's most daring feats.

Count Arthur Dillon, born in Ireland, commander of the Irish Brigade in the service of France, the "beautiful Dillon" of the joyous, frivolous days of Marie Antoinette at the Trianon, involved in a plot to effect the escape of Danton, Desmoulins, and others condemned to death by the Terrorists, went to the guillotine with a laughing countenance and a defiant cry of "Vive le roi" as the knife fell. His had been a life of romance and of action. As he sat in the tumbril on its way to the place of execution with the beautiful Lucille Desmoulins by his side, she grieved that she had inadvertently brought him to his fate. "No; not the cause, merely the pretext," said he with a comforting smile, as he held her hand. One wonders if he and D'Estaing thought of Savannah when the red tide of revolution in their own land swept them to their fate. Count Stedingk, wounded as he led his French and American Infantry, had planted the American flag on a British intrenchment before the retreat was sounded. "The moment of retreat, with the cries of our dying comrades piercing my heart, was the bitterest of my life," he wrote to the King of Sweden. It fell to him to have a long and eventful career—ofttimes thrilling—as a soldier and diplomat in the service of Sweden. Another name enshrined in American annals is that of Major l'Enfant, who was seriously wounded but among those who escaped to Charleston. He became the planner of the city of Washington, the City of Magnificent Distances. Truly there were men of mark who fought that day in the vain effort to redeem Savannah.

Colonel Maitland, fighting disease as well as his foes, died from fever soon after the siege of Savannah was raised. General Prevost, an old soldier, who had seen service under Wolfe at Quebec and who had been in command of the Department of the South for some years before assuming charge at Savannah, was made a major general for his skillful defense of Savannah.

Roughly, this is the story of the siege and assault on Savannah. One might say it all took place within the area circumscribed by East Broad and Wheaton Streets on the east, Jones Street on the South, the river on the north, and a line a few hundred yards west of West Broad Street, all within the limits of Savannah of 1840. Some of the French earthworks were to be seen in 1860. The last remains of the British redoubts along the West Broad Street line were not wiped out until 1860 or later. In the hour that Pulaski and Jasper fell mortally wounded before the British ramparts hundreds of other brave souls preceded them into eternity. Slight though the position it now holds in the public eye, this was one of the bloodiest of all the battles of the Revolution. Apparently it was only equaled in the number of slain and wounded on the side of the Americans by the battles of the Brandywine and Germantown. The assault on Savannah was probably accompanied by the greatest loss of life on the American side of any battle of the whole seven years' warfare with England. "It was the severest fight since Bunker Hill—a fierce assault and a splendid defense." Within a matter of 60 minutes the boggy marshes, the sandy fields, the narrow causeway, and the ditches before the earth breastworks held the bodies of many hundreds of gallant American, French, and Irish soldiers—the Irish fighting under the French flag—bodies which were soon to be cast into hastily dug trenches, there to lie undisturbed and unhonored, perhaps forever. On other battle grounds, where the issue was of less importance and the carnage of minor note, portions of the fields have been beautified, monuments have been erected, and granite and bronze tablets brought into play by a grateful people to forever perpetuate the memory of such heroic deeds. No suitable memorials mark the battle fields and blazon the valor of those who died in this famous assault at Savannah. That it was defeat for the American patriots and allies made it none the less a memorable battle, distinguished by individual and mass bravery of the highest type.

Local patriotism and local pride have erected outstanding monuments to two of the conspicuous sacrifices of the day, Pulaski and Jasper, but the battle field itself has received scant attention, and there is practically nothing that tells to the citizens or to the visiting strangers that around the old limits of Savannah, in what is now the extreme northwestern section of the city, occurred one of the most desperately fought battles of the Revolution, with perhaps the greatest sacrifice of life of the entire struggle for independence. Certainly in no single hour of those seven years did as many soldiers lay down their lives for freedom as on that memorable morn in October, 1779. A little bronze tablet on an out-of-the-way brick wall, on the south side of the Augusta road, hardly noticeable even to a keen-eyed searcher for it, is the only identification of the battle field. Many must have often wondered at the seeming indifference of Savannah in recent years to its noble heritage of history. Had this famous assault occurred in New England, poets and orators and sculptors would have given their genius to its celebration, and the world would never have been permitted to forget the sacrifice there made under the banner of freedom. Pulaski has always appealed to the imagination and patriotism of Savannah, his name has been perpetuated in many ways—by the noble monument in Monterey Square, by a hotel, a square, a ward, and military companies named after him. So it has been with Jasper. Georgia also christened counties with their names. And now on the sesquicentennial of his death the Polish-American citizens throughout the country will begin the erection of another monument to Pulaski that, if such a thing were necessary to do so, will further enhance his fame and memory, and constitute an outstanding appeal to patriotism.

It is well that it should be so and that national, State, and municipal Governments should cooperate in what will be one of the most memorable anniversary occasions in the history of our city. But the thought occurs, Might not the program for the occasion be greatly broadened, so as to add vastly to its significance and give to it a wider scope of appeal? Why should not, in addition to the remembrance of the sacrifice of Pulaski's life, there be added an expression and appreciation of the bravery and patriotism and sacrifice of the host of others who likewise willingly surrendered their lives on that sanguinary field? Jasper, beloved of Savannah, fell but a few hundred feet from where Pulaski received his fatal wound. Georgia and South Carolina blood mingled in the carnage before the British earthworks. The dust of Georgians, Carolinians, Continental troops from probably other Southern States, of French and of Irish fighting under the fleur-de-lis of France and the shamrock of Ireland lie beneath the area over which Savannah has extended in its progress to the south and to the west. Why should not this celebration of next October be enlarged and, while giving to the new Pulaski memorial the central point, at the same time once more recall and honor all those who fought under the American and French flags? Some of South Carolina's noblest sons fell on that day. Georgia gave freely of her best. France and Ireland are proud of that day's illustration of the courage of their offspring. Can not the sesquicentennial commission amplify its program, expand its outlook, and give to this occasion a greater scope and interest than perhaps would come from making it merely the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary celebration of Pulaski's death? I venture to suggest it, not to minimize in any way recognition of the debt of gratitude America owes to Count Pulaski nor the credit that belongs to the Polish-American citizens for the grand memorial they propose, but with the hope that Savannah may more awaken to the opportunity it has now presented for a celebration which might readily be made of national or even international magnitude.

Within a half circle extending h half mile from the city hall of Savannah there was more fighting, more lives lost, and more wounded on the side of the patriots than in any similar area of land in any of the thirteen original Colonies. In the capture of Savannah by the British in 1778 patriotic soldiers were shot down or bayoneted to death within a few hundred yards of the site of the city hall to-day. For both battles of Savannah the list of dead and wounded on the American side totaled over 1,300. At Bunker Hill the American losses were 453. At Princeton they were 100. At Monmouth they were 130. At Germantown they were 1,200. Savannah has never commercialized any of the wonderful outstanding features of its historical past. It has never converted into a money-making proposition the heroism and romances of its forefathers. But it would not be amiss, now that thousands upon thousands of tourists are yearly finding their way to Savannah, to stress more fully the events that are the glory of its past. There could be no more appropriate time to begin than with the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the siege and assault of 1779.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes in regard to the order of business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the conference report on the farm relief bill, which has just been adopted by the House, may be accepted by the Senate in time to be messaged back to the House to-day before the House adjourns, and in case that happens it is my purpose to ask that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Probably on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday it will be necessary for us to have at least formal sessions to consider unanimous-consent requests, to receive messages from the Senate and from the President, and to transmit messages back and forth formally to the completion of the bills that we have passed. Beyond that, if nothing else occurs meanwhile in regard to a permanent recess, it is my hope that we may begin a series of 3-day recesses, holding sessions twice a week, at which there will be no business transacted.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman said something about unanimous-consent requests on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Do I understand that those unanimous-consent requests will refer only to legislation that has been considered or adopted by the House, or will the unanimous-consent requests be considered for new legislation?

Mr. TILSON. I understand that there will be some things that are new, but they should come up as emergencies, and they should be agreed upon by those responsible for the legislation, the chairmen of the committees, and the ranking members of committees, and so on. There will be some legislation of that kind necessary during the first three days of next week.

Mr GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, next Monday is suspension day. Is there any intention to have matters considered under suspension of the rules?

Mr. TILSON. I doubt if anything will be considered, unless it is something upon which the gentleman from Texas and I can agree and as to which the Speaker will agree to grant recognition.

Mr. GARNER. That is a lot of responsibility to take. Gentlemen want to leave here to-day with a view of not coming back, since we are to have our recess, and if we are to have anything come up about which there is a possibility that a roll call may be had, either by making a point of order that no quorum is present or otherwise, gentlemen will not want to leave until we actually begin the taking of a recess, because they might want to vote on the particular question. I think the gentleman from Connecticut ought to say to the House, if he can, that there will be no legislation considered on which there is a contest.

Mr. TILSON. We never know when a contest may arise. There may be something that it is absolutely necessary to pass. Therefore I hope that a quorum will be in the city until next Wednesday night.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am inclined to think that except for bridge bills and matters now which have already been agreed to by the House, I shall object to the consideration of any further legislation from committees which have not been organized.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will permit, there must be an appropriation to start this farm board on its work, and there may be some other matters.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That will come from an organized committee, the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no; that is not organized.

Mr. TILSON. I think enough Members ought to stay here to make a quorum until we finish everything that ought to be taken care of before we recess.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Did I understand the gentleman from Connecticut to say that after next Wednesday we are going to take 3-day recesses?

Mr. TILSON. If there is no arrangement prior to that day between the Senate and the House as to a definite recess, I hope that we may begin a series of 3-day recesses.

Mr. RANKIN. Is it the intention of the leaders of the gentleman's party to carry those 3-day recesses on through the summer?

Mr. TILSON. It will be necessary for us to do so. There is no reason why we should come here if we have nothing to do.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Texas just stated that on matters that are controversial there could be roll calls; that might embarrass Members who are not here. The gentleman from Connecticut knows that if we had a series of 3-day recesses a majority of Members present on any one of those days can demand and get a roll call even on a motion to adjourn. Now, it seems to me if we are going to have recesses the leaders in charge of the two Houses of Congress at this time ought to get together and definitely agree on a recess for a specified length of time.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman agree to go and talk to the Senators at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that we ought not to be embarrassed in this way by having some one having the right to call us back here and call the roll in the House every two or three days. It seems to me that if we are going to have any recesses it ought to be a recess for a specified length of time.

Mr. TILSON. I hope that may be done.

Mr. RANKIN. Then we would not be embarrassed.

Mr. TILSON. I understand that is the very purpose of it.

Mr. RANKIN. I will ask the gentleman what are the prospects of getting an agreement with the leaders that we are to have some action for a recess for a definite length of time?

Mr. TILSON. There has never been any definite conclusion reached. I can not tell the gentleman just what will happen in the future. He might better ask a clairvoyant. [Laughter.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe I understood the gentleman to say that with reference to unanimous-consent requests which it was contemplated may be submitted, the Speaker would not recognize gentlemen desiring to submit unanimous-consent requests except with reference to those bills which have been considered by members of committees. Do I understand from that statement that the gentleman had reference to those Members who would probably be members of committees when they are organized?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. I had that in mind. That has been the practice thus far in this House.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. So far as I know, no request has been submitted to the prospective members of the Judiciary Committee as to bills that would come before it, and that will be the practice?

Mr. TILSON. I know of none that have been submitted to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I have in mind a bill which I think is of great importance, and I trust Members will not be precluded, in case we adjourn for three days, from bringing in such measures. I have in mind especially a bill establishing a home for disabled volunteer soldiers in the Southeast.

Mr. TILSON. I wish to say to the House that we should have a quorum here for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week; that is, a quorum available in case it is needed. I know of no controversial matter that is going to arise, but something might arise, and we should have a quorum here for the first three days of next week.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit my unanimous-consent request, first, that it may be in order to take a recess to-day at any time subject to the call of the Chair, and I make that request in order to wait until the Senate has acted upon the conference report on the farm relief bill.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—does that mean that Senate bills that come over which should be referred to committees, as for instance, the bill pertaining to officers' retirement, which would be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs if that committee were organized, that nobody will be recognized to move to pass that bill by unanimous consent without consulting the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] and myself?

Mr. TILSON. Not unless the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Michigan are consulted.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from Connecticut is this request to the effect that the House may take a recess to-day at any time subject to the call of the Speaker for the purpose of adjourning over until Monday?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman asked unanimous consent to adjourn over until Monday?

Mr. TILSON. Not yet. I shall ask to adjourn over until Monday on the contingency that before adjournment to-day we get a message from the Senate that the farm relief conference report has been agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Then that will be the only business on hand?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If by any possibility the Senate to-morrow should act on the farm relief conference report, will the gentleman make his request to adjourn over?

Mr. TILSON. I shall make my request to adjourn over contingent on the receipt of a message from the Senate that the farm relief conference report has been agreed to. I shall make a request that if the message on the farm relief conference report has been received from the Senate before the House adjourns to-day, then that the House when it adjourns to-day shall adjourn over to meet next Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that it may be in order at any time to-day to move that the House stand at recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. I now ask unanimous consent that in the event the farm bill has been messaged back to the House before the House adjourns to-day that the House, when it adjourns to-day, shall adjourn to Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that if the farm relief conference report is messaged over to-day, the House, when it adjourns to-day, shall adjourn until Monday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE TARIFF

Mr. YON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a concurrent resolution passed by the Florida Legislature memorializing Congress on the subject of the tariff.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting a resolution passed by the Florida Legislature. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a concurred resolution passed by the Florida Legislature memoralizing Congress on the subject of the tariff.

The resolution is as follows:

SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 7

Whereas Florida produces many fruits and vegetables which constitute the principal money crops of the farmers and horticulturists; and

Whereas great quantities of vegetables and fruits are shipped into the United States from Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, and other islands of the sea where labor and water transportation is so extremely cheap that we can not compete with said foreign labor and transportation: Therefore

The Legislature of the State of Florida believes that the citizens of said State are overwhelmingly in favor of a higher tariff or duty on vegetables and fruits, and do hereby petition our Senators, Hon. D. U. FLETCHER and Hon. PARK TRAMMELL, and our Representatives in Congress, the Hon. TOM A. YON, the Hon. R. A. GREEN, the Hon. H. J. DRANE, and the Hon. RUTH BRYAN OWEN to do everything in their power to have a higher tariff placed on citrus fruits, other fruits, vegetables, and agricultural products grown in Florida; and

Whereas the legislature realizes that it can not consistently ask that a higher duty be put on the products of the State of Florida unless our Representatives support a corresponding tariff on the products of other States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the legislature of 1929, now in session, call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to support any reasonable tariff on products of other States in order to secure the proper duty on the fruits and vegetables of Florida.

Approved by the governor May 1, 1929.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, H. Clay Crawford, secretary of state of the State of Florida, do hereby certify that the above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of substitute for House Concurrent Resolution No. 7, as passed by the legislature, session 1929, approved by the governor, and filed in this office.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State of Florida, at Tallahassee, the capital, this the 17th day of May, A. D. 1929.

[SEAL.] H. CLAY CRAWFORD,
Secretary of State.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13, 1929.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, complete, and correct copy of original document (substitute for House Concurrent Resolution No. 7) and certificate signed by the secretary of state of the State of Florida, bearing the great seal of the State of Florida, dated May 17, 1929.

Given under my hand and notarial seal this the 13th day of June, A. D. 1929.

[SEAL.] E. M. NOLAND,
Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia.

My commission expires July 28, 1933.

HISTORICAL PAGEANT AT NEW BERN, N. C., JUNE 11, 1929

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD concerning the historical pageant recently given at New Bern, N. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, it was my good fortune to attend as one of a congressional committee the pageant at New Bern, N. C., on June 11, 1929. The committee on the part of the House of Representatives were Hon. THOMAS S. WILLIAMS, of Illinois; Hon. MAURICE H. THATCHER, of Kentucky; and myself.

Through the courtesy of Rear Admiral F. C. Billard, of the United States Coast Guard, we left Washington aboard the Coast Guard cutter Apache on Saturday, June 8, and arrived at New Bern, N. C., on Monday evening, June 10, at 7 o'clock. There were aboard the Apache, in addition to the congressional delegation, Mr. Walter H. Rufenacht, secretary of the legation of Switzerland; Rear Admiral F. C. Billard; Mr. C. B. Dickson, representative of the Associated Press; and Lieut. Commander H. S. Bradbury and Ensign Evans. We were met at the dock at New Bern, N. C., by a committee headed by the mayor and other distinguished citizens. The trip through the inland waterways from Washington to New Bern, N. C., was most pleasant and instructive. We found the city of New Bern gaily decorated for the occasion.

On the morning of June 11 began at New Bern, N. C., one of the most colorful and interesting historical pageants it has ever been my good fortune to witness. The celebration depicted the events from the year 1710, when Baron Christopher de Graffenreid, a Swiss nobleman, and a band of Swiss and German Palatines first settled and founded the city of New Bern, N. C., at the junction of the Neuse and Trent Rivers. This was the second town settled in Carolina, the first being at Bath in 1705.

The streets were thronged with thousands of people. The program officially opened with the arrival of Gov. O. Max Gardner and Mrs. Gardner in an old colonial coach at the old Stanley home, now the property of Mrs. James A. Bryan, where George Washington was entertained in New Bern in 1791. It was from the porch of this residence that Mayor-elect Hubert Tolson, representing Mayor Leach in 1791, presented Governor Gardner with the key to the city. The governor there made an inspiring and patriotic address to the assembled thousands.

During the early morning hours thousands of people came from far and wide. The local citizens were dressed in colonial costumes to receive them. An appearance of festivity was ever present, with old carriages on the streets, bands playing, flags flying, and the entire populace vying with each other to make the visitors welcome and the occasion a success.

Governor and Mrs. Gardner were welcomed to the city by a salute of guns fired from the Coast Guard cutter Apache, lying at anchor at the foot of Pollock Street. The official party taking part were Governor and Mrs. Gardner; Mr. Walter H. Rufenacht, secretary of the Legation of Switzerland; Representatives THOMAS S. WILLIAMS, MAURICE H. THATCHER, and CHARLES L. ABERNETHY, of the congressional committee; Lieut. Gov. R. T. Fountain; Hons. L. P. Tapp, William F. Ward, Fred I. Sutton, Edward Flannigan, and T. A. Grantham, representing the Legislature of North Carolina; Rear Admiral F. C. Billard and officers, representatives of the United States Coast Guard; and Capt. John Halligan and officers, representing the aircraft squadron of the Scouting Fleet of the United States Navy.

The parade, which formed on Pollock Street in front of the home of Mr. M. D. W. Stevenson, where the governor was entertained, started promptly at 11 o'clock a. m. In the line were State motor police marshals dressed in colonial costumes on horseback; citizens representing Indians; floats and citizens representing Queen Anne knighting Baron de Graffenreid; treaty with the Indians; trial of Lawson and de Graffenreid by the Indians; Spaight and Greene under the cypress tree; removing the cannon from Governor Tryon's palace; Madame Moore, Elizabethtown Daughters of American Revolution; Edenton Tea Party; William Gaston; colonial ladies and gentlemen; Indians Shrine Patrol; James Davis and his first printing press; Emeline Pigott; United Daughters of the Confederacy float; Fort Bragg military band; Battery D; United States cutter Apache officers and crew; United States cutter Pamlico officers and crew; Boy Scouts in two troops; covered wagon; colonial filling station; Elias Hawes and the first free school in New Bern; Berne flag presented to New Bern; old fire engine; modern fire-department equipment. The parade was reviewed by the official party from the old palatial Emory House, now the property of Mr. E. K. Bishop. This home faces the broad Neuse River, and this stately stream was filled with vessels decorated for the occasion, including two United States Coast Guard cutters and three sub-chasers and two large seaplanes which had been flown from Hampton Roads by Capt. John Halligan, Lieut. Commander J. F. Maloney, Lieut. W. J. Slattery, and Ensign S. W. Ferrebee, all of the United States Navy.

The official party and distinguished invited guests were given a delightful luncheon in the yard of Mrs. S. W. Smallwood, where the 700-year-old famous cypress tree is located, and Mrs. Smallwood, in colonial costume, delivered an historical address. The luncheon was served by the following ladies, dressed in colonial costumes: Mrs. John Duffy, Mrs. H. C. Lumsden, Mrs. W. B. Blades, Mrs. G. A. Ives, Mrs. H. B. Wadsworth, Mrs. Charles L. Abernethy, jr., Mrs. J. S. Claypoole, Mrs. J. M. Anderson, Miss Mildred Scales, Miss Rose Caraway, Mrs. Paul Mengle, Mrs. John H. Parker, and Mrs. Royal Turner.

At 2.45 o'clock p. m., from the porch of the shrine home on the river shore in the presence of assembled thousands, the following program was presented:

Mrs. Richard Duffy, general pageant chairman, presiding, with the assistance of Miss Gertrude Carraway, assistant to the chairman.

Presentation of Governor Gardner by Mr. William Dunn.

Address by Gov. O. Max Gardner.

Introduction of Mr. Walter H. Rufenacht, representative of the Swiss Government, by Mr. L. I. Moore.

Address by Mr. Rufenacht.

Introduction of Representative THOMAS S. WILLIAMS, of Illinois, by Representative CHARLES L. ABERNETHY.

Address by Mr. WILLIAMS.

Introduction of Representative MAURICE H. THATCHER, of Kentucky, by Representative CHARLES L. ABERNETHY.

Address by Mr. THATCHER.

Introduction of Rear Admiral F. C. Billard, Commandant of the United States Coast Guard, by Representative CHARLES L. ABERNETHY.

Address by Admiral Billard.

Introduction of Capt. John Halligan, of United States Navy, by Dr. R. Duval Jones.

Address by Captain Halligan.

Introduction of Lieut. Gov. R. T. Fountain by Mr. W. F. Dowdy.

Address by Lieutenant Governor Fountain.

Presentation of de Graffenreid descendants by former Mayor Edward Clark.

Presentation of Mrs. William N. Reynolds, of Winston-Salem, by Mrs. Thomas G. Hyman.

Address by Mrs. Reynolds, and flowers presented to her by little Misses Sophia Sue Duffy and Hattie Lane Guion, these young ladies being dressed in colonial costumes.

Presentation of Mr. C. B. Dickson, of the Associated Press, by Representative ABERNETHY.

Address by Mr. Dickson.

Presentation of Hon. Josephus Daniels, former Secretary of the Navy by Mr. J. B. Dawson, editor of the New Bernian.

Address by Mr. Daniels.

Presentation of the legislative committee, and other distinguished guests by State Senator William F. Ward.

Address by former Lieut. Gov. Elmer Long.

Open houses were kept during the afternoon at 14 old homes, the Masonic lodge rooms, the Shrine home, the First Baptist Church, the Hollister house, Oliver-Attmore house on Broad Street, Stevenson house and Hyman house on Pollock Street, Duffy-Oaksmith house, Bishop-Emory house, Justice house, Hartsfield gardens, Moulton-Vail house, Jones-Smallwood house, Slover house, Bradham-Slover house, Duffy-Jerkins house, Lee house, said to have been headquarters of Light Horse Harry Lee of Revolutionary fame, and in fact every home in New Bern was open on this great day to entertain the thousands of visitors.

Buffet suppers were served in numerous homes for invited guests.

The stupendous and wonderful pageant was given out in the open Kafer Park at 8 o'clock at night under a blaze of high-powered electric lights. It was witnessed by at least 10,000 people. Nothing of the kind has ever been so successfully staged before in North Carolina, and it is doubted if any more successful affair of its kind by local talent has been given in the country. It was marvelous. The stage setting represented a forest, the trees being brought from a distance and transplanted for the occassion. This was under the supervision of Mr. Alfred A. Kafer, for whom the park was named.

The pageant portrayed New Bern in historic review.

The music was supplied by the Fort Bragg Military Band, of Fort Bragg (N. C.) Military Reservation.

It began with the dance of the Sprites of the Rivers Neuse and Trent.

PROLOGUE

Visions of scenes in homelands of early settlers—the first settlers of New Bern, including the colony under de Graffenreid, Quakers, French, Scottish, and English pass in review and intermingle, symbolizing the amalgamation of the nationalities.

Episode I: Time 1710. Depicts treaty between de Graffenreid and King Taylor of the Indians.

Interlude, dance of Carolina wild flowers.

Episode II: Time 1770. Ball at Governor Tryon's palace.

Episode III: Time 1774–75. Protest against unjust taxation. Scene 1—First Provincial Congress at New Bern, N. C., in defiance of royal proclamation, August 25, 1774. Scene 2—Committee of safety meeting at New Bern, spring of 1775.

Episode IV: Time 1777. The first State assembly at New Bern.

Episode V: Time 1791. Visit of Washington to New Bern. Scene 1—The arrival of President Washington. Scene 2—Ball in honor of President Washington.

Episode VI: Processional of years from 1800 to 1818. A review of prominent personages and outstanding events in New Bern during that period.

Episode VII. Historic New Bern—the past—the present—the future.

It is my deep regret that the permission extended me to place an account of this great occasion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD does not allow the full text of the pageant to be reproduced, together with the names of all those who took part. When one saw the great concourse who took part on the night of its rendition it seemed as if the whole city was reenacting the history of New Bern, and the wonderful cooperation bespeaks for New Bern's future many great things. I was proud of my home city.

A POEM BY JOHN J. DALY

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating therein a poem published in to-day's Washington Post entitled "A Toast to the Flag."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include a poem by John J. Daly published in the Washington Post of to-day entitled "A Toast to the Flag." The poem is as follows:

A TOAST TO THE FLAG

By John J. Daly

Here's to the red of it—
There's not a thread of it,
No, nor a shred of it
In all the spread of it
From foot to head,
But heroes bled for it,
Faced steel and lead for it,
Precious blood shed for it,
Bathing it red!

Here's to the white of it—
Thrilled by the sight of it
Who knows the right of it
But feels the might of it
Through day and night?
Womanhood's care for it
Made manhood dare for it,
Purity's care for it
Keeps it so white!

Here's to the blue of it—
Beauteous view of it,
Heavenly hue of it,
Star-spangled dew of it,
Constant and true.
Diadems gleam for it,
States stand supreme for it,
Liberty's beam for it
Brightens the blue!

Here's to the whole of it—
Stars, stripes, and pole of it,
Body and soul of it,
O, and the roll of it
Sun shining through,
Hearts in accord for it,
Swear by the sword for it,
Thanking the Lord for it,
Red, white, and blue.

FARM RELIEF AND TARIFF BILLS

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution adopted by the Farm Belt Federation of the farmers' organizations held in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, on the 11th day of June, 1929.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave given to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the resolution adopted by the Farm Belt Federation of the farmers' organizations, held in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, on the 11th day of June, 1929.

The resolution is as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY CORN BELT FEDERATION OF FARM ORGANIZATIONS, DES MOINES, IOWA, JUNE 11, 1929

We, the members of the Corn Belt Committee, which speaks for more than a million organized farmers, desire to say that, in our opinion, the so-called House farm relief bill as amended in conference, does not manifest the slightest effort to make the tariff effective in behalf of our surplus farm commodities, and without this the pledge of the Republican Party to assure equality for agriculture in the last campaign becomes utterly farcical. However, under all the circumstances, we have no desire to in any wise interfere with the passage or operation of this measure. Those who sponsor it are under a definite and solemn pledge to the farmers of America, and if they fail to live up to that pledge, the responsibility will be upon them.

We here and now reiterate the former position of this committee that the equalization-fee principle is the only one that will assure genuine equality to agriculture, make the tariff effective, and place the loss on the various farm surpluses where it belongs and where it will act as a deterrent against overproduction, and yet we deeply appreciate the courage of certain Members of the Senate who apparently realize that the only thing that will save agriculture from final and complete collapse is a higher price for what the farmer produces.

With reference to the House tariff revision bill, we desire to go on record as saying that it is the most indefensible measure of the kind ever offered in the history of Congress. Pretending to revise the tariff "in the interest of agriculture," certain selfish interests have been promised new advantages which are without conscience or reason, and which, if enacted into law, will mulct the consumers of the country, farmers included, out of hundreds of millions of dollars of additional tribute per year. In connection with both the pending farm relief and tariff legislation we have a feeling bordering on contempt for certain Corn Belt Congressmen, who throughout the special session have acted as mere errand boys for special privilege.

We redeclare ourselves for the principle of production cost which brought this committee into being, and which, properly interpreted, means that the farmer is entitled to the same living standard as that enjoyed by other classes in our great Nation.

F. W. MURPHY, Minnesota,
Chairman.
T. C. CASHMAN,
Vice President Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation.
CHAS. E. HEARST,
President Iowa Farm Bureau.
MILO RENO,
President Iowa Farmers' Union.
H. G. KEENEY,
President Nebraska Farmers' Union.
C. B. STEWARD,
Secretary Nebraska Farm Bureau.
RALPH SNYDER,
President Kansas Farm Bureau.

RESOLUTION PRESENTED FROM THE FLOOR BY MILO RENO AND ADOPTED BY VOTE OF THE FEDERATION

We call upon the farm leadership of the Nation to cooperate in working out a program of united action that will enable the farmers to obtain production costs.

We urge the farm organizations to intensify their efforts to increase membership to a point where farmers will have power, through organization, to bargain for fair prices.

If we can not obtain justice by legislation, the time will have arrived when no other course remains than organized refusal to deliver the products of the farm at less than production costs.

MANGANESE IMPORTATION

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, briefly, upon the subject of manganese.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, during the past two weeks I have received a number of letters from my colleagues making inquiries with reference to the figures showing the importations of manganese as given in my speech in this House on May 22. The statement has been made that the correctness of these figures has been challenged by a representative of the Bethlehem Steel Co. In support of his statement charging that my figures are incorrect, this representative of the steel company called his attention to "A table of imports of manganese ore" appearing at page 598 of Summary of Tariff Information, 1929, compiled by the United States Tariff Commission for the Ways and Means Committee.

When Bethelehem Steel sends a man to interview Members of Congress privately, particularly when such representative seeks to discredit statements made by a Member upon the floor of the House, it ought to see to it that such lobbyist knows what he is talking about; or if he knows, that he does not misrepresent and distort important facts upon which Members are asked to rely in forming their conclusions on important legislation.

The table of imports given by me is compiled from data secured from the Department of Commerce and shows the actual amount of dutiable manganese ore which arrived and was delivered at our ports of entry, and is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE FIGURES

Imports of dutiable manganese ore into the United States (manganese content)

Year	Total from all countries (gross tons)	Imports from Russia (gross tons)	Per cent of total
1922	374,451	1,642	0.4
1923	196,986	11,670	5.9
1924	231,303	41,097	17.8
1925	286,564	114,537	40.0
1926	347,378	122,345	35.2
1927	308,630	133,159	43.1
1928	159,842	79,529	49.8

Not all of this ore entered into channels of consumption during the year of delivery. A considerable part of it was placed in "bonded warehouses" to escape the payment of duty until such time as it should be required for use by the steel mills. These "bonded warehouses" are nothing more nor less, as a rule, than huge stock piles carried in the yards of steel companies, upon which the tariff is not paid until the ore is removed for consumption.

TARIFF COMMISSION FIGURES

The table of imports shown at page 598, Tariff Information, 1929, shows the following amounts of imports on which duty is paid, and includes the ore drawn from the "bonded warehouses":

Year	Rate	Manganese content
1922 (Sept. 22-Dec. 31)	1 cent per pound on manganese content.	18,124
1923	do	74,091
1924	do	213,436
1925	do	271,355
1926	do	291,230
1927	do	300,177
1928	do	268,176

The table of "imports" given by the Tariff Commission accounts for ore only upon which duty has been paid for a given year and has no reference to actual imports arriving from foreign sources at ports of entry. In some years more is imported than goes into consumption. This surplus goes into the "bonded warehouses" and is not accounted for by the Tariff Commission until drawn out for consumption, when the duty is paid. Other years less is imported than is consumed. This was notably true in 1928. During such years the steel companies withdrew ore from the bonded warehouses. During such years the Tariff Commission's table would show a greater tonnage of "imports" than arrived at ports of entry from abroad, as such "imports" would include not only the actual imports upon which duty was paid but the amount of ore drawn from the stock piles or "bonded warehouses." Some of this ore remains in the "bonded warehouses" for more than a year before it is drawn upon.

For example, the first table shows the actual imports of manganese (metallic manganese content) for the year 1928 as being 159,842 tons. The Tariff Commission table shows the "imports" of manganese for that year to be 268,176 gross tons, which figure includes actual imports upon which duty was paid at time of entry plus the amount of ore drawn from "bonded warehouses" upon which duty must be and is paid when withdrawn.

It will be observed that approximately half of the imports for 1928 came from Soviet Russia, whose agent in this country is Leonard J. Buck, son of the vice president of Bethlehem Steel. This explains at least in part why domestic producers found it impossible to secure contracts for domestic manganese from the steel mills. The falling off of dutiable importations was due in large measure to the importation of approximately 100,000 tons of manganese ore grading just below 30 per cent which came into direct competition with the producers of low-grade ore in this country.

If the Federal Treasury is not to be robbed and if domestic producers are to be protected, the duty of 1 cent a pound must be made to apply to all ore containing 10 per cent or over of metallic manganese instead of 30 per cent or over, as is now provided in the tariff measure. The duty should also be increased from 1 cent a pound to a cent and a half per pound. The whole subject is quite fully discussed in my speech on this floor on May 22 and need not be repeated here.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by incorporating a resolution passed by the City Council of International Falls, Minn., relative to the death of Henry Wirkkula.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I object. There is a way of presenting resolutions of city councils, legislatures, and so on, and to insert them here loads up the RECORD. I am sorry, but I feel I shall have to object.

Mr. GARNER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he can take the matter over to the Senate and have it put in the RECORD over there.

Mr. PITTENGER. That is an excellent suggestion.

HENRY M. GOLDFOGLE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On what subject?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. On the subject of the late Hon. Henry M. Goldfogle, a former Member of this House, who served in the House for 16 years.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, on the 4th day of June, 1929, it was my sad duty to accompany to its final resting place the body of Henry Meyer Goldfogle, late Member of this House, who died in the city of New York, on Saturday, June 1 last.

The life of Henry M. Goldfogle was forever devoted to the interests of the public and of his neighbors, to whom he was attached and for whom every moment of his time was given.

Goldfogle was born on May 23, 1856, in the city of New York, in the district which later on he represented in this House for over 16 years. It was in this district where he laid the foundation of his political career and it was there where he attended the public schools and was admitted to the bar when 21 years of age, in 1877. Goldfogle did not long remain an active practitioner, for 10 years later we see him elected as a justice of the old district court of the city of New York, which then became the municipal court. In 1910 he left the bench and was elected a Member of the House of Representatives from the district in which Judge Goldfogle was born and which I now have the honor to represent. He was successfully reelected to every Congress up to and including the Sixty-third, and in 1916 he declined renomination, and it was then that the Democratic Party first suffered defeat in the district and with war factors at its height, a Socialist was elected in his place, the late former Representative Meyer London. Two years later, Judge Goldfogle was again prevailed upon to make the race and he defeated London and returned to Washington. In 1920, however, Judge Goldfogle was again unsuccessful in making the race for Congress, and in June, 1921, the then Mayor John F. Hylan, of New York City, appointed him as president of the board of taxes and assessments, which office he held until his death on June 1 last.

This bare outline of Goldfogle's life does not exhaust the large number of philanthropic and charitable activities in which Judge Goldfogle was engaged. He was active in communal life in every sense of the word. He served as president of the Independent Order of B'nai B'rith, of the Rodeph Sholom Synagogue, which recently dedicated a new temple at Eighty-third Street and Central Park West, New York City. He was a member of the Independent Order of Free Sons of Israel. He was an active Mason and Knight of Pythias. He was associated with the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, Lebanon Hospital, the Montefiore Home for Incurables, the Home for the Aged and Infirm Hebrews, Beth Israel Hospital of the city of New York, and last but not least, with the Democratic club of his district, the John F. Ahearn Association, of which he was a devoted and untiring member. Goldfogle served as a delegate to every Democratic State convention from the time of his majority until his death. He served as delegate to a large number of national conventions. His party found in him an untiring and zealous member. There was no Democratic activity in the past 30 years in which the late Judge Goldfogle did not play an active and conspicuous part. He was always ready with word of advice and his labor to help the party in every capacity in which his help was required.

The greatest achievement of Goldfogle's life was when in the year 1910 he took the position that this country should abrogate its treaty with Russia because of its discrimination practiced against Jewish merchants who came from this country to Russia to do business there. Congressman Goldfogle took the stand that it was absolutely improper and contrary to good international manners to discriminate against people of the United States just because they may differ in religion from those whom Russia wished to do business with.

It was due to the untiring efforts of Henry M. Goldfogle that the Foreign Relations Committee introduced the resolution to abrogate our treaty with Russia, and it was Congressman Goldfogle who framed this far-reaching resolution which once for all determined the policy of our Government and people that we will not do business with any nation which will discriminate against our citizens simply because they may belong to different religious faiths. The response of the House of Representatives to Congressman Goldfogle's resolution in 1910 was wholehearted and emphatic, it passing by an almost unanimous vote, and universal praise was showered on Goldfogle for his courageous and outspoken stand.

While in Congress he was a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and rendered to that committee most valuable services, not only to the committee members but also to the Members on the floor when they dealt with immigration and naturalization. Although in great sympathy with the immigrant, nevertheless he always upheld the principles of his own Government, and brought about a great enlightenment to the many foreign residents in the United States and to their adopted country that loyalty to the flag and to the Republic must be one of their first principles.

I therefore see fit that before proceeding with the business of the day we cease for a moment from our daily deliberation so that we may express our sympathy and sorrow for the untimely death of Henry M. Goldfogle, a former Member of this House, who served with distinction.

CELEBRATION OF THE ONE THOUSANDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ALTHING

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Burtness resolution in regard to the Iceland commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, June 11, our genial and eloquent colleague from North Dakota Mr. BURTNESS delivered in his accustomed forceful manner an unusually brilliant address in connection with the consideration and adoption of House Joint Resolution 2, to authorize the President to accept the invitation of the Kingdom of Iceland to participate in the celebration of the one thousandth anniversary of the Althing and in connection therewith to present to the people of Iceland a statue of Lief Ericsson. During the course of his splendid speech my friend and colleague yielded to me and permitted me to make a statement in regard to the legend of St. Brendan, and in reference to what is believed by many scholars of note to be a veracious account of his discovery of what is known as the Americas—that is, the Western Continent—in the sixth century, A. D. The short statement has created such an interest among lovers of history and so much comment among those who evince a curiosity for more information with regard to any subject that happens to be thrust upon them as a surprise that I am constrained to gratify what I believe to be, in its last analysis, a thirst for historical information, which is the best evidence of literary leanings and inclinations.

I think that Congressmen BURTNESS, LAGUARDIA, of New York, and your humble orator owe thanks to the newspapers of the country for in many cases giving us and our colloquy the front page. Of course, there was no intention on my part to question the validity of the record that gives the immortal honor to Christopher Columbus, nor do I think that there was any serious attempt on the part of Mr. BURTNESS to challenge the accuracy of what the pages of history show for so many years and generations. But it goes without saying that the legends, traditions, sagas, stories, and folklore of St. Brendan's voyage across the Atlantic to the "Promised Land of the Saints," afterwards designated as St. Brendan's Island, in the sixth century, and that of Ericsson some centuries later had a stimulating effect upon the imaginations of mariners and sea rovers and had much to do as an inspiration with the great discovery in 1492 by Columbus.

To one who stands in front of a map of the world the realization comes almost with the shock of amazement that the distance between the islands off the coast of northwest Africa and those off the northeast coast of South America is not nearly so great as he had been wont to picture it. He is surprised also to note how far away from the shores of Portugal the Azores are and the islands of Bermuda are almost the same distance out in the Atlantic from the coast line of the Carolinas. His interest grows as he observes that between Iceland and Ireland and thence down to the Madeira Islands are a great many islands that might be stepping stones from the far north to the west coast of Africa, from which it was not impossible even in the sixth century to reach what is now known as South America.

A somewhat similar situation existed with reference to the West Indies and Bermuda which would not be remote from the Azores, particularly if some continent like fabulous Atlantis were lying between; and why, after all, is Atlantis a mere myth or fable? Are not many islands coming and going, appearing and disappearing with mournful solemnity and tragic rapidity or suddenness in all of the great oceans? Are there not many vast depressions even in the bed of the seas like that of Sigsbee's Sea, in the Gulf of Mexico, more than a mile deep, while the waters all around are relatively shallow. Can not one stand on the deck of a steamer right south of Yucatan Channel and see the green waters 1,000 feet away, indicating their shallowness, even while he is over a depth of a mile and a half, though the entire channel itself has scarcely more than 35 feet of water above its rock bottom.

The legendary voyage—though I repeat there are many who have asserted that it is historical and authentic—ranks among the most celebrated of the medieval sagas of western Europe.

Its traditional date is 565 A. D. The story is found in prose or verse, and with many variations in Latin, French, English, Saxon, Flemish, Irish, Welsh, Breton, and Scottish Gaelic. Several of its incidents are found in Arabic folk lore. Many of St. Brendan's fabulous adventures are said to be borrowed from the half pagan Irish sagas of Maeldune, and others are said to belong to Scandinavian mythology. One thing is certain. His adventures at one time were recited by more people than who now mention those of Marco Polo or even the mythical wanderings of Sinbad the Sailor. And St. Brendan's Island was long accepted as a reality by geographers.

Columbus in his journal for the 9th of August, 1492, states that the inhabitants of Hierro, Gomera, and Madeira Islands had seen the island in the west. Many old geographers placed the island in the West Indies. The universality of the belief that there is a hereafter is said to be the best proof of such an existence. So, too, might it be said that the universality of the belief in St. Brendan's Island in the gorgeous islands of the presently known Gulf of Mexico and its place in the literature of all the peoples of Europe and even of Asia shows that there must have been some foundation in such widespread credulity, for as Confucius said: "Respect superstitions, for they must have been founded on some good reason." In the fullness of time in the course of the ages St. Brendan, Lief Ericsson, and even Columbus will be forgotten for reasons given poignantly but convincingly by Pope in his Temple of Fame, "Nothing can withstand the constant, steady stroke of time." But let Shakespeare express the rumination:

> The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
> The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
> Yea, all which it inherit shall dissolve,
> And like this insubstantial pageant faded,
> Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
> As dreams are made on, and our little life
> Is rounded with a sleep.

But it is not entirely unprofitable to return to a mighty past of our ancestors as if we were transported on a magic carpet. We as the heirs and the serfs of all the ages feel the mutterings, the fears, the tremblings, and the thrills and throbs of many, many years ago. Vague yearnings take us back to St. Brendan, Lief Ericsson, Christopher Columbus, and the brave souls who loved the ocean because it was their home.

Just as we shall live in our children are the gallant men and women of other lands living in us. Let us honor St. Brendan and Lief Ericsson, but let us not dare forget Christopher Columbus. They still, like all the other dead, speak to us from their graves in mother earth, to which they have returned. Listen to Dan Marquis tell it to you:

> I have heard cries through the night in a tongue I can not speak
> And they knocked on my heart and blanched my cheek.
> I have dreamed dreams of a temple I can not name,
> Perchance it was Bel that dwelt therein
> Appareled in gold and flame
> Which is the life I live the more
> This visible life that seems,
> Or the hours when I drift at the whim of a shade
> Through the hurrying bourne of dreams?

THE STATUS OF NATIONAL ORIGINS

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the subject of national origins.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it shall be my purpose to give a brief résumé of the development of the national-origins question now that it is almost sure to become operative on July 1, 1929. This sense of assurance comes from the fact that the Senate on June 13, 1929, defeated the Nye resolution by a vote of 43 to 37.

In 1924 Congress passed the quota law which restricted immigration from all European countries to a definite number. So that each country might have its proportionate share quotas were fixed upon a basis of population. Students of the immigration question had for long sought some satisfactory basis upon which quotas might be established. A plan was finally worked out that appealed to Congress, and it was adopted. The plan was to appoint a committee of the most learned census men in our country and have this committee study the question with the aim of finding out what proportion of the American blood stream had been contributed by the people of the various countries. This committee was not held to the responsibility of tracing the descent of every individual. I am frequently asked by Congressmen and interested persons, "How do they count me, for I am part Irish and part German and part English?" and so forth. The committee was not expected to do this. The committee was expected to employ other methods more certain and satisfactory. It was recognized that it would require three or four years for this committee to do this work. A temporary plan was sought that might be used while the survey was being made. The law of 1924 contains two provisions as to how the quotas should be established. The temporary quota system was to continue until July 1, 1927. The permanent or national-origins quota system was to go into effect on July 1, 1927. Many Members of the present Congress voted for this bill.

This temporary plan was to allow each country an annual quota equal to 2 per cent of the foreign born of that country in the United States according to the 1890 census.

The permanent plan was to accept the quotas that this committee of experts might find that each country was fairly entitled to. The committee failed to conclude the survey by July 1, 1927, and an extension of one year was granted by Congress. They failed to conclude by July 1, 1928, and another extension of one year was given. They did conclude their survey and reported their conclusion before the expiration of that year. Agitation by antirestrictionists and others was begun and another effort was made to extend the time for another year, but that effort was thwarted in the last few days of the Seventieth Congress. Following this defeat the President issued the required proclamation declaring that on and after July 1, 1929, the new quota basis known as the national-origins basis should be employed to fix quotas and that the quotas of the respective countries would be changed as of July 1, 1929. Antirestrictionists and others continued their agitation in the special session of Congress, seeking now to repeal the national-origins clause. This was the real objection of all these antirestrictionists from the beginning, but they did not have the courage to attempt a repeal at first but they were encouraged by these two postponements. The Immigration Committee of the Senate refused to vote out the bill calling for repeal and voted to lay it on the table. Senator NYE sought to relieve the committee of further consideration of the repeal measure and introduced a resolution to that effect.

The question came in for much discussion in the press and over the radio and on the platform. The Senate debated the measure for days. Upon a vote on June 13 the Nye resolution was defeated by a vote of 37 to 43. That leaves bills for repeal of the national-origins provision of the law pending in the House and in the Senate. They will become a dead letter after July 1, for the provision will have gone into effect. This will in all probability be the end of this question that has called for so much discussion.

Much prejudice and bitterness of feeling has been engendered by those who seemed to see a discrimination of nationalities and races in this question. This line of argument was necessary and had no probative value whatever. I did not indulge in this kind of argument and do not now. Our country is great by reason of the contribution of immigration from all the countries. It was in no sense a question of which nationality was superior. It was simply a question of finding out how much of a quota each country should have considering the proportion of blood of that nationality in the total blood stream of the Nation.

In selecting the temporary plan the census of 1890 was accepted. This was an arbitrary selection, and it was accepted because the best available estimates at that time showed that under that census the various countries would have a reasonably fair representation. For instance, it was reported that the following countries would have the following quotas. I have taken these countries since they are most frequently referred to in any discussion of this subject:

England, Scotland, North Ireland, and Wales	41,772
Germany	45,229
Irish Free State	20,567

From another computation made on the 1890 census different quotas were published and accepted. They are as follows:

England, Scotland, North Ireland, and Wales would have	34,007
Germany would have	51,227
Irish Free State would have	28,567

This great difference was not noticed when the 1890 census was accepted, and if it had been there is no doubt but that the same would not have been accepted. When it was discovered no complaint was made, for it was recognized that this was only a temporary plan and that the permanent plan would soon go into effect. Those who argue that there have been several changes in the figures by the committee of experts who have given us the figures for the national-origins basis can receive little comfort from the wide difference between the first figures given us as a basis under the 1890 census figures and the figures finally accepted. No two experts will or can agree on how much of a quota Germany would be entitled to under the 1890 census, for the Germany of to-day is not the Germany of 1890. Territorial changes in Europe have been very extensive since the war. Sixty-six per cent of the territory of Europe has changed. It is absurd to state that anyone can determine with any accuracy whatever how many foreigners of each nationality were here in 1890 unless the same territory were considered now as under the 1890 census. No one separate census of the foreign born of the United States is a fair cross section of our population. A census of the native and foreign born would be more accurate. The only accurate plan would be to take all the censuses of both native born and foreign born. That is what the national-origins plan contemplates. The following table shows how absurd it is to accept any one census for foreign born as a basis:

Quotas according to different plans

	1890 census	1920 census	National origins
Germany	51,227	20,769	25,957
Italy	3,845	20,024	5,802
Belgium	512	778	1,304
England, Scotland, Wales, and North Ireland	34,007	16,957	65,721
Irish Free State	28,567	10,195	17,853
Norway	6,453	4,518	2,377
Sweden	9,561	7,769	3,314
Czechoslovakia	3,073	6,205	2,874

It will be noted that if the census of 1920 had been accepted Italy would have had a much larger quota than all of England, Scotland, North Ireland, and Wales. If the 1920 census had been accepted as a basis, the Italians in our country would to-day be clamoring for a repeal of the national origins law as discriminating against them. It would not be a discrimination, but would simply be changing an unfair system for a fair system. Other nationalities who were given a larger quota under the 1890 census than they were entitled to have objected to giving up this advantage for the permanent fair basis that would give to each nationality the number to which they are fairly entitled and have sought to retain this advantage by repeal of the national-origins plan. It must be remembered that the friends of the national-origins plan have sought no change or delay. All the agitation has come from those who do not want to give up their advantage gained under the 1890 census and accept their quotas under a fair, scientific basis established by a committee of the greatest census experts of the country after working five or six years on the survey.

The following table showing immigration into this country, by decades, will show how unfair it would have been to have accepted any particular census as a basis:

Immigration, by decades

Country	1820–1830	1871–1880	1881–1890	1891–1900	1901–1910	1911–1920
Germany	7,729	718,182	1,452,970	505,152	341,498	143,954
Great Britain	37,480	548,043	807,357	271,538	525,950	341,408

It will be noted that in the decade ending with 1830 the great bulk of immigration was from Great Britain and Ireland. At that time Ireland was not divided. A great Irish student of immigration, Reverend Shaughnessy, claims that the early Irish immigration was largely from North Ireland. If this is true, then the Irish quota of 54,338 should be divided so that about one-half or two-thirds of it should be added to the quota of Great Britain. If the quotas had been based on this decade, it would have been manifestly unfair to Germany, for Great Britain would have had probably 80 per cent of the total while Sweden would have had no quota at all. Likewise it will be noted that the crest of the German immigration was reached in the decade ending with 1890. Before that date the figures for Germany are much smaller and after that date they are much smaller. The same is true of Ireland and Sweden. It will be noted that the English immigration has been more constant. It must also be remembered that practically all the immigration before 1820 was English and Irish—practically no German immigration and no Scandinavian. It will also be noted that there was scarcely any Italian immigration before 1830. There was none in the Revolutionary period, but from 1900 to 1920 the Italian immigration exceeded all other countries. As heretofore stated, no single census is fair. No census for foreign born is fair. The 1890 system counts only the foreign born. The descendants of those who fought with Washington or who signed the Declaration of Independence are not counted, but the foreigners who have just landed or been bootlegged into the country are counted.

The national-origins plan seeks to count everybody from the Revolutionary period down to now. As stated before this is not done by tracing the ancestors of each individual living now. The law specifically provides how the computation is to be made. The law says:

> Such determination shall not be made by tracing the ancestors or descendants of particular individuals, but shall be based upon statistics of immigration and emigration, together with rates of increase of population as shown by successive decennial United States censuses, and such other data as may be found to be reliable.

Those opposing the national-origins plan have claimed that President Hoover, when Secretary of Commerce, had made an adverse report on the national-origins plan. The last paragraph of a report made by Mr. Hoover and others is as follows:

> We wish it clear that neither we, individually nor collectively, are expressing any opinion on the merits or demerits of this system of arriving at the quotas. We are simply transmitting the calculations made by the departmental committee in accordance with the act.

> FRANK B. KELLOGG,
> Secretary of State.
> HERBERT HOOVER,
> Secretary of Commerce.
> JAMES J. DAVIS,

It is also claimed that the experts who fixed the national-origins basis were not willing to vouch for their report. Here is what they say:

FEBRUARY 21, 1929.

The SECRETARY OF STATE.
The SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.
The SECRETARY OF LABOR.

SIRS: The committee which you appointed to determine immigration quotas on the basis of national origins as prescribed by the immigration act of 1924, respectfully submit the following report:

As a result of careful search carried on during the year that has elapsed since the previous report of February 25, 1928, was submitted, a limited amount of additional data, principally in the field of foreign statistics of emigration to the United States, has been obtained and utilized. At the same time the processes followed in utilizing census and immigration statistics, as explained in our previous report, have been reviewed and somewhat improved. As a result of the very considerable amount of effort thus expended, the figures previously submitted have been slightly revised. We are of the opinion that further study would not appreciably modify these results.

In addition to the statement herewith attached showing the quotas on the basis of national origin as determined by your committee, we submit two tables—namely, Table A, which shows the apportionment by country of origin of the total white population, distinguishing the colonial stock from the post-colonial stock and subdividing the latter into (1) immigrants, (2) children of immigrants, and (3) grandchildren and later generations; and Table B, which shows what part of the quota for each country is derived from each of the four population factors distinguished in Table A.

Respectfully submitted.

RICHARD W. FLOURNOY, Jr.,
S. W. BOGGS,
Representing the Secretary of State.
JOSEPH A. HILL, Chairman,
LEON E. TRUESDELL,
Representing the Secretary of Commerce.
W. W. HUSBAND,
ETHELBERT STEWART,
Representing the Secretary of Labor.

Since the commission of experts did not consider the ancestry of each and every individual it is only fair to inquire as to what plan was followed. The first computation made was a calculation as to how many foreigners were here as shown by the census for 1920 and how many children of such foreigners and how many grandchildren and great-grandchildren of foreigners. This could be easily ascertained from the census records and would cover in part three generations of people. This would take in more than half of the people of the country. Thus one-half or more of the population could be easily classified. If they had stopped here they would be far ahead of any plan based on any one census. For if they had stopped here they would have counted all the foreign born and about four times as many native born who were the children and grand children of foreign born. There were only about 8,000,000 considered in the 1890 census while the foreign born with their descendents equal more than 40,000,000. The remaining population was classified from earlier censuses and from numerous documents and records of immigrants kept by the Colonies.

The scope of the work done by this committee of experts is almost beyond the imagination of anyone not familiar with such work. About 25 years ago the Census Bureau, in collaboration with other experts, prepared and published a volume known as "A Century of Population Growth in the United States." This book is a large volume and contains the results of many months of research work by many experts. This volume contains tables showing the censuses taken in many of the colonies for decades before the Revolution. This national-origins committee verified much of this great work and studied many other historical works. They also made trips abroad to study records of steamship companies and every other available record that would lend any assistance to them in their effort to make an exhaustive study of the question. To suggest further study or to suggest that this report is not fair and not complete, is only to suggest that no man is perfect. We do not claim that the national-origins quotas are perfect, but we claim that they are as near fair as fair men can make them.

The following table will be found to be interesting as being illustrative as to how the committee arrived at the figures from which it derived the quota figures.

Total white population in 1920	94, 820, 915
Immigrants from nonquota countries	5, 314, 357
Total upon which quotas are based	89, 506, 558

	Totals for each country
	Basis for quota	Colonial	Post-colonial
			Immigrants	Children	Grandchildren and later
Great Britain, Scotland, Wales, and North Ireland	39, 216, 333	31, 803, 900	1, 365, 314	2, 203, 314	3, 738, 700
Germany	15, 488, 615	3, 036, 800	1, 672, 375	4, 051, 240	6, 728, 200
Irish Free State	10, 653, 334	1, 821, 500	820, 970	2, 097, 664	5, 913, 200
Italy	3, 462, 271		1, 612, 281	1, 671, 490	178, 500
Sweden	1, 977, 234	217, 100	625, 580	774, 854	359, 700
Norway	1, 418, 592	75, 200	363, 862	597, 130	382, 400
All others	17, 290, 179
Total	89, 506, 558

It will be remembered that the negro population is not considered in computing quotas. The figures above given represent the total white population as shown in the 1920 census. From this is deducted the immigrants from the nonquota countries like Canada and Mexico. That leaves a total of 89,506,558. That is the basis of the national-origins plan. The 1890 census plan is based on a population of 8,000,000 foreign born.

From these figures it will be seen that these experts found that the colonial stock increased thirteen times from that time to 1920. Therefore if it was ascertained that 10 per cent of the population of 1790 was of a certain nationality, it is only fair to assume that the descendants of that stock would increase thirteen times, which is the average taken for all the countries. No one can gainsay the fact that the colonial stock was overwhelmingly from the British Isles. If 85 per cent of those who signed the Declaration of Independence were from ancestors who came from the British Isles, would it not be fair to assume that 85 per cent of those now living who are descendants of colonial stock would be properly allocated to that class that would form the basis of the British quota? If there are 45,000,000 people in our country now whose ancestors were here in Revolutionary days, it is only fair to consider them as representative of the nationality from whence they descended. They should not be ignored just because it has been a long time since their ancestors came to America. If there are 45,000,000 such people, then this 45,000,000 should be divided up in the proportion to the number that each country had here then. Should Italy be assigned any portion of this number if there were no Italians here in colonial days? Should Sweden be assigned any portion of this number if there were no Swedish people in America then? Should Germany be allotted 30 per cent of this if the total number of Germans in the Colonies in colonial days was less than 10 per cent? A fair proportion is all any nationality is entitled to.

The principal source of differences between the honest advocates of these two theories arise from two sources. Those on both sides who get their opinions from their prejudices can easily find many grounds for their opinions and I am not concerned in enumerating them. The national-origins advocate claims that the 1890 census or any other census will not be fair. The opponent of the national-origins plan claims that while this plan is fair in its appraisal of about 50 per cent of the population, yet its appraisal is largely guesswork as to the other 50 per cent. There would be some reason for this assertion if the matter of making the appraisal were to be left to incompetents or to prejudiced persons. When it is shown that this task was left to the best equipped people in the Nation, this argument fails. While there may have been some mistakes in making this appraisal of those who descended from the colonial stock, still no one can dispute the fact that the early immigration into all the colonies was from the British Isles and that fully 80 per cent of the colonists were of that nationality. A study made by Reverend Shaughnessy, a noted student of statistics of immigration long before the national-origins question was ever heard of, gives us a good idea as to the number of Irish in America in the early times. He claims that there were about 550,000 Irish in America in 1790. Of this number he claims that 400,000 were from Northern Ireland. This statement justifies the finding of the committee that fixed the national-origins quotas. The total population in 1790 was 3,172,000.

It is claimed that Germany is discriminated against by the committee in its estimates of the descendants of the colonial stock. Doctor Faust, one of the greatest German students of immigration in the United States, made a survey of the German people in the country and has written extensively on the subject. His writings were published long before this controversy arose. He says that there were in the United States 350,000 Germans in 1790. This would mean that there were that number who spoke German as their native language. That would include a large amount of territory that is not now included within Germany. But for the sake of argument let us accept these figures just as this student gave them to us. Multiply 350,000 by 13, which is the figure accepted as representative of the growth of the colonial stock, we have the number 4,250,000. This would be all Germany could possibly claim as a basis of colonial stock. Deduct from this the population that rightfully belongs to the other territory taken from Germany since the war, the national-origins figure of 3,036,800 would be fair. But if no deduction is made, Germany can only have an increase of about 2,000, for the ratio for the number allowed to enter to the total population is as 1 to 600. The difference between 4,250,000 and 3,036,800 is 1,114,000. This number at the ratio of 1 to 600 would increase Germany's quota less than 2,000.

The legislator employs the same methods as the average man in arriving at conclusions. The legislator who believes in the restriction of immigration should be moved somewhat to accept the opinions of those agencies that he knows have always been interested in that program. He should know also what those who have always opposed immigration are doing. It is clear that every agency opposed to restriction of immigration is opposed to national origins. The program of restriction met with opposition from certain groups in Congress for years. These same groups are opposed to national origins now and will always oppose every movement tending to exclude aliens. The following is a list of those who protested against national origins to the Senate Committee on Immigration:

The Czecho-Slovakian National Alliance.
The Lithuanian Alliance of America.
The National Croatian Society.
The National Polish Alliance.
The Order of the Sons of Italy.
The Polish Citizens' Club.
The Ukrainian National Association.
The Clan-na-Gael.
The Ancient Order of Hibernians.
The United Irish-American Societies.
The American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic.
The Swedish-American Societies.
The Order of the Sons of Norway.
The Church Council of the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran Church.

A list of those who favored the acceptance of the national-origins plan as being the best plan to keep America American contains the names of practically very patriotic organization in America. I have made the statement that every patriotic organization in America favored the national-origins plan and I have yet to see any evidence that this statement is not true.

The following is a partial list of the dozens of organizations that have indorsed this plan:

The American Defense Society.
The American Legion.
The American War Mothers.
The American Legion Auxiliary.
The American Gold Star Mothers.
The National Allied Veterans' Patriotic Organization.
The Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York.
The Chicago Association of Commerce.
The Colonial Daughters of the Seventeenth Century.
The Disabled American Veterans of the World War.
The Daughters of the Cincinnati.
The Daughters of the Colonial Wars.
The Daughters of the Union Veterans of the Civil War.
The Government Club of Chicago.
The Order of Independent Americans.
The Immigration Study Commission of California.
The Junior Order of United American Mechanics.
The Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic.
The Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States.
The Military Order of the World War.
The Home Mission Society of the Methodist Church, 400,000 strong.

The following excerpt from the Senate hearings is also of interest in this connection:

COPY OF MEMORIAL TO THE PRESIDENT, THE SENATE, AND THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, DATED JANUARY 4, 1927

We, the undersigned, all citizens of the United States, impressed with the vital importance to the country of maintaining and perfecting the present system of immigration restriction, respectfully submit to the President of the United States, to the Senate, and to the House of Representatives, the following expression of our views with respect to specific aspects of this question.

1. We urge the extension of the quota system to all countries of North and South America from which we have substantial immigration and in which the population is not predominantly of the white race. We believe that without such extension the present restriction of immigration is already inadequate and will become increasingly so in the near future. During each of the last two fiscal years we have been admitting upward of 75,000 immigrants from Mexico, the West Indies, Brazil, and elsewhere, who are for the most part not of the white race and who, because of their lower standards of living, are able to compete at an advantage with American workers engaged in various forms of agricultural and unskilled labor.

2. We further urge the prompt putting into effect of that provision of the immigration act of 1924, whereby the quotas, after July 1, 1927, at present determined by the number of foreign born of each nationality here in the year 1890, are to be adjusted so as to conform to the officially estimated number of persons now in the country of each national origin, either by birth or descent. We believe that this permanent basis for fixing the quotas, already provided for by law, is sound in principle and fair to all elements in the population. Only by this method can that large proportion of our population which is descended from the colonists and other early settlers, as well as the members of the newer immigration, have their proper racial representation in the quotas. We believe that Congress wisely concluded that only by such a system of proportional representation in our future immigration could the racial status quo of the country be maintained or a reasonable degree of homogeneity secured. Without such basic homogeneity, we firmly believe, no civilization can have its best development.

It is unfortunate that this question engendered some personal feeling between certain groups of our citizens, but that is inevitable when a public question is one involving personal interests. Now that the contest is practically over for this session of Congress, let it be hoped that the national-origins plan will be given a fair chance to operate. To my mind there can be no question but that the new quotas will go into operation without the least friction. We will have put our quotas on a firm, scientific basis. If further restriction is necessary, it can be done scientifically, and, I hope, without any intimation as to superiority or desirability of nationalities.

AID TO DRAINAGE AND LEVEE DISTRICTS

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on Government aid to reclamation districts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, the landowners in many drainage and levee districts throughout the Nation are facing disaster. These districts were organized in good faith and for the commendable purpose of reclaiming overflowed land and making them productive, thereby increasing the food supply of the American people and incidentally augmenting our national wealth. The lands in these districts, as a rule, are exceedingly fertile, and, if protected from seasonal and periodical overflow, very productive.

Most of these reclamation projects were inaugurated at a time when agriculture was prosperous, when farm commodities commanded high prices, when "land hunger" was acute, and when the Government newspapers, and business interests were urging the agricultural classes to increase production of food commodities in order to supply what seemed to be an ever-increasing demand. After many of these projects were inaugurated and after the reclamation work had been completed or was well under way the deflation came, and in its wake economic disaster to the agricultural classes in general, and particularly to those whose lands were embraced in drainage and levee districts, and which lands were subject to heavy benefit assessment and taxes.

If high prices for farm products had continued, the income from most of these lands would have enabled their owners to meet their drainage taxes and to have completed and made effective their plans for reclamation. But the low price of farm commodities coupled with the high prices the farmer must pay for his supplies have so reduced the net income of these landowners that they are unable to pay their drainage and levee taxes and are now losing their lands, which in many instances represent the earnings and accumulations of a lifetime. In many instances the cost of constructing the proposed system of drains and levees has been so great and the income from the partially reclaimed land has been so small that the landowners have been unable to meet their drainage taxes or to complete the plan for reclamation so as to make it effective and protect their lands from overflow.

As a result the average owner of land in a reclamation district organized in recent years has found himself tightly wedged between the upper and nether millstones and unable to extricate himself from rapidly approaching financial disaster. Thousands of industrious, well-meaning men and women have lost their lands or are about to lose them. And this situation is doubly pathetic when we consider that many of these men and women are approaching old age and have passed the point in life when they are able to suffer this loss, begin life over again, or to accumulate property for their support in their declining days.

Now, there is no question as to the potential value of these lands, and their reclamation sooner or later is as certain as that night follows day. These large areas will not be given over to idleness and nonproductivity. These lands have a part to perform in the great problem of producing the food which is absolutely necessary to satisfy the hunger of mankind.

The bonds issued by the districts bear an average interest rate of 6 per cent, and the security behind them when properly developed is not only adequate but worth many times the aggregate bonded indebtedness of the district. When times get better and these projects are completed these lands in nearly every instance will be protected from overflow and made dependable for the production of large crops annually. These reclamation projects are fundamentally sound and sooner or later will be consummated.

If these landowners are given time, they will in most cases be able to work out their problems, meet the bonded indebtedness, and save their lands. But the majority of these landowners can not do this without help. We should not sit idly by and see these landowners lose everything they have in this world in an effort to reclaim waste lands and add to the comfort and wealth of the American people. We should not permit these lands to revert to a state of nature and become once more unproductive. We should not allow these rich fields to be again filled with stagnant, disease-breeding ponds, lakes, and swales.

In order to enable these landowners to save their land and to complete these worth-while reclamation projects the landowners must not only have time but a low rate of interest. The Federal Government has heretofore come to the aid of the railroads, the manufacturers, and big business. Certainly these men and women who in good faith endeavored to reclaim these waste places are entitled to some consideration at the hands of the Government. These large bodies of land, of great present and potential value, must not be allowed to become again a waste and wilderness. I favor constructive farm relief legislation which will place agriculture on an equality with other industries, and certainly right here we have a splendid opportunity, without loss to the Government, to grant relief to a deserving group of farmers who are about to lose everything they have in the world.

I have introduced a bill, H. R. 3967, which if enacted will afford the landowners in these reclamation districts substantial aid, and without any loss to the Government. My bill proposes to authorize the appropriation of $200,000,000 as a revolving fund to lend to the drainage and levee districts to enable them to refund their outstanding bonds at a low rate of interest and over a long term of years. The Government can lend this money to these drainage and levee districts and never feel the outlay. For a generation the Federal Government has been extending aid of this kind to the irrigation districts throughout the West, actually constructing the necessary work, including canals, ditches, and necessary reservoirs, and paying for them and giving the landowners 40 or 50 years to repay the Government for these outlays. My bill marks no departure from the well-settled policies of the Government.

These loans will run not to exceed 40 years, bear 3 per cent interest, and, of course, a sinking fund can be provided that will retire these bonds and fully reimburse the Government long before the expiration of 40 years. My bill throws around these loans all the safeguard that prudence, wisdom, and good business methods suggest.

I am convinced that this plan is feasible and will, in the end, not cost the Federal Government a dollar. Its adoption will save these lands from sale for drainage and levee taxes, insure the completion and success of these reclamation projects, and enable the districts to meet their obligations.

Bear in mind, my bill does not propose to make any donations to these drainage and levee districts or to the individual landowners. It merely provides that the Federal Government shall for the time being come to the aid of these districts, lend them the money necessary to refund their bonded indebtedness at a much lower rate of interest than the district is now paying, and to "tide over" the district until conditions improve.

I realize that the President and his party leaders will not permit Congress to consider any legislation at this session except that relating to farm relief, the tariff, the census, and reapportionment, but I hope my bill may be considered on its merits at the next session of Congress. Later on I will discuss the details of this legislation in the hopes that the merit of this measure may be recognized. In my opinion, it is only a question of time until Congress adopts this policy, and why not do it now before the present owners have lost their land?

MISSISSIPPI SOLDIERS BURIED IN AMERICAN MILITARY CEMETERIES IN EUROPE

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a list of the Mississippi soldiers buried in Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, Mississippi will always be found loyal and patriotic when the welfare, peace, honor, or any interest sacred to the Republic is involved. Mississippi statesmen are first at the councils of peace; her soldiers and sailors are always at the front of our battles; her children are cradled in patriotism, devotion, love, and pride in the Nation's glory. There has never been a call upon the resources of America when this great State did not respond most cheerfully and abundantly with its manhood, wealth, effort, and devotion. In the War with Mexico Mississippi did not only present more volunteers than the Nation accepted, but sent the great arm of this great Nation's Army into the plains of Mexico to battle and to die in the glory of the victories of Buena Vista and Monterey. The matchless generalship and discipline of those Mississippians will forever glitter like shining stars on the pages of our country's history, chronicling the deeds, heroic valor, and victories of the American soldier. No State in the Union sent to the Spanish-American War superior soldiers and sailors to those who willingly went in great numbers from the Magnolia State; none were more determined to achieve the glorious victories of our Army and fleet.

When the World War broke out, and long before the draft act was passed, hundreds of Mississippians had volunteered and were on the very front firing line of that bloody vortex. When the Congress and the great President Woodrow Wilson declared war with the avowed purpose of this Nation "to make the world safe for democracy," then it was the gallant sons, the very flower of Mississippi, came tramping cheerfully from every city, village, and hamlet, from every vale and hilltop, patriotically answering the Nation's call to duty. They bid adieu to kin and friends, unmindful of perils and forgetful of the dangers ahead, hurrying across to the very first firing line of this frightful, stupendous, and awful engagement, determined to place the Stars and Stripes a perpetual symbol of our glorious motives and willing to do this at any sacrifice. Hundreds of Mississippians were in the forefront fighting and dying when the armistice was heralded on the 11th day of November, 1918.

Many of her noble sons paid the supreme sacrifice with their sacred lives. Those who so nobly fell, yet so young, so brave, now sleep in foreign cemeteries near those awful battle fields. They fell, an honor to our Nation, heroes for all time. They are and shall ever be held first in loving remembrance in the saddened hearts of all Mississippians.

With his usual efficiency and kindness the Quartermaster General of the United States Army has furnished me with a list of those Mississippians who so gallantly gave their lives in order that democracy might never perish from off the face of the earth.

The names, organizations, and grave locations as well as the cemeteries are given by the department, as follows:

I am glad the Congress of the United States appreciated the love and sentiment of the loved ones of these gallant boys and so generously provided that the mothers and widows of the sleeping heroes will be permitted to make a pilgrimage at the expense of the Government to the last resting place of their departed sons and husbands. The Seventieth Congress did itself and the Nation honor when it enacted this law. That the loved ones of these dead so richly deserve this consideration is beyond question, and every true American rejoices in the contemplation of their journeying to these last resting places, the holy ground, sanctified by the blood and valor of these heroic Americans.

The law as enacted is as follows:

Public Law No. 952, Seventieth Congress (S. 5332)

An act to enable the mothers and widows of the deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines of the American forces now interred in the cemeteries of Europe to make a pilgrimage to these cemeteries

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to arrange for pilgrimages to cemeteries in Europe by mothers and widows of members of the military or naval forces of the United States who died in the military or naval service at any time between April 5, 1917, and July 1, 1921, and whose remains are now interred in such cemeteries. Such pilgrimages shall be made at the expense of the United States under the conditions set forth in section 2.

SEC. 2. The conditions under which such pilgrimages may be made are as follows:

(a) Invitations to make the pilgrimages shall be extended in the name of the United States to the mothers and widows for whom the pilgrimages are authorized to be arranged under section 1.

(b) Upon acceptance of the invitation the mother or widow shall be entitled to make one such pilgrimage; but no mother or widow who has previous to the pilgrimage visited cemeteries described in section 1 shall be entitled to make any such pilgrimage, and no mother or widow shall be entitled to make more than one such pilgrimage.

(c) The pilgrimages shall be made at such times during the period from May 1, 1930, to October 31, 1933, as may be designated by the Secretary of War.

(d) For the purpose of the pilgrimages the Secretary of State shall (1) issue special passports limited to the duration of the pilgrimage, to mothers and widows making the pilgrimages and to such personnel as may be selected to accompany and/or arrange for the pilgrimages, if such mothers, widows, and personnel are citizens of the United States, and (2) issue suitable travel documents, if aliens. No fee for either of such documents or for any application therefor shall be charged. Such alien mothers, widows, and personnel shall be permitted to return and be granted admission to the United States without regard to any law, convention, or treaty relating to the immigration or exclusion of aliens, if the return is made within the period covered by the pilgrimage of the particular group or, in the case of personnel, within such times as the Secretary of War shall by regulation prescribe; except that in any case of unavoidable detention the Secretary of War may extend in such case the time during which return may be made without regard to such laws, conventions, or treaties.

(e) The pilgrimages shall be by the shortest practicable route and for the shortest practicable time, to be designated by the Secretary of War. No mother or widow shall be provided for at Government expense in Europe for a longer period than two weeks from the time of disembarkation in Europe to the time of reembarkation in Europe. In the case of any mother or widow willfully failing to continue the pilgrimage of her particular group, the United States shall not incur or be subject to any expense with regard to her pilgrimage after such failure.

(f) Vessels owned or operated by the United States Government or any agency thereof shall be used for transportation at sea wherever practicable.

(g) Suitable transportation, accommodations, meals, and other necessities pertaining thereto, as prescribed by the Secretary of War, shall be furnished each mother or widow included in any pilgrimage for the entire distance at sea and on land and while sojourning in Europe and while en route in the United States from home to port and from port to home. Cabin-class accommodations shall be furnished for all transportation at sea. No mother or widow shall be entitled, by reason of any payment made by or for her, to be furnished by the Government with transportation, accommodations, meals, and other necessities pertaining thereto different in kind from those prescribed by the Secretary of War for the pilgrimage of the particular group.

(h) All pilgrimages shall be made in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe as to the time, route, itineraries, composition of groups, accommodations, transportation, program arrangements, management, and other matters pertaining to such pilgrimages.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act. The Secretary of War is directed to make an investigation for the purpose of determining (1) the total number of mothers and widows entitled to make the pilgrimages, (2) the number of such mothers and widows who desire to make the pilgrimages and the number who desire to make the pilgrimages during the calendar year 1930, and (3) the probable cost of the pilgrimages to be made. The Secretary of War shall report to the Congress not later than December 15, 1929, the results of such investigation.

SEC. 4. As used in this act—

(a) The term "mother" means mother, stepmother, mother through adoption, or any woman who stood in loco parentis to the deceased member of the military or naval forces for the year prior to the commencement of his service in such forces.

(b) The term "widow" means a widow who has not remarried since the death of the member of the military or naval forces.

PATENTS UPON OIL-SHALE LANDS

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of patenting oil-shale lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on August 9, 1920, the first patent for oil-shale land was issued by the United States. At that time there was one other application pending, upon which patent has not been issued up to this day. Over seven years elapsed before the Government defined its objections or charges against that application and gave the applicants an opportunity to file an answer and request a trial. My information is that lands covered by this application have been worked to a large extent; retorting devices have been built and used from which oil has been produced and marketed.

On November 14, 1921, the second patent to oil-shale lands was issued by the United States, and a year later a third one was issued. These first three patents covered oil-shale lands adjoining the 45,000 acres of United States naval reserve of oil-shale lands.

During 1922 and 1923 a number of applications for patent were filed, upon all of which except three patents were issued. One of these three, known as the Krushnic case, is now pending in the United States Supreme Court awaiting hearing and decision upon the question whether an owner of oil-shale lands, the title to which was initiated prior to passage of the leasing act of February 25, 1920—being Public, No. 146, Sixty-sixth Congress—was required to perform annual assessment work upon said lands after the passage of the act.

Section 37 of that act reads as follows:

* * * deposits of * * * oil shale * * * shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws, including discovery.

The foregoing citation indicates the foundation for the opinions of many lawyers that the leasing law made no change, and was not intended to change the then existing requirements concerning the performance of annual labor or assessment work upon mining claims.

My remarks are not intended to be construed or quoted in the pending litigation, but are in support of a bill, H. R. 3754, introduced by me for the purpose of affording a means to facilitate a prompt disposition of over 100 pending applications which have been contested, protested, or suspended on account of reports by inspectors of the land office that their measurement of quantity and estimate of value of assessment work indicates that less than $100 worth was done upon certain claims during annual assessment periods designated.

Said H. R. 3754 is as follows:

H. R. 3754

A bill concerning applications for patent upon oil-shale lands

Be it enacted, etc., That section 37 of the act entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," approved February 25, 1920, being Public No. 146, Sixty-sixth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, however, That if contests, protests, or charges on account of lack of discovery or insufficient assessment work shall be filed or made by representatives of the Department of the Interior against any application for patent for oil-shale lands, which was filed on or before the 25th day of February, 1929, the applicant for patent shall be notified of such charges, and in such notice there shall be stated the amount of value estimated by said representatives of the cost of making discovery and/or the additional assessment work to be performed, and the applicant for patent shall therein be given the opportunity to do the required additional assessment work and/or complete discovery, and have the same completed within six months next ensuing after the date of receipt of such notice by such applicant for patent, or in lieu thereof, to pay to the Government the amount so estimated, and upon payment or tender by such applicant to the register of the General Land Office of the amount so estimated, in addition to all other fees and payments now required by law, on or before the expiration of six months from the date of receipt of such notice, patent shall be issued to such applicant."

Nor do I intend that this discussion shall be used to support the contentions of either of the parties to the pending litigation in the United States Supreme Court. The Government having been successful in the lowest court, and the applicant for patent having been successful in the circuit court of appeals, it is my purpose to submit for consideration a plan which will be eminently fair to the Government and recognize the industrious work of the inspectors of the Land Office, and also recognize the good faith of all of those prospectors and investors who have in fact spent many times the amount of money required by the Federal statutes for annual assessment work, but now, on account of the lapse of time, absence, and death of witnesses, and other reasons which enter into controverted questions when they are long drawn out, it seems to be fair to the applicants for patent to permit the Government's contention to stand without further question, and allow the applicants to pay certain designated sums of money, which, I believe, all will concede, will cost the applicants for patent a great deal less than if all of these pending cases are put to trial, such living witnesses as are available transported from all parts of the United States to some place for trial, or the lawyers representing the many claimants required to travel thousands of miles for the purpose of taking depositions, and ought to produce a tidy addition to the Government's receipts in the Interior Department.

By Federal statute and a long line of decisions, the law had become established that failure to perform annual assessment work did not invalidate any title to mineral lands in favor of the Government. Only another bona fide location made while the default continued was considered sufficient to destroy the old title and initiate the new. The question of title was solely between private claimants to the lands, and not between the Government and either claimant.

I believe it is conceded that in almost every case the applicants for patent have in good faith done all that was humanly possible to do to obtain the performance of every legal requirement as to location, discovery, and annual assessment work. I know of no pending case in which it is charged that the applicant merely did the $500 worth of work required before patent may issue and deliberately disregarded the doing of annual assessment work in any year prior to the filing of his application.

In the pending cases 76 applicants have paid over $150,000 to the Government as the purchase price for 63,047.75 acres of lands entered and have received their final certificates therefor. Until this situation arose final certificates of the United States had been considered in law and in equity as the equivalent of good title. Local county assessors have entered the lands covered by these final certificates upon their tax rolls, and the holders thereof have been required to pay local taxes amounting to over $10,000 annually upon the very lands which are the subject of the suits or contests filed. Needless to say, further development of these shale lands has been effectually stopped; it is a long time since the erection of a new experimental or other plant for the eduction of oil from the shale.

Up to the close of the year 1924, 51 patents had been issued covering 53,869.05 acres of oil-shale lands. Then the Commissioner of the General Land Office commenced a policy of refusing to issue patents, clear list cases, or define charges against pending applications. The application of this policy resulted as follows:

One patent was issued, covering 160 acres, in 1925.

Two patents were issued, covering 805.17 acres, in 1926.

Ten patents were issued, covering 11,144.06 acres (most of which went to one man) in 1927.

Four patents were issued, covering 981.76 acres, in 1928.

Four patents were issued, covering 10,649.72 acres (of which one patent alone covered 9,354.52 acres) in 1929.

During the past five or six years lawyers representing applicants and the applicants themselves have been in consultation frequently with departmental officials in or near the oil-shale lands and at Washington, either requesting that charges against applications be defined and made the subject of contests or attempting to answer questions and furnish data requested by the Government. Numerous complaints of denials of justice were made during these years. Finally, during the spring of 1927, a large number of contests were filed charging insufficiency in assessment work. Upon 11 of the applications for patent filed before 1928 the protests of the chief of the field division had not yet been supported by a formal contest.

From present available information it appears that not one of the contested or protested applications mentioned above has yet resulted in a final determination. In many of them no trial has been had. In several cases where the lawyers desire trial the Government has seen fit to postpone trial. In others lawyers representing applicants for patent have been responsible for the requests to postpone trial. In practically all cases the lawyers for both the Government and the applicants have agreed to postpone trials until final decision of the Krushnic case or the final disposition of collateral litigation and claims.

In most of the contests filed a charge is made that annual assessment work was insufficient upon some or all the claims for one or more years prior to the date of application for patent. As I stated before, these charges are based upon the reports of the inspectors employed by the Government who go upon the ground, measure the work, and render their opinion as to its value. Frequently, their opinion shows much lower values than those set forth in the affidavits of the men who actually did the work.

For example, one locator found it advisable to build a pack trail to his work. His costs warranted him in stating that the cost, and therefore the value, of the work was 25 cents per foot of trail. The Government's inspector was of the opinion that the work was not worth 1 cent per foot, and therefore credited only $10 for 1,000-foot trail instead of the $250, which the locator had spent. If the inspector's opinion of value prevails, practically three oil-shale placer mining claims would be disqualified unless the locator should litigate the question with the Government and at the trial produce as witnesses men who had actually done some of the work in clearing out brush and making the trail; these men would be required to remember what wages they received for their work and the legal description or names of the exact locations which the trail was intended to benefit; they must be able to withstand a stiff cross-examination concerning facts which will be from three to seven years old at the time they testify; and when each leaves the witness stand he must leave enough unimpeachable testimony in the record to withstand its attempted destruction by the expert inspectors of the Government whose basis of attack is the theoretical amount of work that one man or a group of men might do in a given time and the theoretical value of work done on mining claims.

The question which the applicant for patent finds himself called upon to answer is, How can I meet the opinion of value testified to by Government inspectors based upon measurements of work made years after it was done? Where can I find men who can testify about the effects of erosions, snowslides, avalanches, landslides, and other acts of winter and weather that have changed, if not entirely obliterated the work of years gone by? Remember, that no charge of an inspector can amount to more than $100 per claim per year. Therefore if no assessment work was credited by an inspector, his charge might be put in the following language: During the five years after February 25, 1920, you were required to do $500 worth of work. None can be found. Or perhaps the inspector would find that the value of the work in 1921 was $60; in 1922, $80; in 1923, $100; in 1924, $60; and in 1925, $70. As a matter of dollars and cents, it is practically impossible to transport the witnesses and one lawyer representing the applicant for patent to the place of hearing for the $130 difference. Understand that all of the applicants for patent have already paid to some workman the full $100 for claim for doing this work.

Here is another interesting example: Some people in Indiana purchased the title to several oil shale placer mining claims. They had the abstract of title examined by lawyers who rendered an opinion that the seller had a good mining title to convey, and informed their client that it was necessary for an owner of such claims to have annual assessment work performed to the amount of $100 upon each claim each year. Also that the work for the ensuing year must be completed during the month of December. The purchase was completed shortly after December 1. The new owner then commenced negotiations by mail with local men to find someone who would undertake the performance of his assessment work and have it completed by December 31. The arrangements were made and a contractor employed who undertook to complete the work within the required time. He hired a number of men, sent them up on the cliffs, went up himself, and laid out the work and the work was performed. The contractor prepared and swore to the affidavits required by law; these were filed in the county clerk's office, and upon delivery to the new owners' agent, the money for the work was paid.

After this owner's application for patent was filed, the inspectors reported that upon some claims the amount of work was insufficient and upon others, none could be found. The owners had investigation made at some expense and then communicated with officials at Washington. The Commissioner of the General Land Office suggested no relief. The Department of Justice and the post-office inspectors took a hand. The result was an indictment in the United States court charging the contractor with using the mails to defraud. At the trial the Government proved the correspondence between the owner and the contract and the use of the mail for transporting the money and the affidavits. Then its experts testified as to the deficiencies and the omissions in the assessment work. The contractor submitted as witnesses some of the men who had actually worked upon the ground who testified about the wages received and other details; all told of the inclement weather and the amount of work that had to be done in ice and snow and of other facts which interfere with manual labor in the mountains in the wintertime. Upon the conclusion of this testimony the judge immediately dismissed the defendant. But the applicant for patent has not yet been able to satisfy the Department of the Interior that his annual assessment work of the year was performed and no patent has yet been issued to him.

Numberless other interesting examples of the injustices caused by the delays in filing contests and affording trials to applicants for patent.

Not long ago the mayor of one of the towns in the oil-shale district stated that between five and six millions of dollars had been spent upon oil shale and its development in that vicinity during the past 12 years. Tons of oil shale had been furnished by these applicants for patent at their own expense for the experimental work conducted at the University of Colorado and the Colorado School of Mines in cooperation with the Bureau of Mines. This very day the Bureau of Mines is submitting its annual cooperative agreement to the Governor of the State of Colorado for his signature providing for the funds from the United States and the State of Colorado for conducting the experimental work next year at the University of Colorado, which furnishes in addition to the governmental money the personal labor, services, and study of hundreds of students and several very well-informed professors, as well as a thoroughly and scientifically equipped experimental plant and laboratory. At Ruilson, Colo., the Bureau of Mines built a long tramway for its mining operation to produce its own shale for use in two experimental retorts erected and operated at an expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars in demonstrating the processes of obtaining oil from shale.

In visiting the oil-shale district 14 camps may be found; 4 long aerial trams; 9 experimental retorts; and 2 or 3 rather expensive and extensive plants that have been in operation.

I have submitted a copy of H. R. 3754 to officials at the Department of the Interior for their careful consideration, and I ask that each of you who is interested in public-land matters will give this bill and the remedy proposed therein your very careful consideration, and submit any suggestions which may help to clear up this situation of 106 applications for patent filed between 1920 and 1929, among which there are 66 untried contest cases and 17 cases in which the protests have not yet been supplemented by contest.

I submit the following interesting table which shows the number of and acreage included in every application for patent of oil-shale lands filed at the Glenwood Springs and Denver land offices and the year in which each was filed or patented:

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, sometime during the afternoon I shall ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill that was called up yesterday afternoon and to which there was objection.

Mr. DOWELL. May I ask the gentleman if that is one of the bridge bills?

Mr. DENISON. It is the Senate bridge bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman briefly state what that bill is? I should like to know what the situation is with reference to the bill.

Mr. DENISON. It simply extends the times for building some bridges already authorized.

Mr. DOWELL. It has no further purpose than to extend the times of construction?

Mr. DENISON. No.

SURVEY OF ESCAMBIA RIVER

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3671) to authorize and direct a survey to be made of the Escambia River and its tributaries, Alabama and Florida.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Escambia River and its tributaries, Alabama and Florida, with a view to the control of floods in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of an act entitled, "An act to provide for control of the floods of the Mississippi River, and of the Sacramento River, Calif., and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1917, the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire whether this resolution has been approved by the committee which would have jurisdiction of the same?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. It has been approved by Mr. REID of Illinois, who will be the chairman of the Flood Control Committee when the committee is organized, and also by the ranking Democratic member of the committee, Mr. WILSON, of Louisiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman tell me who it is he says is chairman of the Flood Control Committee?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. REID of Illinois.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And how did he become chairman?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. He is not the chairman during this special session, the committee not being organized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then he is not acting in his capacity of chairman, is he?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Not technically so; no.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has he called any meeting of the members who were Members of the last Congress and members of that committee?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. To my knowledge, he has not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. So the member who was chairman and who expects to be chairman some day has given his consent?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. He has done more than that. He has made an investigation of this matter and called in the engineers of the Army to investigate it, and this bill really was prepared by the engineers of the Army subject to the approval of Mr. REID of Illinois, who went into it thoroughly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Still further reserving the right to object, I will make this observation. We started into this extraordinary session of the Congress with a much proclaimed announcement that the number of committees to be organized would be extremely limited to three or four, and the membership of the House seems to have accepted that.

In the meantime we have gone on without committees being organized and passed considerable amount of legislation, much of which I think has been necessary. Now the pressure, after we have been here several weeks, is more and more for legislation that is urgent and necessary. It is a very hard position for one to stand here and object or delay or call attention to this emergency legislation. I am reserving the right to object for the purpose of particularly calling attention to this peculiar situation, this extraordinary situation, that this special session is in. I think the proposal for a long recess which has simmered down to three days' recess with a guaranty that there will be nothing done——

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman waited a long time to make this statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am doing this in the interest of orderly procedure. I am not going to object to this survey on account of the flood conditions in this district, but if I heard the bill right it covers some other river——

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Oh, no; only one river, one emergency.

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he has consulted the Republican leader?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I have consulted with the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] and he has no objection.

Mr. MAPES. And the gentleman from Connecticut understood that the gentleman from Alabama was to ask unanimous consent to call up the bill?

Mr. HILL of Alabama. He did. I took it up with him.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time, and passed.

A motion by Mr. HILL of Alabama to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 95

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 95.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Chair let me explain to the gentleman from Washington that this joint resolution deals with agriculture. I am quite sure the gentleman from Washington would not object to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Speaker has declined to recognize either of us.

Mr. HOWARD. Because I love my Speaker, I am glad the gentleman from Washington took the burden of objecting to the passing of legislation in behalf of agriculture.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY REORGANIZATION

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX] for 30 minutes.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and if the House will give me permission, I ask unanimous consent to have my time extended 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended 10 minutes, making 40 minutes in all. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I am a Democrat, representing some 400,000 people in the American Congress. I supported my party's candidates for President and Vice President at the recent election. By a substantial majority they carried the district I represent in Congress. My own nomination was by the free individual ballots of the people cast in their respective communities, and my election was by a majority some 17,000 votes greater than the party's candidate for President received. I speak as an unpretentious representative of the party and Member of this House, but with a commission better authenticated by my own constituents than any given by them to any other person. Moreover, I know them better and am more attached to them than is any other person here.

My voice may be lost in this Hall and among the 120,000,000 people of the United States. But I believe the circumstances make it my duty to speak. Moreover, my conviction and judgment so thoroughly approve what I am about to say, that I must say it. The consequences will have to take care of themselves.

The Washington Post of June 3, 1929, reported that a great Democratic reorganization drive was to be launched by Hon. John J. Raskob at a national dinner to be held in Washington, Monday night, June 10. Some features of this announcement and the dinner itself are worthy of attention. Because the statements in this write-up bear evidences of having been written or inspired by those responsible for the dinner and connected with the proposed drive, and in the confidence of Chairman Raskob and his lieutenants, because what is said harmonizes with the general trend of the doings and declarations of those responsible for the present national party organization, and because these are all in tune with much that was said and done at the dinner, I am taking these statements as declaratory of the purpose of Mr. Raskob's party administration.

First. I note that there is to be a reorganization drive, downward from Mr. Raskob through the ranks to the precincts. While millions of Democrats have been hoping that a movement from the ranks would result in a new national leadership, this announcement makes it plain that Mr. Raskob and his supporters intend to reorganize the party to suit themselves rather than have its national organization reorganized to suit the party. Therefore the people interested in the party's activities and purposes should take notice that the Raskob administration proposes to do the reorganizing, which is exactly the opposite of being reorganized out of control. The people may now look around them for evidences of this shaping of the Democratic Party to make it more to the liking of Mr. Raskob and the régime which he heads.

Second. The movement seems to be well financed. These last words, when spoken concerning Democratic Party movements, will sound strange to the ears of those who have become accustomed to seeing their party embarrassed for lack of funds with which to carry on its fight for the principles and purposes which have kept it alive and vital for successive generations, notwithstanding its shortness of funds. The party has heretofore lived on principle. Mr. Raskob has no Democratic principle to promote among the American people to supply new energy to the party, but he seems to have easy access to the sources of finance and to rely on that.

This announcement contains the statement that Mr. Raskob has virtually succeeded in paying off more than $1,150,000 of the debt with which the party came out of the recent campaign. Present activities, other evidences, and recent announcements indicate that, in addition to funds for debt paying, the party has, or will have, some hundreds of thousands of dollars for unusual activities beginning far in advance of the next election. This nation-wide drive to reorganize the party clear down to the precincts, so shaping it as to make it suit Mr. Raskob's purposes promises to be well financed. It is announced that the reorganization is to be along General Motors lines.

In its platforms and campaigns the Democratic Party has heretofore demanded the publication of campaign contributions. The sound principle on which this demand is based applies to all considerable sums contributed to a party for campaign purposes, whether the money has already been expended or some or all of it is to be hereafter used for political purposes. Democrats and all others have a right to consider who is paying large sums of money into its treasury, to the end that they and the country may consider the source and motives of the party's financial backing.

Every Democrat wants the party's debts paid, but no sound-minded Democrat wants its honor stained, or any obligation or embarrassment laid upon it by an unexplained transformation suddenly lifting it out of its honorable poverty in such a manner as to make honest people wonder what is the secret of its new financial strength.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. I can not yield at this time, I regret to say to the gentleman from New York.

Contributions appear to have been regularly reported in compliance with law. Even if the most critical examination of them presents no just ground for criticism, Democrats and the country should consider this element in the situation in view of the pending well-financed drive to "Raskobize" the Democratic Party, from the election precincts to the presidency.

There is still no profession that Mr. Raskob is anything but a Republican of the high-finance type, with no interest in Democratic principles; though without sufficient depth of political conviction to prevent him from trying to defeat and destroy the party in which he believes. If it is not his purpose to endanger his own party and subvert his own political faith, then his purpose is to so handle the Democratic organization as to degrade it by perverting it to some unworthy purpose, or to destroy it so that it can not soon become a dangerous opponent of his own party.

Either of these purposes makes him utterly unworthy to be the head of the Democratic Party and would make the party unworthy to live if it should knowingly and permanently accept such leadership.

The purpose to extend into every precinct of the Nation the organization controlled by Mr. Raskob and his coterie will excite the interest of Democrats the Nation over. Is it to be a great outworking of the patriotic determination of the masses of Democrats to have the spirit and traditions of their party make themselves militant and efficient in promoting and applying to Government the maxims which have made the party a master force for justice, freedom, equality, and soundness in the Nation's political life? No. The plan is to "General Motorize." A man or group of men who could cover the aspirations of the Nation's liberty-loving Democratic millions into a figure of the General Motors' money-gathering machine never felt or has long since lost the spirit which wrote the Declaration of Independence and formulated the fundamentals of the Democratic articles of faith.

The facts that the party's financial resources have usually been limited, that its obligations have been so hard to pay, and that under unconverted Republican liquor leadership the party seems to be moving into easy financial street, make the demand for a careful study of the present situation and the proposed reorganization the sharper.

What are Democrats to do about this situation? Shall we submit to have our party dominated by such an aggregation, representing that which is hateful to the Democratic hosts and sound-minded Americans of all political names, falling submissively and basely into the column, marching behind such leaders and be led into dishonored oblivion?

Shall we fight like men for the things in which we, our constituents, and countrymen believe? Shall we give up our party, with its origin in colonial times and its history of high service through 140 years, and let it now go into the keeping and menial service of whisky rings, captained by the bosses of high finance, void of Democratic political conviction? If we quit in the hour of its peril we are not made of Old Hickory American stuff.

If my dissatisfied and sickened fellow Democrats of every State will hear the counsel of an unpretending servant of the party and Nation, I implore them to fight, not to submit; to fight, not to retreat. Let the Democrats of the Nation, each and all, take a new attitude and begin to fight for the control of their party. They should go into every precinct primary election and convention and see that the local organization is placed and kept in hands worthy and representative of the party's best purposes. Let them follow that plan in their county, district, and State political activities and perform in each place parts worthy of the party and its best men and women.

If suitable candidates for precinct, county, district, and State chairmanships and for offices from constable to governor are not offered, let them bring out suitable candidates and see that they are elected. The people can rule the Democratic Party if they do not develop weak knees.

I must say that the party needs leadership. If those of us whom the people trust with these places are so afraid of losing them that we will sell our part of the earth and our hope of paradise hereafter in order to hang on to these offices, then our people and our cause will suffer for leadership until the people can find or develop other men worthy to be followed.

The Republican Party has not the confidence of the country and is not worthy of it. Look at this shameful tariff bill. I am advised that more than 75 per cent of the press expressions condemn it as unworthy. I believe that a large majority of this House knows it to be filled with enough wrongs to make its character distinctly bad. Yet a helpless and coerced majority of "Tom, Dick, and Harry" Republicans and an equally helpless minority are powerless. The outrages upon decency by successive Republican administrations have seemed to have the indorsement of the American public. Does the public indorse that party and its doings? Or is it afraid to trust the Government at all in the hands of a party which can be handled as Mr. Raskob and his coterie are now handling our organization?

The Democratic Party needs to be redeemed, regenerated, and revitalized. The Nation needs a great American Democratic Party, whose leaders are statesmen, ruled by something bigger than a desire to hold on to the offices and having purposes larger than some sectional or local interest. May it find such leaders elsewhere if it sees they are not here.

Democratic people need to become interested and alert and to assert their patriotism and power in local, State, and National party affairs and in seeking out suitable men and women for key places in the party organization and in official life wherever they are lacking.

If Democratic people are not satisfied with those of us who have represented them in high and low places, they should retire us and promote men more to their liking. What becomes of me or a whole generation of men whom the party and people have honored is not very important, but the future of a historic party, organized by a generation of nation builders, working in official and private life, which has piloted and served the Republic with devotion and wisdom for 130 years, is a momentous thing. Therefore I call on the people to preserve the party, even if it means the retirement of leaders who have been tried and found wanting in courage and capacity to cope with this difficult and perilous situation for the party and Nation. May I say a word of caution? This situation came on gradually after a long series of party calamities. It is by no means certain that anybody could have prevented it. The common sense and justice of the people will make them careful about abandoning men who have proven true through the years. Not every pretender could have avoided this situation or would deal wisely with it now. Such emergencies often involve political parties and nations in spite of the best work of their wisest.

In view of the great interest involved, may I make some suggestions as to the wisdom and unwisdom of certain attitudes of some of the elements of the party? Several millions of Democrats refused to support the party's nominee for President. I believe there is a definite plan to drive them permanently away, in order that the elements now in control may have supreme sway. If these millions of Democrats leave the party for good, it will be politically bankrupt. There are millions of dissatisfied ones who did not leave it, but who are aggrieved and will never accept as permanent the present party leadership, nor any essentially like it in character. Shall each of these attempt to ostracize the other? No better way than that can be found to complete and perpetuate present control and pass the organization into a permanent leadership which neither knows nor loves its principles, and has no share in its purposes. Democrats who agree with the party fundamentals and disagree with certain provisions of the Constitution of the United States dealing with intoxicating liquor, and who also disagree with the country's settled policy to restrict immigration, should cease their efforts to pervert its mission to one or two unwholesome bloc purposes, one subversive of the Constitution, and the other believed by a majority of both parties, to be perilous to American character and institutions.

Political parties maintained for the sake of officeholders and to dispense advantages to those who profit by favoritism in lawmaking and administration are despised by a good citizenship and dangerous to government.

The only worthy purpose of political parties is to promote certain views of government believed by their adherents to be good for the Government and people. A leadership which does not believe in the tenets of the party is like a group of atheists running a church, disbelieving its creeds, and opposing its essential purposes. Leaders who disagree with the fundamentals of their party creed, or have no party faith, are fast creating the public impression that there is no essential difference between contending parties, except a scramble for official preferment, and for the opportunity to profit as brokers in legislative and administrative advantages. Such men are making a mockery of party politics. They cause all kinds of political abortions, and are sapping confidence in Government, and preparing the way for the European bloc system; which will result in instability and disorder, to be followed by things still worse.

If the men who rule the Republican assemblage of blocs in the two Houses of Congress believe that their path would be easier by the permanent disruption and dissolution of the Democratic Party, they have fallen into error. If the membership of this House were all called by one party name, they would tear party fences and administration programs to pieces every day. Political chaos would rule Washington and the country. They would have a farm bloc, a bloc north of the Ohio and east of the Mississippi, a hyphenated bloc, an antialien bloc, a wet bloc, a dry bloc, a labor bloc, a Catholic bloc, an anti-Catholic bloc, and other blocs and groups which would make party policies and programs impossible, and result in indescribable injury to the country.

The rules of this House would have to be radically changed, and even the Constitution would have to be rewritten or destroyed, probably by degrees, by legislative and executive violence and strained judicial construction. The patriotic student of our affairs shudders when he trys to forecast the consequences of a break-up of the great two-party system which has existed since the infancy of the Republic.

The effort of Mr. Raskob and his régime to have the Democratic Party abandon its fight for individualism, for a just distribution of the burdens of taxation, for moderation in tariff duties, and for general economic justice and soundness, and change the party into an instrument of the Association Opposed to Prohibition, working for the liquor interests; and make it also the representative of groups opposed to the restriction of immigration, is an effort to divert it from its larger mission and make it merely the organization of the liquor and anti-restriction blocs.

More than three-fourths of the Democrats of this House voted for the Volstead Act and have on every proper occasion voted to sustain it; and in so doing represented a like proportion of their Democratic constituencies. To use the party as a liquor bloc would be a perversion and degredation.

For many years a majority of the Republican Representatives in Congress have supported the restriction of immigration; but the Burnett Immigration Act of 1917, with the literacy test and other restrictions, was passed by a Democratic Congress who believed in restriction strong enough to pass the act over the veto of a powerful Democratic President.

An overwhelming majority of the Democratic membership supported the immigration act of 1924, and still stand by the law in spite of all efforts to break it down. Yet the Raskob coterie tried to distort the party's position into one of opposition to restriction of immigration as that idea is embodied in the immigration act of 1924.

I now tender proof of the statement just made. Will the membership of the House, especially the Democratic membership and the Democrats of the country, hear and consider what I present as evidence in support of this statement?

The acceptance addresses of Mr. Hoover and Mr. Smith both disclosed evidences of an effort to cater to the un-American elements in our population. Mr. Hoover openly denounced the permanent quota basis of the act of 1924, and Governor Smith denounced the temporary quota basis of that act, to wit, the 1890 census basis; and both left room for uncertainty as to their attitudes in certain matters vital to the restrictive system. Therefore the representatives of the great patriotic societies of the United States addressed inquiries to both, asking for the amplification and clarification of their statements on this all-important question.

As I am dealing now with the efforts of Mr. Raskob and his lieutenants to degrade the Democratic Party into a liquor, anti-immigration restriction bloc, in violent disregard of the well-known views of a large majority of Democrats on both subjects, I shall confine myself to the response given by Democratic headquarters under the domination of Mr. Raskob and his coworkers.

A night letter of Mr. John B. Trevor, chairman of the citizens committee on immigration legislation to Gov. Alfred E. Smith, dated September 13, 1928, contains the following:

> On August 23 I wired you care of Democratic National Committee as follows: May I ask for information of citizens committee on immigration legislation whether your declaration is to be interpreted as an indorsement of the national-origins provision embodied in the act of 1924? This provision represents an honest effort by Congress to end discrimination against any race, people, or creed. It is based on the American people and not a census of the foreign born at any arbitrary date. The Republican candidate has raised the issue and advocates its repeal. Do you advocate restriction on immigration from Mexico and South America? Do you advocate prompt deportation of alien criminals? The organization I represent is strictly nonpartisan and cooperates with patriotic and fraternal societies East and West. Answer 50 words collect. Receiving no acknowledgment or reply I sent a copy to Franklin Roosevelt, who wrote September 1 he would try and ascertain action. Not yet advised as to your position.

Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt on September 24, 1928, telegraphed apparently in answer to the telegram sent to Governor Smith, quoted above, saying in part:

> I understand it is Governor Smith's intention to make his stand on immigration exceedingly clear very early in the campaign and no inference is to be drawn from his failure to find time to answer your telegram before he left. Doctor Moskowitz, who has been in close touch with the governor on the immigration question, has given me the following to forward to you and I think you may safely rely that he correctly represents the governor's attitude. Mr. Hoover, in his acceptance speech, favors the 1890 quota which is favorable to the Germans and Scandinavians and less favorable to the English than the national origins law based on the 1900 census. Mr. Hoover does not wish to open the quotas. He is content with the existent quota of 1890. This quota is doubtlessly aimed to restrict the number of immigrants from southern and eastern Europe who came into the country in large numbers since 1890.

Governor Smith's position on immigration is similar to Mr. Hoover's, first, on his objection to the separation of families, and, second, on the existence of the present restrictive policy. It differs from Mr. Hoover's in so far as the quota of 1890 was aimed to discriminate against certain nationalities. By inference the governor favors a juster distribution upon the basis of the existing population and not of a census taken 38 years ago. Justice is on his side, for it defeats discrimination against any race or nationality.

Mr. Roosevelt apparently did not regard his answer to the telegram of the citizens' committee on immigration legislation as complete. He seems, therefore, to have sought the advice of some one else connected with national Democratic headquarters as to a further answer to that telegram, and on the 25th day of September, 1928, telegraphed or wrote the following communication:

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
1775 BROADWAY, AT FIFTH STREET,
New York City, September 25, 1928.

JOHN P. TREVOR, Esq.,
11 East Ninety-first Street, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. TREVOR: Supplementing the message which I wired you to Dublin, but which was returned undelivered and forwarded to you at your New York address, Representative CELLER has to-day handed me the inclosed memorandum, covering practically the same points which you raised, and which seems to me to very completely supplement the information I have already sent you.

Yours very truly,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The name "John P. Trevor" is reprinted as in the original instead of correctly "John B. Trevor."

The man to whom Mr. Raskob's lieutenants, including Governor Roosevelt, referred this important matter was the gentleman from New York, Hon. EMANUEL CELLER, a Member of this House. That gentleman's answer is so long that it is impossible for me to quote it all here, but I shall give the House enough of it to show that Mr. CELLER and Governor Roosevelt, writing from Democratic national headquarters, in answer to a letter addressed to Governor Smith, interpreted the Democratic position and the position of its candidate for President on this all-important question to be one of hostility to both the temporary quota basis of the immigration act of 1924 and to the permanent quota basis of that act, to wit, the national-origins clauses. The idea of immigration restriction as embodied in the act of 1924 was severely criticized by this minority, assuming to speak for the masses of American Democrats.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. I do not yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Do I understand the gentleman refuses to yield at any time?

Mr. BOX. I do.

I quote from Mr. CELLER's statement forwarded by Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, with his communication of September 25, 1928:

Taking as a quota basis the census of 1890, 38 years old, instead of the last census, to wit, that of 1920, was an attempt to discriminate against nations from southern and eastern Europe, because nationals from that part of Europe came here in goodly numbers only after 1890. The census of 1920 would have shown no partiality. It was even suggested that the census of 1890, of 1900, of 1910, and 1920 be taken and an average struck. This proposal unmistakably would have avoided the playing of favorites.

* * * * * * *

The present immigration act was passed in 1924, effective July 1 of that year. For well-nigh four years it entailed endless hardship, misery, and suffering by separation of families. After four years of striving and pounding at the doors of the Republican administration, with immigrants here asking to be allowed to put their arms around their loving fathers, mothers, and children, then, and only grudgingly, did the Republican administration give us the so-called Jenkins bill, effect about June 1, 1928. We asked for bread and were given a stone. This bill, amending the original act, in the main only allows preference to fireside relatives within the quota. In countries like Italy, Poland, and Russia, where the quotas are negligible, it will take years before families are reunited. Meanwhile the ocean divides these people and a most discriminatory, heartless immigration act keeps them asunder.

* * * * * * *

Our present immigration act, striking a blow at such family life, in that sense should be amended.

* * * * * * *

The immigration act of 1924 is discriminatory enough, but that discrimination was increased manifold by the provision contained therein of fixing quotas by the application of the theory of "national origins," subdivision B and C of section 11 of that act, commonly called the "national-origins clause."

It will be noted that those under Mr. Raskob at national Democratic headquarters were discussing with some millions of patriotic Americans a question which these organizations and a majority of their fellow Americans of both parties regard as vital to the preservation of distinctively American institutions. Interpreting the Democratic position as hostile to the national-origins clause, hostile to the 1890 census basis, and hostile to practically every part of the immigration act of 1924, which is essentially restrictive. Indeed, if you take both of these quota bases out, and then allow all near relatives of our 15,000,000 foreign born to enter the country, little of the 1924 immigration act will be left. On September 27 the chairman of the citizens' committee on immigration legislation sent Governor Roosevelt a message from which I quote:

I wish to acknowledge with thanks your telegram of September 24 and supplementary letter of September 25 inclosing memorandum by Representative CELLER. I assume views embodied therein are the official interpretation of Governor Smith's position and the opinion of the Democratic National Committee on the immigration problem. * * *

The gentleman from Texas now addressing the House, in supporting the candidate of his own party for President, after seeing the acceptance addresses of both candidates, and knowing the line-up of both, had declared that he could follow neither the Democratic nor Republican candidate in dealing with liquor and immigration legislation. Had he then known that Democratic headquarters, speaking by Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, of New York, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], had declared against both the 1890 census, the temporary quota basis, and the national origins, the permanent quota basis, and against other fundamental parts of the immigration act of 1924, he would have been in a much more difficult position than he did occupy.

Gentlemen, the Democratic Party is infinitely greater than any bloc; much more does it, with its great history of service, tower away from the pettiness of a mere liquor or antirestriction bloc, but its present manager, with his lieutenants, are seeking to belittle it to the latter petty and hideous proportions.

American Democrats of the past have been a warlike host. If we would prove worthy as descendants of the party's and Nation's founders, we must not sulk like children nor quit like cowards. Democrats must fight to preserve their party. In so doing, they will reflect credit on themselves and serve the country, saving it from the calamity of the party's break-up, from the danger of having its party and congressional government break up into a system of petty blocs, and from other perils too grave to be complacently viewed. [Applause.]

FARM RELIEF, THE TARIFF, AND RAILROAD RATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. RUTH PRATT). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] for 15 minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Madam Speaker, one day out on the prairies of Nebraska I received a command from the President of our country, a command to come down here to Washington in my representative capacity and aid my President in carrying out a program which he felt would be for the welfare of the country. Later I listened to the reading of the message which my President addressed to this House, and in that message I discovered a statement that the object of the call of our President to the Members of the Congress was so plain that none of us knowingly need be deceived as to the meaning of it. The meaning of it was that our President found the great industry of agriculture languishing, and he called us here to aid him in lifting agriculture out of the ditch and placing it upon the firm footing of exact equality with every other industry in our country, so far as the hand of Government is concerned.

There came before the House the so-called Hoover farm bill. I voted for it. Why? Because it was the best and the only opportunity I had to answer the call of the President to aid him in promoting the welfare of agriculture. With reference to that bill, Madam Speaker, I believe it is possible that it might advance the welfare of agriculture if a board shall be appointed which will conduct itself and conduct the business which it will be appointed to perform with an eye single to the welfare of agriculture. On the other hand, I have a great fear that if the board shall fall into evil hands, the board may be as damnably destructive to agriculture as that other aggregation of governmental high-binders was when it got control of the Federal reserve bank and employed that control for the purpose of criminally deflating agriculture.

What was our next step in trying to carry out the desire of the President to work in a legislative way the welfare of agriculture? He had asked us to enact legislation along the lines of the tariff solely with reference to working the welfare of agriculture. We came here, and this House, instead of carrying out the request of the President, has enacted into law, so far as this House is concerned, a tariff bill which contains, according to a statement made by one of our President's closest personal and political friends, Mr. Mellett, editor of the Washington Daily News, everything which the President had said it should not contain. I voted for the President's farm bill. I am glad I did. I am going to hope for the best. I am an optimist, and never a pessimist, and yet I do not see much room for that high degree of optimism which I would like to hold right now. Came a day when I thought I could do something to better the farm bill. I found the betterment in what we have referred to as the debenture plan, so I voted for that, still hoping to make the President's farm bill a better bill.

Why did I vote for the debenture plan? I will give just as plain an answer to you, my colleagues, as I would to one of my constituents if he should ask me; and I think if one of my constituents should propound that question to me I would say that I voted for the debenture plan for two reasons: First, in the hope that by the aid of that plan I felt the President's farm bill might be made a better bill; and second, I voted for it because my study of the tariff problem through the years has led me to the unquestioned conclusion that no American farmer in the history of the tariff, save alone those few who are farming sheep, has ever been able to pick up even a crumb of comfort or profit from underneath the tariff table. I felt that if we could adopt the debenture plan and get that plan to working, then Mr. Farmer would not need to scramble around for the crumbs underneath the tariff table but could walk right up to the table and demand a piece of roast turkey and a piece of cherry pie in his own right. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. How has the tariff operated upon the butter produced in this country? Has the gentleman looked into that?

Mr. HOWARD. Quite thoroughly.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman explain to the House what effect the tariff increase of 12 cents a pound on butter has had upon the price of butter?

Mr. HOWARD. I leave to the gentleman from Minnesota, who voted for a tariff bill which will spoliate his own people, the best answer to the question that he asked.

Mr. KNUTSON. But that does not answer my question.

Mr. HOWARD. It answers the question in my way, I will have the gentleman understand.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I say to the gentleman from Minnesota that the 12 cents a pound on butter made people eat oleomargarine and other substitutes, and has decreased the consumption of butter in the country, and the figures will bear me out.

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. He is always kind, and I shall let his answer be my answer to the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Does the gentleman think that is an argument that the tariff has raised the price of butter?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will say that it has raised the price of butter.

Mr. KNUTSON. I hope this all goes into the gentleman's speech.

Mr. HOWARD. If the gentleman would not run away so quickly, as is his habit, he might be further enlightened.

Mr. KNUTSON. Oh, I am smoking, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HOWARD. Madam Speaker, so that I could continue my effort in behalf of the cause of agriculture I introduced House Joint Resolution 95, directing the Interstate Commerce Commission to grant immediately to the products of the American farms the same reduced rail freight rates that have been granted to the products of the Steel Trust for export. What happened? I tried day after day to get this resolution before the House, knowing that immediately upon its appearance before the House and upon a vote thereon there would not be six votes in the House against the resolution.

But do I get consideration? No; I do not. I have asked my kindly Speaker again and again for the privilege of moving immediate consideration of this resolution. He does not recognize me for that purpose. Who is responsible for the failure of the American farmers to get the benefit of this resolution—to get the benefit of reduced rates on farm products from the point of production to the seaports for export? Who is responsible? Why, there can be no doubt about the big responsibility. It lies on my Speaker and your Speaker, because of his refusal to grant me recognition to move consideration. Will it do for our Speaker to say that this House was called together for the purpose of passing only such legislation as particularly referred to the welfare of agriculture? Oh, I wish he would make that declaration, because then I believe he would recognize me to move immediate consideration of this resolution.

But here we have seen our agreeable Speaker recognize gentlemen for the purpose of moving immediate consideration of legislation touching almost everything in the world except agriculture; and yet when we come to ask for consideration of this resolution dealing with a problem which would instantly work the welfare of agriculture, our Speaker smiles, and he smiles again and says, "No."

Mr. DENISON. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. I am sure the gentleman from Nebraska does not want to be unfair to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. HOWARD. Oh, no.

Mr. DENISON. Well, the gentleman must realize that his resolution involves a complete departure from the past policy of the Government, namely, that of Congress entering upon the policy of rate making. Heretofore all rates have been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This resolution would take that power away from the Interstate Commerce Commission and start Congress itself upon the policy of rate making, which it has never done before; that would involve such a controversial matter that the Speaker would not be justified in recognizing the gentleman to move the consideration of such a resolution, which has not been considered by the proper committee of the House.

Mr. HOWARD. This is the question I wish to propound to the gentleman from Illinois: Does he understand that this Congress has absolutely given over its sole right to say anything about railroad rates?

Mr. DENISON. It certainly has. All jurisdiction over railroad freight rates is now in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HOWARD. Subject to the Congress.

Mr. DENISON. We have delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission by law the power to make rates.

Mr. HOWARD. Yes; but the Interstate Commerce Commission is the creature; and the creature is never above its creator.

Mr. DENISON. I am sure the gentleman, if he gives the matter further thought, will see the danger and the mistake of undertaking to take out of the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission this very delicate and difficult question of rate making.

Mr. HOWARD. What are we to do? Here is the situation: We know that the Interstate Commerce Commission has granted to the steel and iron products, principally the products of the Steel Trust, special reduced rates on shipments for export, and we do know that that rate is needed for products of the American farm.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may proceed for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman suggest to his colleagues from the North that the Interstate Commerce Commission functions under powers given to it by Congress?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That the very law under which they are granting these rebates that he refers to is a law passed by Congress——

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Several years ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes; several years ago.

Mr. DENISON. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Surely.

Mr. DENISON. I am sure the gentleman from Nebraska does not want a statement that is not entirely accurate to go out. The gentleman should know that the commission did not put into effect the export freight rates on steel to which he has referred. Those rates were put in by the railroad companies themselves for their own purposes. The commission did not even authorize them.

Mr. HOWARD. If the railroads can put in such rates for the benefit of the Steel Trust, I as a Representative of a quarter of a million farm folks am going to come here and ask that they do something for the benefit of the farm folks, which I have the right to do.

Mr. DENISON. The railroads have recently put into effect export rates on wheat, greatly reduced, in the hope of benefiting the farmers.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman tell me the amount of that reduction?

Mr. DENISON. I have not the figures here. I have them at my office. I am going to ask permission to give them to the House. They are from 30 to 35 per cent lower on wheat. It is the railroads themselves that have done it.

Mr. HOWARD. The railroads make our rates, do they?

Mr. DENISON. They make their rates, publish them and file them with the commission for 30 days, and if no objection is filed in 30 days the rates go into effect.

Mr. HOWARD. Then the Interstate Commerce Commission has no power of initiating rates of its own?

Mr. DENISON. The commission has the power to initiate rates, but its time is so occupied that it does not ordinarily find time to initiate rates.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman tell me, if he knows, one single instance in the history of the Interstate Commerce Commission, save the one to which he has referred, when this Interstate Commerce Commission has reduced voluntarily the rates on farm products?

Mr. DENISON. I will state to the gentleman from Nebraska that the Interstate Commerce Commission did not itself reduce these rates on agricultural products. The railroads themselves have done that and they have done it on other products intended for export.

Mr. HOWARD. Then what would the gentleman say is the functioning business of the Interstate Commerce Commission if it does not reduce these rates but lets the railroads handle that themselves? That is a sad situation.

Mr. DENISON. If the gentleman were to ask me what are the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I would have to refer him to the hundreds of provisions of the interstate commerce act. It has so much to do it can hardly do the work that is assigned to it.

Mr. HOWARD. I do not know so much about the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission, but I do know a good deal about the actions of that commission, and always they seem to be inimical to the welfare of the shippers and the producers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In reply to the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, the entire rate structure of the railroads is under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and if they arbitrarily and voluntarily unduly reduce the rates, as they did on steel, the railroads being entitled to a certain return on their investment, that naturally is reflected in the rates on other commodities; and let the gentleman look into the history of the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission and he will find that it was granting of special rates that created the condition in this country that required the passage of the law which put rate making under the jurisdiction of Congress, through its agent, the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. And that is going on now under the commission.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois). The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOWARD. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHNEIDER].

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The Interstate Commerce Commission grants reductions on manufactured products shipped abroad on the application of the railroad. They have done this ever since they were created, as was done previously, and never have they granted a reduction to farm products until President Hoover requested the railroad companies to make a reduction on shipments of wheat abroad.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield there?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. My friend from Wisconsin, I think, has fallen into error. If the gentleman will inquire of the Interstate Commerce Commission he will find that for years there has been a substantial reduction in the railroad rates on farm products that are destined abroad. Those reduced rates have been in effect for years, amounting to as much as 20 or 25 per cent, but quite recently, and it is said upon the suggestion of the President, the railroads have voluntarily put into effect a much greater reduction in freight rates on wheat that is intended for export. That information will be given to anyone who inquires of the commission; we do not want to make any mistake here and therefore I have taken the liberty, with the consent of the gentleman, of injecting this information into the gentleman's speech.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman is very kind, and I will be glad to be relieved of any error I may make at any time.

Mr. DENISON. I am sure the gentleman feels that way about it.

Mr. HOWARD. I trust all the gentlemen may feel free to enter into this discussion and take all my time. It will please me all the better.

Mr. HALSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield.

Mr. HALSEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the rate put into effect recently by the railroads is permanent or temporary.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman permit me to answer?

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. In answer to that question, I will state that this additional increase on the export rate for wheat that has recently been put into effect only extends until September, and then it will cease; but the regular, permanent reduced rates on farm products that are intended for export will remain.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman used the word "increase" when I think he meant "decrease."

Mr. DENISON and Mr. HASTINGS rose.

Mr. HOWARD. I yield first to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. I do not know whether I made myself clear or not. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] suggested I used the word "increase" for "decrease." I meant there have been certain permanently reduced freight rates on farm products intended for export, reduced below the regular rates where the product is not intended for export. These rates have been in effect for several years. This last month the railroads put into effect a much greater reduction in the freight rate on wheat that is intended for export, and that greatly reduced rate will obtain until sometime in September.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD and Mr. HASTINGS rose.

Mr. HASTINGS. Before the gentleman's time expires will the gentleman allow me to interject one remark?

Mr. HOWARD. Pardon me. I want to yield first to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I was about to ask my friend the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] if he would yield so that I might ask a further question of the gentleman from Illinois with reference to this rate question.

Mr. HOWARD. Certainly.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. I come from a State and a district that is 800 miles from water transportation. At the present time, if I am correctly informed, there is an application before the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit a violation of the fourth section of the transportation act in order that they may charge the people in my State and in my district a higher rate on freight from Chicago than they are charging from Chicago to Frisco, and one of the reasons offered is that because of lower water rates granted, we people in the Intermountain States ought to contribute a little to the loss occasioned thereby, in the face of an affidavit filed that they are not granting any rate at a loss or one that will not return a profit to the company. I am wondering what explanation, if any, there is of that situation.

Mr. DENISON. The question of departures from the fourth section of the interstate commerce act, I will say to the gentleman, is a very complicated issue, but I do not think the commission will permit any rate to go into effect that will permit a railroad to carry freight at less than cost; and if anyone had filed an objection to the decreased rate on steel that is intended for export so as to bring that before the commission, I am inclined to believe that the commission might require an increase in the rates on steel intended for export.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may have one minute more in order that I may ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for one additional minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. In answer to the statement made about the discrimination against freight rates for exportable wheat I hold in my hand an article in a recent issue of the Star, which gives an interview with the president of the Kansas City Southern Railroad, running out of Kansas City south to the Gulf, showing that the company made an application and it was pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, to reduce freight rates on wheat from Kansas City to the Gulf from the prevailing rate of 30½ cents a bushel to 22½ cents a bushel. The distance is 786 miles from Kansas City to the Gulf. The rate on wheat from Chicago, 918 miles, is 23½ cents a bushel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSON. Now, if my courteous colleague will yield, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if that is not on account of the fact that a part of the distance is water transportation? Of course, where you have water transportation it cheapens the rate of transportation.

Mr. HASTINGS. The distance from Chicago to the Gulf is 919 miles, and from Kansas City to the Gulf it is 786 miles. The rate on wheat from Chicago is 23½ cents a bushel, and the rate from Kansas City to the Gulf is 30½ cents a bushel. The president of this road has asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to have the rate reduced on export wheat from 30½ cents a bushel down to 22½ cents a bushel, and he has said that the road can afford to carry it at that rate.

Mr. HUDSON. Does the gentleman intend that we shall draw the conclusion from that that the Interstate Commerce Commission has refused the reduction?

Mr. HASTINGS. It had not done it up to that time. I am not keeping up with what it has done in the last few days, and I do not know whether or not it has been granted. But let me ask the gentleman two questions: First, does the gentleman see any reason why, if the statement in this article is true and the president of the road has made application for a reduction in the rate on wheat and says the road can carry it at the reduced rate, why it ought not to be granted?

Mr. HUDSON. I will say no.

Mr. HASTINGS. The second question I want to ask the gentleman is: The gentleman has been discussing the resolution; does he see any reason why, if a special rate is given on steel for export, why a similar rate should not be granted on wheat?

Mr. HUDSON. I see no reason for discrimination against farm products.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not want the gentleman to dodge the question. If the reduced rate is given on steel, does not the gentleman think the Interstate Commerce Commission should be compelled to give a like rate on farm products?

Mr. HUDSON. I will answer the gentleman's question by saying that there ought not to be any discrimination against agricultural products. Now, I want to say in reply to a point the gentleman from Oklahoma brought out a moment ago. In answer to the gentleman from Nebraska and his resolution that this Congress, while it might legally do some things, practically it could not enter into the rate-making business.

Mr. HASTINGS. I believe the Congress that created the Interstate Commerce Commission can compel the Interstate Commerce Commission to give the same rate to agricultural products that it gives to the steel products.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has again expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. I ask unanimous consent the gentleman from Nebraska have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANLOVE. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield.

Mr. MANLOVE. I want to say with reference to the article that the gentleman from Oklahoma has alluded to that Mr. Johnson, president of the Southern Railroad Co., is very much interested in agriculture. I have discussed the problems with him and he has personally said that he was very much interested in it.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman from Nebraska will allow me, in order that there may be no error as to the statement in the article, I will hand it to the gentleman from Nebraska for insertion in his speech as part of his remarks. It is as follows:

"We started an agitation three years ago to reduce the rate on wheat going to New Orleans from Kansas City, because we were getting none of the business," said Charles Johnson, president of the Kansas City Southern, discussing the ever-present problem of freight rates in the Middle West.

"The rate from Kansas City to the Gulf is 30½ cents, and the distance is 786 miles. That rate is all out of line with other rates in the Mid West. For instance, from Kansas City to Duluth, 632 miles, the rate is 19 cents.

"The rate from Kansas City to Chicago, 452 miles, is 17½ cents. From St. Louis to New Orleans, 698 miles, the rate is 18 cents, while from Chicago to New Orleans, 919 miles, the rate is 23½ cents.

"We have asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce our rate to 22½ cents. This is our story in a nutshell. We are not asking any unreasonable slash, but we can make a profit on the rate we request, and we believe the I. C. C. should grant it. Such a change would benefit the farmer.

"Up to September 30, however, the rate from Kansas City to the Gulf is 19 cents. But this is due to the emergency by which all railroads have granted a reduced rate to effect more speedy movement of last year's wheat crop to the world market before the new crop comes along."

Mr. HOWARD. I accept any good thing that anybody offers. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. BEEDY. Inasmuch as the gentleman has criticized the Speaker for not recognizing him on his resolution upon the ground that a reduction of freight rates on farm products for export might assist the farmer, it might be significant for me to state—and I think I am accurate in my recollection—that the recent reduction in the freight rate on wheat for export was 6 cents a bushel, and that immediately that reduction went into effect the world price of wheat dropped 6 cents a bushel. In other words, wheat and steel are two different commodities. There is world competition on wheat and a reduction on freight rates on such a product for export would affect the producers of wheat, whereas a reduction on the freight rates on steel products would not have a similar effect, because the manufacture of steel is controlled largely in this country.

Mr. HOWARD. There does not seem to be much of a world effect with reference to the price of steel.

Mr. BEEDY. The reduction on that still enables us apparently to control the export market.

Mr. MANLOVE. And I ask the gentleman from Maine if wheat might not have dropped 12 cents a bushel?

Mr. BEEDY. What it might have done would be folly to discuss.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I have been greatly honored by so many of my colleagues tearing my splendid address asunder in so many places. I hope it will not look in print any more ragged than it ought to. I am complimented by the fact that so many of my colleagues are interested in this great problem, but I take it that the compliment is due to the cause rather than to the present exponent of the cause.

What is our situation here? Here we come, called together for the specific purpose of accomplishing something in behalf of agriculture. That is the specific purpose of the call which brought us here. I come with a little bill like this, seeking to work the welfare of agriculture. Do I get a chance to have it referred to a committee? No. Why? I do not know. Do I get any opportunity to have the bill which I have introduced referred to any Cabinet authority, for instance, in order that the House might have greater information regarding it? No.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. The gentleman is so courteous and so fine in his treatment of his colleagues that he certainly does not want the impression to go to the country that the Speaker of the House would not refer his bill to a committee if the committee were organized. The committee that would naturally handle his bill is not organized.

Mr. HOWARD. I could not be discourteous to my Speaker. I am very fond of him, but I am thinking I am in the attitude of the fellow of old who, looking at his friend, said that he loved him even "though he would slay me." That is what the Speaker has done with me, so far, and still I love him. [Laughter and applause.]

FRENCH DEBT SETTLEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] for 15 minutes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, subsequent to the World War France purchased of our Government war supplies which we valued at $542,000,000, for the sum of $400,000,000, and in payment therefor, on August 1, 1919, issued its 10-year 5 per cent bonds, maturing August 1, 1929, and in turn sold these supplies to her own citizens. House Joint Resolution No. 80 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, to postpone the collection of the principal to May 1, 1930, conditioned that France, on or before August 1, 1929, ratifies the funding agreement entered into between the representatives of the Governments of France and the United States April 29, 1926, to fund the indebtedness of France of $4,025,000,000 to the United States, extending it over a period of 62 years, with no interest for the first five years, 1 per cent per annum for the next 10 years, and with an average interest for the entire period of 62 years of only 1.64 per cent. By the French settlement we canceled or remitted 52.8 per cent of her indebtedness. The House of Representatives approved this settlement on June 2, 1926, and it was thereafter submitted to the French Government for approval before action upon the same was had by the Senate of the United States.

Three years have elapsed and no action has been taken by the French Government. Now the bonds, amounting to $400,000,000, which were exchanged for the war supplies, are to become due August 1, 1929, and France is asking for a postponement of the payment of this amount until May 1, 1930, conditioned that the funding agreement prior to that time is ratified.

I have not voted for any of these debt settlements and I am unwilling to vote for this resolution postponing the payment of $400,000,000 for war supplies which will be due August 1, 1929.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] has handed me a note to the effect that instead of the amount that I have indicated that these war supplies were worth, the French Government paid really only 20 cents on the dollar for them. I put the amount, according to one of these newspapers reports, at $542,000,000. He indicates that it should be very much larger, or four or five times the $400,000,000.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I was in France during the time that these negotiations took place, and the information which was given to the French people at that time by the officials of the French Government, so far as the newspapers were concerned at least, was that this material which the French people took over following the armistice was worth $2,000,000,000, and that the $400,000,000 the French agreed to pay was only 20 cents on the dollar.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

An article in the Washington Star under date of May 29, 1929, comprehensively reviews these debt settlements. Based on a 4¼ per cent interest rate we lost in the various debt settlements the aggregate amount of $10,705,681,006.90.

Notwithstanding the House approved the French settlement on June 2, 1926, three years ago, no action has been taken by France. The figures used by the correspondent of the Washington Star in the article referred to show that we lost in the various settlements 19 to 20 per cent in our settlements with Great Britain, Finland, Hungary, Poland, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania; 25 per cent in our settlements with Czechoslovakia and Rumania; with Belgium, 53.5 per cent; with Yugoslavia, 69.7 per cent; with Italy, 75.4 per cent; and with France we canceled or remitted 52.8 per cent. These percentages are approximately correct. Surely we have been more than generous in these settlements.

This same article in the Washington Star states:

Should the American Congress refuse to postpone the payment of the $400,000,000 due August 1, France is amply prepared with funds to pay it.

Under the same date of May 29, 1929, the Chicago Tribune contains the following article:

UNCLE SAM STILL HOLDS THE SACK

France must pay the United States $400,000,000 this year, within a few months, unless the Mellon-Berenger debt settlement is ratified by the French Parliament. If France accepts that settlement the $400,000,000 is merged into it and the first annual payment is small, some $30,000,000. The larger sum due this summer is the payment for materials and supplies of the American Expeditionary Forces bought after the armistice and the return of the American troops. These stores were knocked down at what France thought was a great bargain. They have not been paid for.

The French have not agreed to the settlement of the big debt and they have not paid the smaller one, and it would seem imperative this summer for them to do one thing or the other. They can pay for the goods they bought and fiddle along with the settlement of the money borrowed as long as Washington will permit or they can come across with the debt settlement and throw the cost of the goods into it.

Recently it has been indicated that the intention in Paris was to pay the $400,000,000 and stall along on the big debt. In line with this it is reported by John Steele, the Tribune correspondent in London, that Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, has been told by the French Government to prepare himself for a draft against the French gold deposit in the English bank. Mr. Norman's retort was that France would do nothing of the sort unless it was prepared to lay down a similar sum in payment of obligations to Great Britain.

There is a show-down in which the American Government should stand pat, but Mr. SMOOT has introduced a resolution in Congress to postpone the date of the payment of the $400,000,000. The British and the French create a situation which must cost somebody something in both money and humiliation and the United States is preparing to be the goat again. The ancestral air and the ducal tone are too much for the dollar diplomacy. Washington would rather have a curt nod of approval from some one whose invitations in either London or Paris are desirable than to get $10 on account.

If Uncle Sam had a ramrod shoved down his back and stood pat there would be an interested discovery of whether France intended to pay, sign, or default, and whether the Bank of England could control the payment of international debts to the United States.

On the same date, May 29, 1929, hearings were held before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. Ogden L. Mills, Undersecretary of the Treasury, representing the Treasury Department, was the only witness who appeared before the committee to testify with reference to the payment of the $400,000,000 on August 1. In answer to a question by Mr. GARNER, he stated:

Mr. GARNER. It will be paid on the 1st day of August if the agreement is not ratified; is not that right?

Mr. MILLS. That is so.

Mr. GARNER. The French have arranged to pay the $400,000,000.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I did not know that.

Mr. MILLS. I do not know, but I assume that they have, and I have never heard it suggested by any responsible French official that they would not meet this obligation on the 1st of August.

I know of no reason why we should not insist upon the payment of the $400,000,000 for war supplies which we sold to France and which amount we discounted $142,000,000 and deduct this amount from the sum due from France and only fund the balance.

According to her Minister of Finance, France received from the sale of part of these war materials to the French people, up to August 21, 1924, five years ago, the sum of $270,217,000. The amount to be received from the sale of these war supplies was merged into the funding agreement, provided it had been ratified, which would postpone its payment extending over a period of 62 years and remit 52.8 per cent of it. The agreement not having been ratified by France their bonds mature August 1, 1929. We are under no obligation, legal or moral, to postpone the payment of these bonds. The report of the Ways and Means Committee shows no justification.

I am discharging my obligation by protesting as vigorously as I may against the passage of this resolution. We have been more than generous in our consideration of France and our first duty is to the taxpayers of our own country.

We understood, when these loans were extended to foreign governments, that we were only lending our credit. We issued Liberty bonds bearing 4¼ per cent interest and our people were induced to buy these bonds with the promise that the loans extended to foreign governments would be paid in full, both principal and interest. I submit that we have not kept faith.

Sentiment is attempted to be created to remit the entire amount of these foreign settlements, because they were for expenses of the war. Let me remind you that the United States spent approximately $22,000,000,000, exclusive of the amount loaned to foreign governments. We called approximately 5,000,000 men to the colors. We hurriedly trained them, bridged the Atlantic Ocean with ships, and threw two and one-half million of them across the sea in time to take part in the battle around Belleau Wood and Chateau-Thierry, July 15 to 18, 1918, which turned the tide of the war and perhaps saved the city of Paris when it was in its greatest peril from capture. We planned and carried forward under the American commander, General Pershing, the successful St. Mihiel drive on September 12, 1918, and, after sweeping the Woevre Valley, our forces were quickly transferred over into the Argonne sector and materially assisted in bringing to a successful close the awful conflict on November 11, 1918.

It therefore can not be successfully argued that we did not do our part in the Great War, looked at from every standpoint. We not only threw a great Army across the sea but followed it with munitions, food, clothing, and supplies of all kinds to make it effective. We extended to the foreign governments our credit with the distinct understanding and agreement that the amounts advanced would be repaid in full, principal and interest.

The particular amount involved in this resolution is for war supplies sold at a discount after the armistice and the French Government issued its bonds, maturing August 1, 1929, in payment.

Mr. CLAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. CLAGUE. What would you do to compel France to pay?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am delighted that the gentleman asked that question. Let us have no misunderstanding about it. I take the responsibility on myself for my reply. I represent nobody but myself in the statement that I make. I would give France a certain definite reasonable length of time to acknowledge in the proper form her legitimate indebtedness to the Government of the United States, and in the event that that was not done I would sever diplomatic relations before sunset. [Applause.]

Surely there is no obligation of any kind resting upon our Government for the postponement of the payment of this amount, and I see no reason why we should not demand the payment of it when it is due on August 1, 1929. The press reports France making preparations to pay it. I do not believe our Government should stand by passively and not insist upon the payment of these obligations promptly when due.

In each of these settlements it has been urged that we are settling on the "capacity to pay" of each government. The hearings disclose that no economist will hazard an opinion as to the capacity of any government to pay during a period of 62 years.

Secretary Mellon, in the hearings on the French debt settlement—page 5—on the question of capacity to pay said:

> I appreciate, as all reasonable men must, that it is not possible for any set of men to determine with mathematical accuracy the future capacity of a great nation to tax itself and to transfer the avails of taxation to another nation. We are forced to look at the present and to estimate the future.

In connection with the Italian debt settlement Secretary Mellon said:

> The capacity of a nation to pay over a long period of time is not subject to mathematical determination. It is and must be largely a matter of opinion.

Everyone appreciates, of course, that the capacity to pay of a government in Europe under present conditions is very speculative, and that no one has any good grounds upon which to base an opinion. No one could base an opinion upon an unsecured obligation of an individual over that period, and surely with conditions such as they are in Europe no one is justified in venturing an opinion as to the capacity of any European government to pay extended over a period of 62 years.

In the Greek debt settlement we funded the $15,000,000 due and extended payment over a period of 62 years, without interest, and loaned Greece an additional sum of $12,167,000 at 4 per cent interest, payable in 20 years. We helped Greece stabilize her finances, and it was stated in the debate, and not denied, that international bankers had made a loan to Greece at 6 per cent interest and sold it on a basis of 91, which makes the loan cost the Greek Government approximately 6½ per cent.

The truth is all of these settlements are made in the interest of international bankers. In each case it has been found that loans have been floated to all of these governments.

We remitted approximately 75.4 per cent of the amount due our Government by Italy upon the theory that the Italian Government has not the ability to pay, when Mussolini has obtained funds to maintain a large army and to increase Italy's navy to menace the peace of Europe.

If our Government is really in earnest in its desire for disarmament and the decreasing of our naval expenditures, pressure should be brought through more exacting terms in these funding agreements with the foreign governments, so as to render them less able to obtain large amounts of money for armies and navies, and they would then be more sympathetic in lending a willing ear to our pleas for disarmament and the decreasing of naval expenditures.

I agree that in each case perhaps time should be given to these foreign governments to repay these loans, but I do not favor the remission or cancellation, either principal or interest, of any of the sums due by any foreign government to our Government. Every dollar remitted or canceled, either principal or interest, is an additional burden upon the taxpayers of our country. How can we stand on the floor of the House and argue that we are in favor of economy and refuse to make adequate appropriations for the various activities of our Government under the plea of economy and at the same time remit $10,705,618,006.90 to foreign governments? The people of our country are demanding more public buildings to house the various activities of our Government throughout the country. They demand more Federal appropriations in aid of road building. When increased appropriations are urged for these purposes we are met with the argument that our present revenues will not justify these expenditures.

I think our generosity should commence at home. The depressed farmers of the country have been urging that relief be granted to them, and a bill is now pending before Congress authorizing an appropriation of $500,000,000 as a revolving fund to be used to aid the farmers in marketing their surplus products. This appropriation is criticized and denounced by those who are voting for these debt settlements.

I favor the internal development of our country and the expenditure of our revenues for the benefit of the people of the United States. The amount of money remitted in these settlements would gridiron the entire country with a network of highways. It would build adequate public buildings in every city of 2,500 people. It would connect every county seat in the United States with a concrete road. It would provide for the reclamation of arid lands and would make them productive. It would permit the deepening and dredging of our larger streams and would make them navigable and lessen freight rates and enable us to build reservoirs to impound waters and prevent disasters which go with great floods, and the money could be used in many other ways for the general prosperity of our country.

There are many ex-service men broken in body whose nerves have snapped under the servere strain, but who after more than 11 years have elapsed are unable to prove "service connection" to the satisfaction of those who are administering the law. They are deserving of more sympathetic consideration. Every presumption should be indulged in their favor, instead of technicalities being raised as an excuse to deny them compensation.

All of them were anxious to return home after the armistice and hurried examinations at the time of discharge did not disclose latent disabilities soon to develop. Hence, no record was made. They returned home. When later they applied for compensation they were unable to present either record or medical proof to show service connection.

Frankly my sympathies are with these ex-service men. Instead of remitting or canceling these stupendous sums to foreign governments to whom we are under no obligations, I would liberalize our compensation laws so as to generously care for all of our ex-service men and their dependents. They are all deserving of our most sympathetic and liberal consideration.

If this question were left to the people as to whether the money should be expended for these purposes or remitted or canceled in favor of foreign governments, is there any doubt as to what the decision would be?

Everyone expected when these loans were made that they would be collected in full, applied to a reduction of our public debt, and that our interest charge would be lowered, and we could further reduce the tax burdens on our people. Following this postponement we may expect the press to advise the large loans by eastern bankers, as in the Greek and Italian cases, with large commissions and interest. Thus are the interests of the people betrayed. I am one of the trustees of the people, and I am not justified in giving away the money of the people to foreign governments.

I am inserting an official table prepared by the Treasury Department showing (1) the countries with which settlements have been made, (2) the date of agreement, (3) the amount of debt funded, (4) interest to be received, (5) total amount to be received, (6) the amount that would have been received on a British basis (3–3½ per cent interest), (7) total amount that would have been received on a 4¼ per cent interest basis, (8) total amount canceled on a 4¼ per cent interest basis, and (9) total aggregate amount, being $10,705,618,006.90, canceled, lost, or remitted in all of the settlements:

[1] Settlement made on British basis.

This table is official but does not include the Greek settlement. The figures prepared by the Treasury Department can not be disputed. We lose, cancel, forgive, or remit on the settlements with the 13 countries, based on 4¼ per cent interest, the amount we pay on our Liberty bonds, the proceeds from which we loan these governments, $10,705,618,006.90.

The press carries notice of the offering by the Treasury of $400,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness dated June 15, 1929, bearing 5⅛ per cent interest. If the payment by France on August 1 were assured, these offerings may be unnecessary Upon a 5⅛ per cent instead of a 4¼ per cent interest basis our loss would be approximately one-fourth more than $10,705,618,006.90. You will notice the Treasury certificates offered are exactly the same amount due from France on August 1, 1929. Why not collect it?

On the basis of the British settlement, 3 per cent for the first 10 years and 3½ per cent interest thereafter, we cancel or lose $5,675,474,006.10.

This is a gift through the remission of interest of more than a million dollars per day to 12 European countries.

The difference between 4¼ per cent interest our Government pays on our Liberty bonds and the interest received by us in these settlements represents a loss to the American taxpayers of $454,988,765.29 for 1929, or one and one-fourth million dollars per day.

I am sure the people generally are not advised as to what Congress has done in these debt settlements, nor do they know that these settlements agreed upon aid the large financial interests to negotiate large loans with generous discounts.

I do not believe the people of my State, for example, would approve this postponement or the Italian debt settlement. Italy pays no interest this year, but in five years from the date of the settlement will begin to pay at the rate of one-eighth of 1 per cent. We are paying Liberty bond holders on this debt in 1929 $85,935,000 and receive no interest—not a penny—in return. The interest on the Italian debt is increased during five yearly periods at the rate of one-eighth of 1 per cent per period, until, during the last seven years, the maximum interest received is only 2 per cent.

Surely this is a large burden for the taxpayers to bear to appease the greed of the bankers who are making loans at high rates and upon large commissions. The people, when they know the truth, will withhold their approval of these settlements.

I want the RECORD to show who are responsible for these cancellations. Some day the taxpayers will arouse from their apathy and this record will be more carefully scrutinized and condemned.

This is Flag Day. I know of no way I can more patriotically observe it than by opposing the passage of this resolution.

PROHIBITION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by including certain resolutions which I shall partially quote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak to-day of a matter of the utmost importance; that is, of domestic tranquillity and peace within our own borders. In the light of the attitude I have taken on a certain subject I hope my colleagues will bear with me and believe in the sincerity of the appeal that I am making.

Several sections of this country at this very moment are in a turmoil by reason of excessive and oppressive methods used by the United States Government through its agents in an attempt to enforce the prohibition law. The distinguished lady from California [Mrs. KAHN] yesterday put into the RECORD a most impressive statement showing that 137 citizens had lost their lives at the hands of Government officials. It is my painful duty to-day to supplement that list by adding in addition to the citizens and persons who were killed by Federal agents, human beings that were murdered by State and county officials in the course of the attempted enforcement of this impossible law.

My grim table shows 254 lives lost, while those of the lady from California show 137, or thereabouts.

Gentlemen, it is no longer the wet and dry question. It is a question of peace and tranquillity. The American people are patient. They have suffered for 10 years. Innocent and peaceful people have been shot in the back. Peaceful citizens riding out with their families have been shot. The American people are not resisting. They have suffered patiently. They will continue to suffer. They will continue to submit. But let me call attention to the fact that on July 1 the number of murders will increase, for the reason that additional appropriations have been provided for the enforcement of the law, and these murders will continue, and the people will continue to be patient until, I warn the House, some time and somewhere the wrong persons will be shot, and then the people of that locality will retaliate, and the minute they retaliate in one locality they will retaliate in other localities. There is great danger of that spirit becoming contagious. We will have riots, and if your riots spread, we shall have civil war. And I assert that prohibition is not worth plunging the American people into civil war. [Applause.]

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but in my statistics of deaths incurred in the course of these murders not only prohibition agents of the types generally known are concerned but others. Listen to this:

Pete Green, who was operating a still, was killed by Rev. C. W. Gant at Jefferson City, Tenn., on September 27, 1924. Gant was acting in the capacity of a Federal prohibition officer, and he was indicted for manslaughter as it was clearly shown the man was fleeing when he was killed, but the case was taken into the Federal court, and he was acquitted.

Emil Matsumata, a Japanese who was conducting a still near Orting, Wash., was killed by Federal Agents Kinnaird, Lampert, Croxall, and Rev. George E. Seeley on August 30, 1926. Matsumata was fleeing and was killed by shots in the back. Information was filed against the four agents charging them with first-degree manslaughter, but the case was removed to the Federal court and defendants discharged.

Rev. M. M. Day and Jim Snead, Federal prohibition agents, were killed in a pistol duel at Welsh, W. Va., February 15, 1925. This reverend gentleman, Reverend Day, had repeatedly boasted that in his capacity as minister of the gospel he had married one of his parishioners, and two weeks later in his capacity as a Federal prohibition agent he shot that same man. What are we coming to if the representatives of the Prince of Peace resort to murder in company with hoodlums wearing a badge of the United States Government?

Mr. Speaker, in the cases of the 254 people who were killed there were involved about two hundred and odd officials or more, because in many instances more than one officer was acting in concert, and of these only 5 have been convicted in the State courts, 2 of them have received terms ranging from 6 months to 2 years, 1 has received a term of 6 months, and he is now out upon bail pending an appeal.

One was convicted in the State of Massachusetts and pardoned five days after his conviction by Governor Fuller; and one is serving seven years in the penitentiary of the State of California.

In the instances I have recited the five officials were convicted in State courts. Invariably, however, as soon as a murder is committed by a Federal agent and the State indicts for murder or for manslaughter, the prisoner is removed to the Federal court and then and there discharged—in many instances discharged without even a trial.

Now, there is a great deal of sentiment aroused. I have here a letter written by the city council of International Falls in Minnesota, to our colleague, the Hon. WILLIAM A. PITTENGER, with which they send a certified copy of a resolution in which they protest and ask for help and defense against these marauders. I will read here the whole resolution in the RECORD:

INTERNATIONAL FALLS, MINN., June 11, 1929.

STATE OF MINNESOTA,
County of Koochiching,
City of International Falls, ss.

Hon. WILLIAM PITTENGER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I, George Johnston, duly elected and acting city clerk of the city of International Falls, Minn., do certify that the attached resolution was duly passed and approved by the city council at a regular meeting held June 10, 1929.

[SEAL.] GEORGE JOHNSTON,
City Clerk.

JUNE 11, 1929.

Alderman Somers presented the following resolution and moved its adoption:

"Whereas the Government of the United States has stationed at International Falls, Minn., a large number of patrolmen, including men in uniform and plain-clothes men who patrol all the roads leading into and out of International Falls and which officers have for a considerable time last past made it a practice of stopping persons driving in automobiles into or out of International Falls, either day or night, and on many occasions have stopped the automobiles of persons out driving with their families and have searched the automobiles of respectable, law-abiding people at all hours of the day or night without proper search warrant or other process and have in this and other ways humiliated respectable, law-abiding citizens and have subjected them to improper and to unnecessary interference with their rights and liberties; that under the said practice farmers coming to market or returning home with their families and persons out driving with their wives and children have been subjected to these indignities; that many of these officers so stationed in the city of International Falls are heavily armed at all times and on several occasions have shot at cars driven by law-abiding citizens who did not have sufficient warning from the said officers to bring their cars to a stop in time, and that many of the said patrolmen have on these and other occasions manifested a lack of judgment in the use of the said guns and firearms; that the said practice of the said patrolmen and governmental officials have brought about a condition extremely humiliating to the people of International Falls and to the farmers living in the vicinity thereof and have rendered it unsafe and dangerous for persons to use their automobiles on the said highways for the benefit of themselves and their wives and children; that during the summer months many tourists spend their vacations in the vicinity of International Falls and use automobiles largely for means of travel and that these tourists are unacquainted with the practice of being stopped upon the highways by persons unknown to them at any hour of the day or night, and these practices if continued will result in the loss of more lives, and the practice of stopping people and searching their automobiles while they are in the exercise of their just rights is extremely distasteful and objectionable to residents and tourists; and

Whereas the aforementioned practice on the part of the said patrolmen has culminated in a tragedy which has aroused the entire community when, on the night of June 8, 1929, one of the said patrolmen fired several shots into the rear of an automobile driven by Henry Virkkula, while returning to his home with his wife and two small children, said shots instantly killing the said Henry Virkkula, and causing his car to run into the ditch, his said two children lying asleep in the back seat of the said car and his wife sitting alongside of him in the front seat miraculously escaping death and narrowly missing being killed by the bullets fired from a riot gun or sawed-off shotgun; that said Henry Virkkula and his said family at the time of the said shooting were merely returning to their home and were not engaged in the violation of any laws of the United States; that the said tragedy has aroused the sympathy of the entire community for the stricken family, and has made the aforementioned practice no longer tolerable in the said community: Be it therefore

Resolved, By the City Council of the City of International Falls, in regular meeting assembled, that it is the sense of the said council that the practice of patrolling the highways in the vicinity of International Falls with patrolmen armed with guns which they use without proper provocation, and the practice of indiscriminately stopping automobiles on the highways and searching them can no longer be tolerated, and that unless something is done to change the present conditions more innocent lives will be taken and the use of the highways by innocent residents, farmers, and tourists will be unsafe and dangerous, and that it is the sentiment of the council that a protest against the practice be filed with the proper officials; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to United States Senators SHIPSTEAD and SCHALL and to Congressman PITTINGER, requesting them to use their efforts and influence in remedying this situation, and that they be called upon to use their influence to properly safeguard the lives and rights of people in this community or visiting the same.

Which resolution was seconded by Alderman Lang and upon roll call was, by the president, declared to have passed unanimously.

OSCAR SANDSTROM,
Mayor.

GEORGE JOHNSTON,
City Clerk.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Gentlemen, we can not ignore this situation. It is stated that the President has been asked to mobilize the Marines and send them up to the border. Let the country know that any such attempt or any such procedure will not have the approval of the Representatives of the people in this House of Congress. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Speaker, it is now stated that the drys do not want an investigation of what prohibition has brought about. It is already stated that the President's commission is not primarily to engage in an investigation of prohibition. The distinguished chairman of that commission was quoted as saying that the purpose of the commission is not primarily to investigate prohibition.

Let me say to Mr. Wickersham that he had better read the resolution of Congress, the provision in the deficiency bill, which appropriated $250,000 and which passed this House on March 3, 1929. The purpose of the money was what?

For a thorough inquiry into the problem of the enforcement of prohibition under the provisions of the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution and laws enacted in pursuance thereof—together with the enforcement of other laws.

And then—

So "the enforcement of other laws" is only incidental. The primary, the principal purpose of the commission is to investigate prohibition, the eighteenth amendment, and the laws enacted for the enforcement thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I thank the gentleman. So the commission has a duty not only vested in it by its commission from the President of the United States, but by the very wording of the law under which they are operating; and this country welcomes a thorough investigation of this whole problem.

It has gone beyond, as I said before, a question of being a wet or a dry. It has come to the question of domestic tranquillity, whether communities will be able to live in peace and whether the love of their Government and the respect of their Government of the old days will remain.

Why, Mr. Speaker, Uncle Sam, the United States Government, was always considered by the American people as something kindly, something to love; instead, now, it has become something hated, something oppressive.

Mr. MURPHY. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I have not yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MURPHY. Well, we will not have that kind of statement.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I have not yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. MURPHY. Do not you say that the people hate this Government while I am here.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I am saying that the conduct of the administration, the conduct of sending out these officials and murdering innocent people, of taking a man returning home with his family, including his two children, is not conducive to love of government; and even if the gentleman from Ohio stands up here and shouts that does not change the condition. The blood, the misery of these families is on the hand of the supporters of this impossible, infamous law that in your heart you can not believe in. [Applause.]

Ah, Mr. Chairman, that is the trouble. We can not ventilate the facts. We can not talk about conditions because certain Members who sponsored this impossible law will not stand for the truth. That is why I am warning now that we want the truth and all of the truth; that is why I am saying now that let no dry stand up and say that the investigation of the President's Crime Commission is not primarily for prohibition. It is for prohibition. Let the commission make an investigation of why we have so many attempts to violate the law; let them make an investigation, and let the country know the enormous amount of liquor that is being imported, manufactured, sold, and consumed.

I want to save the Government from losing the respect and the reverence of the American people, but you are not——

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I again challenge that kind of language. I think it ought to be taken down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois). The gentleman from New York has declined to yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Sergeant at Arms maintain order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can take care of myself.

I can not understand how any Member can protest or resent one Member saying that he wants to preserve the respect and the reverence of the American people.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the words be taken down.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, I will repeat it.

Mr. MURPHY. I ask that the words of the speaker be taken down. I have a parliamentary right here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MURPHY] asks that the words of the gentleman from New York be taken down.

Mr. MURPHY. I want the words taken down where he made the statement that this Government has now become something to be hated and despised. I want that to be taken out of the RECORD and I protest against it going into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the words objected to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the words.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Why, Mr. Speaker, Uncle Sam, the United States Government, was always considered by the American people as something kindly, something to love; instead, now, it has become something hated, something oppressive.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I move to exclude those words from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois). The Chair will say to the gentleman from Ohio that his motion is not in order until the Chair has ruled as to whether the words objected to and demanded to be taken down are out of order. The Chair will read section 356 of the House Rules and Manual, which seems to bear on this question:

> The consequences of a measure may be reprobated in strong terms; but to arraign the motives of those who propose to advocate it is a personality and against order.

It seems to the Chair that the gentleman from New York was merely condemning a measure that has been enacted into law. That certainly does not transgress any rule of the House and the Chair holds the words to be in order.

The gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt as to the general line of thought that I was seeking to convey. You can not take one single sentence from the text of a speech and point it out as being objectionable. You can take a sentence of the Bible without the full text and it might be objectionable. What I said was that we want to retain the love and respect of the American people for our Government and we do not want it to be oppressive. Here is a tell-tale list of 254 lives taken and among them innocent people. Can you say that it is conducive to the respect of law and order and good government when a man is returning home with his wife and little children in his car on a lonely road and is shot in the back and killed in the presence of that wife and children. The horror of that terrible moment will haunt those children for the rest of their lives. You can not call his life back or restore the happiness of those children with a point of order in the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

MUSCLE SHOALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] for 10 minutes under the special order of the House.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly disappointed that President Hoover did not include Muscle Shoals in his program of farm relief at the extra session. The farmers were also disappointed. It would have been an ideal time to have settled it, and it would have given real farm relief. It will now have to go over until the regular session next winter. I find sentiment of the Members of both Houses of Congress very strong in favor of it being settled at that time. If President Hoover will lend his influence in that direction, as I believe he will, I am satisfied that the next Congress will provide for the operation of the great fertilizer plant at Muscle Shoals for the benefit of American agriculture. [Applause.] It is a national calamity that this has not been done heretofore. All agree that it should have been settled long ago and that it must not be delayed any longer.

We are called in extra session to provide farm relief. I do not, and neither does anyone else, know what or how much real relief will be given the farmers by the farm relief bill which has just been passed by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President. I supported and voted for it, and hope that it will accomplish all that its most ardent advocates claim for it. I think its success will depend largely upon the business ability of the members of the Federal Farm Board, who are to be appointed by the President with the approval of the Senate. I supported and voted for the tariff-debenture provision, but it was defeated by the influence of President Hoover and his administration. The debenture provided for the payment of one-half of the tariff duties on agricultural products exported. For example, there is a tariff of 42 cents per bushel on wheat. Under the debenture the exporter of wheat would have been paid one-half of that amount, or 21 cents per bushel, in the form of a debenture certificate which would have been accepted by the Government in payment of tariff duties. There is no tax on cotton, so the debenture provided for the payment of 2 cents a pound, or $10 a bale, on all cotton exported. About 65 per cent of American cotton is exported.

Some claim that the farmers would not get the benefit of this; but they would, and the physiological effect of it on the price of cotton would have amounted to probably more than 2 cents a pound. If necessary the debenture could be so written that the certificate could be given only to stabilized corporations of the Federal Farm Board authorized by the terms of the farm relief bill, and in that way the farmers would certainly receive the benefit on all agricultural products exported, including $10 per bale on cotton. I trust that this debenture plan can be incorporated in the tariff bill now pending before it is enacted into law. I also trust that the Senate will amend the tariff law and cut out the high protective-tariff rates given industry and include farm products and place agriculture on an economic basis with industry.

The tariff bill as passed by the Republicans in the House will not benefit the farmers, but increase the price of everything they are forced to buy. It will not give the workingman any more wages, but will increase his cost of living. In fact, if it is enacted into law it will increase the cost of living for everyone. I opposed and voted against this tariff bill.

But I will not take the time now to make any further reference to the farm relief bill and the tariff bill, but will get back to my subject on Muscle Shoals.

Two of the chief causes of the farmer's financial condition are that he has to pay too much for the things he is forced to buy, considering the price he gets for the things he sells. This is due largely to the present high protective tariff law passed by the Republican Party in 1922, and the other cause is that he does not produce as much on each acre he cultivates as he should. This is largely due to the fact that our lands are growing less productive each year due to continued cultivation and on account of the high price and poor grade of fertilizer. The farmers are not able to produce what they should for these reasons.

It has been proved by fertilizer experts that the price of fertilizer made at Muscle Shoals will control the price of all fertilizer used. So Muscle Shoals is not local but nation-wide in its influence, and its operation will reduce the fertilizer bill of all the farmers from one-third to one-half. [Applause.]

Congress realized this in 1916 when it authorized the construction of a fertilizer plant at Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the district which I have the honor to represent. It was constructed at a cost of about $140,000,000 for two fundamental purposes: The manufacture of explosives in times of war and fertilizer in peace times. It is a good plant with cyanamid process, which is the best that could have been built at that place where there is an abundance of cheap water power.

Congress has tried continuously since the plant was constructed to have it operated for the manufacture of fertilizer. The House passed the Henry Ford bill by a large majority, but the Senate did not act on it, and Mr. Ford withdrew his offer.

Last Congress both Houses passed a Government operation bill and sent it to President Coolidge, but he did not approve it but gave it a pocket veto, which was recently sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Alabama delegation in both Houses of Congress called on President Hoover a few days ago and extended to him an invitation to visit Muscle Shoals during the recess of Congress, and stated to him that in addition to the gratification it would give the people of that section to receive him, it would also afford him an opportunity to secure first-hand information concerning all the features of this vast governmental problem with which his administration will have to deal in the near future, and assured him of a hospitable welcome and of our official and personal cooperation.

Mr. RANKIN. Has not President Hoover ever visited Muscle Shoals?

Mr. ALMON. No.

We also stated to him that we believed that the failure of Congress to settle this question was largely due to the fact that the President heretofore had not laid before Congress any plan for settling and operating Muscle Shoals. We urged him to give Congress, in his message next December, a constructive program on this subject, with the hope that it would aid Congress in effecting legislation that would carry out the purposes of this development. [Applause.] There is but one unit at Muscle Shoals. The Wilson Dam and hydroelectric-power station was constructed to create power with which to operate the fertilizer plant, and it should be used for that purpose. If the power should be sold or disposed of without making provision for the operation of the plant there would never be a pound of fertilizer made at Muscle Shoals, and the purpose of Congress in providing for this construction would have been thwarted. Muscle Shoals is primarily a fertilizer plant and not a power plant. The farmers used about 7,000,000 tons of fertilizer in 1928 and would have used more if they could have secured a cheaper and better grade. The power is running to waste and the plant is kept in a stand-by condition. If it is not used in peace times for the manufacture of fertilizer it will rust out and become obsolete and of no value for national defense in the manufacture of explosives in the event of war.

The plant has been standing idle all this time due to the failure of Congress to provide for its operation. It has been demonstrated to a mathematical certainty by fertilizer experts before the committees of Congress that fertilizer can be made from 33 to 50 per cent cheaper than the commercial price, and a much better grade of concentrated fertilizer, saving enormous sums for the farmer in transportation.

Before the World War Germany and other European countries were largely dependent on Chilean nitrates for fertilizer purposes. After the war in Germany the war nitrogen plants were placed in operation for the manufacture of fertilizer for the benefit of agriculture. It has been so successful that Germany no longer imports Chilean nitrates, but has become a large exporter of nitrates and fertilizer. We are importing it into this country.

In this country we continue to import Chilean nitrates, and in 1928 we imported from Chile 1,018,183 long tons of nitrates, valued at $36,261,894, on which we paid the Chilean Government an export tax of $12.53 per long ton, which amounted to $12,757,000.

What Germany has done in this respect should have been done and can be done in the United States. Our Government owns one of the largest and best air-nitrogen plants in the world at Muscle Shoals, Ala., and is the only one that is not in operation.

I sincerely hope that each Member of the House will take an interest in this all-important question at the next session and that we will be able to utilize this property for the benefit of agriculture.

Many of the older Members of Congress have visited Muscle Shoals, and I want to extend an urgent invitation, and especially to those who have not been there, to come down and make an investigation and get first-hand information as to Muscle Shoals during the recess. It is only 5 miles from my home, and I hope you will come, and advise me when to expect you, and I shall be glad to meet you and show you over the plant. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include a clipping from the Florence Times-News showing the amount of available power at the Muscle Shoals Dam during the month of May, 1929, and the amount that was sold to the power company, being only about 2 per cent of the amount available.

The article is as follows:

WASTED POWER AT MUSCLE SHOALS DAM COST FARMERS $4,463,200 IN MAY, 1929

Because of the failure to utilize the power at Wilson Dam to manufacture fertilizer, the farmers of the country lost $4,463,200 during the month of May, according to figures compiled daily at Wilson Dam on the estimated power available and the sales to the Alabama Power Co.

The figures for the month of May are: Power sold to the Alabama Power Co., 3,067,000 kilowatt-hours; estimated available, 144,902,500 kilowatt-hours; waste, 141,835,500 kilowatt-hours; percentage sold, 2.11.

The power available during May was sufficient to manufacture 31,880,000 pounds of nitrogen, which is now costing the farmer 24 cents per pound and a total of $6,376,000. The same amount of nitrogen can be manufactured and sold at Muscle Shoals for 6 cents per pound; total, $1,912,800, thus saving the farmer $4,463,200.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MOREHEAD] for 15 minutes.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I asked and was granted the right to address the House for 15 minutes to-day, and my thought in doing so was to deal with several different subjects. I now ask unanimous consent that I be granted one hour at the next legislative session of the House to address the House, and I shall yield back the time granted to me to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that on the next legislative session of the House he be permitted to address the House for one hour, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman consulted with the minority and majority leaders in respect to this request?

Mr. MOREHEAD. No; although I made mention of it to the minority leader. I shall be very glad to take it up with the majority leader and abide by his decision.

Mr. MAPES. Personally I have no objection, but I would be very glad if the gentleman would withhold his request until he can consult with the majority leader.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I shall be very glad to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw his request for the present?

Mr. MOREHEAD. I withdraw the request for the present.

HUDSON RIVER-GREAT LAKES SHIP CANAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is now recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am going to digress from the remarks I propose to make later by referring to the speech just made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] in regard to the French debt settlement. I am in entire sympathy with the position that he has taken, and I am glad also that he has presented so ably to the House the reason why he believes that the United States Government has been fair and just in its dealings with the French Government. I regret, however, that he made any suggestion whatever that in case the French Government does not agree to ratify the Berenger-Mellon debt settlement that we should consider severing diplomatic relations. However, it is well that the record of our dealings with France in regard to the debt settlement be made perfectly clear and that a flat denial be entered against the charges that we are a harsh creditor, that we have attempted to squeeze France, that we are the Uncle Shylock that some foreign newspapers delight in picturing us. The facts are just as they were presented to you by the gentleman from Oklahoma. We did not start the World War, and we were in no way responsible for it, and we do not propose in this country to bear all of the financial burdens of the World War. [Applause.] We did more than any country in the world has ever done to help their allies. We were not called upon to send 2,000,000 or more Americans abroad, but we did; and by their reaching the battle fields of France when her troops were war weary and exhausted we turned defeat into victory. [Applause.]

And after the victory was won we asked for no reparations, no plunder, no conquered territory, and but for very little indemnity. We asked for nothing, and we got just what we asked—nothing at all.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FISH. I regret I can not. I have but little time. I would rather conclude my remarks first.

It is important that the American public should know the facts, and not the alleged facts presented by those Americans who spend most of their time in France and delight in casting slurs on the American Debt Funding Commission or the Congress of the United States. It is most unfortunate that the French soldier organizations and the French mutilated veterans have been used as a vehicle for debt-cancellation propaganda by being told that we have canceled only 5 per cent of the French debt, when the fact is that we have canceled 52 per cent of the French debt; and all we are asking of France is the amount of money that we loaned her after the armistice, if you include the $400,000,000 for surplus goods sold after the armistice and payment of which is due on the 1st of August, 1929.

You can look at it from any point of view you want, but if you analyze the facts you will find that the French debt settlement is the most generous agreement on the part of the United States in the history of the world; that the Berenger-Mellon debt settlement is unparalleled for liberality and unprecedented for generosity among nations.

I do not think the gentleman from Oklahoma need be worried. The French people are honest and honorable, and they have simply been waiting to have the reparations question settled for all time, which has been accomplished through the unremitting efforts, ability, tact, and patience of that great American hero, Owen D. Young, who is being welcomed to-day by the entire citizenship of the city of New York as a tribute to great achievement for peace and good will. Now that the reparation question is settled you may be assured that the French Government will ratify the Berenger-Mellon settlement. Although the guns have been silent since the armistice, we have had no peace; we have had discord, misunderstanding, and international hatred. The whole reparation question will be settled in the next few months, and just as soon as the French Government shall have accepted the Young reparation agreement the Berenger-Mellon debt-funding pact will be ratified.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. FISH. No; I am sorry I can not yield. The debt and reparation question could be debated for hours, and I want to avail myself of the time left to call the attention of the Members of the House to some facts that are of the utmost importance to practically half the people who live in this country, and that is the construction of a waterway, a ship canal from the inland lakes to the Atlantic Ocean. There is no denying the fact that the States from Ohio to Wisconsin are united in their unrelenting, bitter, and unreasoning opposition to the construction of what is known as the all-American route by the Hudson River to the Great Lakes. They have swallowed all the propaganda in favor of the St. Lawrence route hook, line, and sinker. I am not here to blame them. I am not here to accuse them of being un-American, but simply to ask them to remain open minded while we present the facts on the other side and try to prove at least to them and the American public that it is to their own advantage to construct a canal along the Hudson River in preference to the St. Lawrence route. And that is what I propose to do at this time, because I honestly believe that if they will listen to the facts and remain open minded long enough we can prove definitely that it is to their advantage to build the Hudson River route. All that they are interested in, and all that the farmers of the West are interested in, is a ship-canal route which will carry their grain and other products from the West to the Atlantic seaboard more cheaply than by the freight rates that they are now getting from the railroads.

The big advantage of the Hudson River route is simply this, that it is 1,000 miles nearer to Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, and all the southern cities on the Atlantic coast than the St. Lawrence route. The only advantage that the St. Lawrence route has over the New York route is that it furnishes water power and that it is 300 miles nearer—mind you, only 300 miles nearer—to Liverpool than the Hudson River route. Assuming, for example, that we could begin to build the St. Lawrence route with the consent of the Canadian Government you would find that that waterway is icebound for five months in the year, you would find that it is fog bound for a large part of the summer, you would find it is in the ocean lanes for icebergs the year round. The reason why the big American or foreign shipping interests do not send their commerce and ships through the port of Montreal instead of the port of New York is simply that, because they at least know the facts. It is only 12 hours, a night run, from New York to Montreal, and if the St. Lawrence route were better and had any advantages and was shorter and safer, of course, the New York shipping interests would have their boats dock at Montreal, and so would every foreign passenger and freight company now using the port of New York.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FISH. Not now. Let me say this: We Americans are apt to think that the Canadian politicians are staying up nights trying to plan some means to get the United States of America to build the St. Lawrence route. As a matter of fact, the city of Montreal, with a population of over 1,000,000, is almost unitedly opposed to the St. Lawrence route. Why? Because the port of Montreal would have to surrender its advantage as the Canadian ocean-ship terminus and have it pass on to some inland American city or some inland Canadian city. Besides that, the Province of Quebec, with a population of approximately one-third of Canada, is opposed to the St. Lawrence route. This opposition is strong enough to block the passage of a treaty between Canada and the United States, which would be necessary before a spade of earth could be turned. Among other contributing factors which lend weight to the opposition to the St. Lawrence project are the Canadian railway systems. The Canadian people have invested heavily in their great transcontinental railroads and are naturally anxious to have them pay dividends. If the railroads, most of which are Government owned, lose all the transportation of grain, the Canadian Government would hesitate a long time before appropriating several hundred millions of dollars when she needs every dollar for other necessary improvements and developments, particularly when she is already burdened with a heavy national debt.

Furthermore, Canadians are not overanxious to have a sort of Panama Canal zone running through their country. They are a small nation, but are intensely proud of their own sovereignty, and believe in maintaining it intact.

Again the Canadian people are united in opposing the exploitation of their water power, and will fight any attempt to exploit the power latent in the St. Lawrence on the part of American capitalists and mortgaging it to American corporations at a time when Canadian industry is not yet ready to absorb it.

What I want to impress upon you is that the Canadians very generally look upon the proposed St. Lawrence ship canal under joint control as an American water-power grab which would menace the hydroelectric prestige of Canada. The real issue is: Are we going to build a ship canal from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean for the benefit of the farmers of the Northwest and of the Central West and for the benefit of the 30,000,000 Americans who live on the Atlantic seaboard?

The western producer forgets that the lion's share of his products, particularly grain, is consumed in such States as New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New England and that the St. Lawrence route would add an additional thousand miles carriage to all our eastern seaports. The advocates of the St. Lawrence route in the Middle or Central Western States know little or nothing of the merits of the proposed Hudson River ship canal to Oswego on Lake Ontario, but have jumped in blindly behind the St. Lawrence project, due to a vast amount of clever propaganda with which they have been flooded by the water-power interests. I hold in my hand a section of 50 pages from the Detroit Times devoted exclusively to the construction of the St. Lawrence project.

I am not blaming the gentleman from Wisconsin, I am not blaming the gentleman from Detroit because they have swallowed this propaganda, because they can almost see the golden harvest of the world upon their docks. This mirage is so pleasing that the inhabitants of Cleveland, Detroit, and Duluth are already beginning to count their profits. The result is that the propaganda is carried on with renewed vigor for the St. Lawrence ocean-ship canal by States that fail totally to understand that the all-American route would be equally beneficial to their interests.

The proposed Hudson River route from Troy to Oswego is 186 miles, or practically the same distance as from Montreal to Lake Ontario, which is 181 miles, and is more to the advantage of the producers of the Central West than the St. Lawrence route because it will not only bring their produce to New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and to the Atlantic coast where we have 30,000,000 consumers but it will be shipped just as cheaply and quickly to Europe.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I prefer not to yield, and I have declined before to yield to other gentlemen.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was just wondering if the fact that they have the same interest in bringing this produce to New York is what has impelled New York to take the position it has in the matter.

Mr. FISH. Let me say to the gentleman that $4,800,000,000 worth of goods are exported annually from the port of New York and $4,100,000,000 worth of foreign commodities are imported. Why? Because the port of New York is centrally located, because it has adequate shipping lines, and because it has the facilities for handling transshipments efficiently and expeditiously.

Some person has raised the question that the port of New York is congested. Why, we have 500 miles of undeveloped dockage in the port of New York alone, if you take into consideration New Jersey, Staten Island, and the Hudson River.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. FISH. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman believe that the distinguished engineer, the President of the United States, followed the propaganda, and as a result of swallowing the propaganda, which the gentleman mentioned, went on record definitely in favor of the St. Lawrence route?

Mr. FISH. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. Of course, the St. Lawrence route is feasible. Of course, you can build a ship canal from Montreal to Lake Ontario, but you can build it just as well from Troy to Oswego as you can from Montreal to Lake Ontario. The only additional advantage of the Montreal route is the production of water power, and you can go ahead, if Canada will agree to it, to-morrow and build the power plants there without building a canal.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. I know the gentleman wants to be fair in the matter. He knows that is not the only disadvantage. If we build the canal that the gentleman suggests, the commerce has to go under 80 or 100 bridges, and they protest against that. The gentleman knows you can not carry any great body of commerce through a canal with that many bridges over it.

Mr. FISH. We want to be fair about this, and that is the reason I am talking in the way I am, without any animus. I know the gentleman's attitude. I am trying to present the facts. It does not make any difference whether you have to go under 1 bridge or 25. If you have to go under 1 bridge, that is enough to ruin any transportation, so far as high masts are concerned. You will not be bothered any more by 25 bridges than you will be by 1.

Mr. HUDSON. I am only repeating what the shipping has said.

Mr. FISH. Yes. What I am trying to ask you people, particularly from Michigan—and I am very glad there are so many here from Michigan and the Central West—is that you look at the situation not only from the point of view of the St. Lawrence project, but to remember that at least we have a natural waterway, and perhaps the most marvelous waterway that nature has endowed the United States, the Hudson River. For a distance of 150 miles, with the dredging already provided for between Hudson and Albany, it is navigable for ocean ships, and that is the reason it is selected as the logical waterway to the inland lakes and not because it happens to run through New York State. And we want you to know that we could begin building the ocean-ship canal from Albany to the Great Lakes immediately. The State of New York is willing to turn the barge canal over to the Federal Government. We are ready to dig that canal in the United States with American dollars just as soon as Congress makes the appropriation. I do not believe the New York waterway should be put upon the basis of appealing to patriotic sentiment to come to its defense. I honestly believe, gentlemen, that it has every advantage of the St. Lawrence route except the production of water power, and a great many more which the St. Lawrence route lacks and lacks completely.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. HUDSON. If the St. Lawrence route has the advantage of water power over the other——

Mr. FISH. It certainly has.

Mr. HUDSON. I am putting this question, as the gentleman has said, without any animus back of it at all. If the water power will pay for the canal, do we not owe it to the taxpayers of the American Nation to build it where it will be paid for in this way without their having to pay taxes to do it?

Mr. FISH. Well, I do not think this should be a water-power proposition. If it is, Canada is certainly against it. We either want a ship canal or we do not, and if we need it, we need it now. You have made definite promises to the farmers and they want to get some use of the canal during their lifetime. If you want to build a water-power project, why not say so, and cut out all this propaganda about the merits of the St. Lawrence route?

Every fair-minded man knows that Canada for a great many years at least is not going to sign a treaty to permit us to build the St. Lawrence ocean-ship canal. You have made your promises to the farmers out West and have explained to them the necessity for the immediate construction of an outlet to the sea. You have been doing this for eight years and you are no farther toward the construction of the St. Lawrence route than you were back in 1922, and you all know that Canada is in no frame of mind at the present time to even consider ratifying a treaty to build the St. Lawrence ship canal.

New York has a natural waterway that is as good if not better than the St. Lawrence route and we do not need any treaty with Canada to build it.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. The gentleman says that New York has a natural waterway, including the canal?

Mr. FISH. Yes; 150 miles on the Hudson River to Troy, 85 miles using the canalized Mohawk River, 21 miles on Lake Oneida, 7 miles on Oneida River, 22 miles on Oswego River to the Port of Oswego on Lake Ontario.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. How many locks would there be going over that route?

Mr. FISH. I think about 20; very few in relation to the distance and perhaps twice as many as on the St. Lawrence River.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman said that we are ready to build the canal. What does he mean by that?

Mr. FISH. The State of New York has offered the Federal Government the barge canal to use as it sees fit. All Congress has to do is to appropriate the money.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman may have one minute more in order that I may ask a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from New York stated in his opening remarks, in which I was much interested, that with the consummation of the Young plan and the reparation agreement between the European governments in the World War we had at last gained. I want to ask the gentleman from New York whether or not this agreement also provided for the withdrawal of the French and allied troops from this territory?

Mr. FISH. The Young plan did not provide for it, but I understand from reading the news items that a gentleman's agreement was reached that they will be withdrawn by the 1st of January, 1930.

Mr. RANKIN. Next January?

Mr. FISH. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, will the gentleman yield further? As to the New York Barge Canal, is it a financial success?

Mr. FISH. Yes, it is; contrary to what you have read in the newspapers due to propaganda from the railroads, the barge canal is increasing its business about 15 per cent a year.

Mr. SIMMONS. It has been a losing business?

Mr. FISH. It was only built in 1918 and it was necessary to wait for the barges to be built, and ever since these boats were completed there has been an increase of tonnage, and it has now become prosperous.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then why does New York want to sell it?

Mr. FISH. They do not want to sell it, but they have offered it free of charge to the Federal Government. The barge canal runs all the way from Buffalo to Albany, and it has also a branch that runs from Albany to Oswego, which is half the distance. On grounds of economy and efficiency that is the more probable route.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does the gentleman know how many surveys have been made of the all-American route?

Mr. FISH. Three or four surveys, and they all say it is feasible. New York State has certain sovereign rights on the St. Lawrence River and I believe if New York wanted to they could block the construction of the St. Lawrence route. I am quite confident the Province of Quebec has the same sovereign rights and has the power definitely itself to block the St. Lawrence canal route which interest or rights were recently passed upon favorably by the highest court in Canada.

I am convinced that the advocates of the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes project are wasting their efforts on a lost cause and thereby preventing the construction of the only feasible route, via the Great Lakes to the Hudson River.

Time is of the essence if relief is to be afforded the American farmer in our day and generation; why waste it on a snare and a delusion when the same results can be accomplished immediately through American territory and by use of American dollars for the benefit of both the great Middle West and the Atlantic seaboard. Unfortunately an amazing myth has been developed regarding the advantages of the St. Lawrence which has taken firm hold in some of the Western States. This myth supported by extensive propaganda from the power interests has helped to keep alive the St. Lawrence project, which, due to the united opposition of Montreal and the Province of Quebec, has practically no chance of ever being constructed. It is true that the original development and prosperity of the port of New York was due to the trade and commerce that flowed in steady streams from the Middle West a century ago through the Erie Canal, and it is equally true that the St. Lawrence canal project would be a direct menace to the prosperity, commerce, and trade of the port of New York, and a heavy blow to the shipping interests of that great port. It is surprising that there should be any objection from the Middle Western States whose development was assured by the building of the Erie Canal in 1825.

If you gentlemen can not get the St. Lawrence canal—and I do not know a single advocate of the St. Lawrence canal route who claims that Canada will even consider ratifying the treaty for two or three years—why are you not willing to join with us and build the all-American route, or build the route from Oswego to Albany, which I insist and genuinely believe will be much more to your advantage than the other, because it opens up the entire Atlantic seaboard and provides cheaper freight rates for 30,000,000 producers in the Central West and 30,000,000 more on the Atlantic seaboard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

RAILROAD FREIGHT RATES ON WHEAT

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to advert to some remarks made by my colleague [Mr. HOWARD], who was on the floor so numerously a little while ago, though I do not see him at present.

I desire to say in the beginning, if this Congress would do anything effective for freight rates, having delegated that power to the Interstate Commerce Commission nearly 40 years ago, it should do it only through a matured bill passed by both Houses rather than by a loose resolution presented with the remotest possibility of passage in this House and none in the Senate at this session. If my friend from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] had been reading the editorials in newspapers of his own State he would know that they have been having a good deal of entertainment at his expense out of his resolution for the reduction of freight rates on our exportable farm products. They know that the only large exportable farm product in Nebraska that we now have is wheat and that the railway freight rate on export wheat has been recently lowered by the railroads themselves through the initiative of the President of the United States, whom my colleague has just been criticizing.

The following from the Nebraska State Journal of recent date is interesting:

Congressman HOWARD has signaled for the spotlight to be played upon him while he presents a resolution to the House directing the Interstate Commerce Commission "to effect with the least practicable delay reductions in freight rates on all wheat intended for export so that the same will be reduced over the present domestic rates on that commodity in a similar proportion to the reductions or advantages which now apply to manufactured iron and steel articles when intended for domestic use."

One of his intense Democratic editorial admirers declares that this resolution, "so obviously fair and equitable, so easily to be applied, so clearly needed as a measure of justice to agriculture that it is strange that it had not voluntarily been adopted by an administration pledged to put the farm on an economic parity with the factory."

It will probably come as a shock to the Congressman and his devoted supporter to learn that for years the export rates on wheat have been reduced over the domestic rates and that this "obviously fair and equitable policy" has been a settled one of the railroads for decades. These rates have varied with ocean carrier tariffs, but the general plan has been to enable the wheat grower to lay his product down in the world market on even terms with competitors from other portions of the globe. The same policy has been extended toward industry, the object being the same and the result being to keep our factories open 365 days in the year and the workmen continuing as buyers in the home market the tariff seeks to preserve for the farmer.

Thus do we observe how politics enters into purely business transactions. The administration is blamed for not doing something about a situation that does not exist and over which the President has absolutely no control. His only power is that of suggestion, and the present lowered export rates on wheat, cut below the normal schedules, came about through the request of President Hoover.

I do not think that is a good way of going with his good Quaker brother to the end of the road. I make that remark because of certain statements that my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] made on the floor of the House, which are to be found in the RECORD of the 24th day of April, 1929, at page 474 as follows:

We had a campaign last fall. I do not know how it is with you other folks when you are campaigning, but out in my prairie country the folks talk to the candidate. They talked to me. They said, "What will you do with reference to legislation in case Governor Smith shall be chosen as President?" They had been reading his idea of a legislative program in behalf of agriculture. I said, "I will follow the governor to the end of the road." Then they asked me what I would do in case Mr. Hoover should be elected President and should have a farm program of his own, and I said, "I will follow my Quaker brother Hoover to the end of the road, also." [Laughter and applause.] So I shall.

I fear that he is permitting his Quaker brother to travel alone. He went with his Quaker brother to the end of the road, but it was the first end; and having given a reluctant vote on the initial measure he bolted the highway and went at first opportunity down the debenture alley, forsaking his nonmilitant brother.

Impulsive Peter, after emphatic protestation, led a much stronger fight than did my colleague who fired one Quaker gun and fled. He must ere this have heard a great chanticleer chorus.

The gentleman from Nebraska apparently has not discovered that fact. Not satisfied with his strictures on the President, he takes our Speaker seriously to task for not recognizing him to consider this resolution by unanimous consent, and without reference to or having been considered by any committee or member of any committee. Of course our Speaker knew that this rate had been put in operation, and he undoubtedly tried to protect my colleague from Nebraska from humiliation in trying to get a resolution without reference, consideration, or report through the House, the purpose of which was to effect something already a fact.

Under the permission of extension which the house has granted it should be said that we have heard much in the debate on the floor of the House touching export-freight rates, as applied to various manufactured products designed for export and not for domestic use; as in the debenture discussion the impression was given that this Government allowed rebates to the exporters of steel, machinery, and other goods. Of course this was not said by any of the informed advocates of the debenture. But loose arguments were presented by others which carried the impression which I have just stated, and which has led to certain newspapers in Nebraska to express ill-considered comment. Nearly 40 years ago the legislatures of many of the States and the Congress then in session were wrestling with the problem of railroad rate making.

The Congress was unable to effectively legislate on that subject, and the two great parties practically agreed that there should be instituted an Interstate Commerce Commission which should have administrative, as well as some judicial powers, to be in constant session, so that unjust rates, whether too high or too low, when brought to its attention could be considered, determined, and adjusted. Moreover, the commission was given, during the course of its existence, the power to initiate rate fixing independently of complaints. But the business men of the United States, alive and keen to their own interests, have kept close espionage on transportation rate changes so that questions of fairness and equality, or the reverse, have by interested individuals or associations appealed to this tribunal.

Since the beginning the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has been recognized by administrations, both Republican and Democratic, as the best means of control of transportation rates in interstate commerce.

The experience of all, or nearly all, the States endeavoring to control transportation rates through direct legislative action has been to condemn it as ineffective. Hence in nearly every State of the Union there are public utilities, commissions, railway boards or commissions, and other bodies under different names but of similar character which are given control of rates within their respective jurisdictions, much as has the Interstate Commerce Commission on interstate transportation.

Railroads seeking to change rates, especially the raising of rates, although the same rule applies in a general way to lowering, are required to give 30 days' notice of such change. Then those interested can make objection, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon proper hearing governed by their established method of procedure, and with a view of bringing about the best results, and still observe the constitutional guarantees as to property, determine whether or not the rates may be changed.

For many years the railroad companies, seeking to facilitate their own business and the best interests of the communities which they serve, have established rates, first, upon shipments of our large products for domestic use and consumption. Second, in order to keep industries going and labor employed all the year round, have sought to aid them by distributing their goods to the world and giving a lower rate for goods carried to the seaport which are designed for export. These rates were not objected to by any persons, interested or disinterested, and have therefore been in effect many years. These reductions of rates running the year round apply to exportable farm products, farm machinery, automobiles, steel and its products, and many others. A greater rate of reduction has been given in some cases than in others. For instance, the reduction of rates on steel is under certain conditions one of the greatest. One reason given for that is that steel, being concentrated in weight and nonperishable, is given a large reduction because it is based upon cars being heavily loaded over what can be done in the transportation of grains or other more or less perishable property.

I submit the following rates on wheat, being the rate from interior shipping points to a city seaport on grain which is to be used for domestic consumption; second, the usual rate for grain to be exported; third, temporary rate now in force under the initiative of the President, and which will expire on September 30. The basis is 100 pounds.

Export rates on wheat	Domestic	Export	Export (special)
	Cents	Cents	Cents
Chicago to New York	30	22½	17
Kansas City to Galveston	37	30½	19
Wichita, Kans., to Galveston	51½	47½	36

Special emergency rates expire September 30.

It will be observed that in the Chicago rate to New York there is the general export reduction of 25 per cent, and the special reduction added thereto amounts to 43 per cent plus.

Kansas City rate, the usual reduction is 18 per cent minus; for the combined reduction would be 49 per cent minus. Wichita, Kans., to Galveston, usual rate 8 per cent minus. Under the special reduction, 30 per cent plus.

Steel rates from Gary, Ind., to New York City without condition of excessive tonnage are, domestic 56½ cents, export 34 cents. Reduction, 39 per cent plus.

From Pittsburgh to New York City, domestic 34 cents, export 20½ cents; reduction 40 per cent minus. The average reduction for export on farm machinery from four leading points of production—namely, Chicago, Waterloo, Cincinnati, and Atlanta—to tidewater is 42 per cent plus.

Automobiles from three principal points—namely, Cleveland, Detroit, Moline—to tidewater cities, reduction from domestic to export basis is 45 per cent plus.

This must be remembered, that the boxing and packing for automobiles and machinery constitute a considerable share of the total weight, while grain has no boxing or packing. The average reduction now enjoyed on wheat from the two points in which Nebraska is interested—namely, Kansas City to New York and Chicago to New York—is 46 per cent.

It will be observed from the foregoing figures that, as affecting Nebraska wheat growers, the rate asked for by my colleague's resolution would make a 7 per cent less rate reduction on wheat than we are now having if based on the Gary rate on steel, and 6 per cent less reduction than we now enjoy if leveled to Pittsburgh export rate on steel. If leveled with export rates on machinery and automobiles, our wheat rate would be substantially raised.

The Traffic World, in its issue of June 8, had, among other things, this to say relative to the Howard resolution:

> The second or ordering section of the resolutions requires the commission to effect reductions in the rates on wheat and cotton "so that the same will be reduced over the present domestic rates on that commodity in a similar proportion to the reductions or advantages that now apply to manufactured iron and steel articles when intended for export over the rates applying on such articles of iron and steel when intended for domestic use.
>
> That section makes the present domestic rates the measure of the export rates ordered by the resolutions. That is to say, if the export rate on steel is 32 per cent less than the domestic rate, then the export rate on wheat is also to be 32 per cent less than the domestic rate. Here is how that rule would work on the export rate on wheat from St. Louis to New Orleans. The present domestic rate is 28.5 cents a hundred pounds. The present domestic rate on steel from St. Louis to New Orleans is 48.5 cents. The export steel rate is 33 cents, or about 32 per cent lower. Taking 32 per cent from the domestic rate on wheat from St. Louis to New Orleans, 28.5 cents, would result in an export rate of 19.38 cents a hundred pounds. The present export rate on wheat, that went into effect May 29, is 12.5 cents. The export rate that was in effect prior to that time was 18 cents.
> As to the wheat rate from Buffalo to New York for export, the rule laid down in the resolutions would have to be worked this way: "The present domestic rate from Buffalo to New York is 20.67 cents a hundred pounds. The export steel rate is 18.5 cents, which is 20 per cent less than the domestic steel rate. Applying the rule to the domestic-wheat rate would produce an export-wheat rate of 16.54 cents from Buffalo to New York. The export rate on wheat from Buffalo to New York before the recent reduction was 15.17 cents a hundred pounds. The present export rate, put in at the solicitation of President Hoover, is 11.84 cents.

I am against precipitate, ill-considered legislation which would deprive our wheat owners of a substantial freight reduction on their product for export. I am against hair-trigger legislation which would raise our freight rates on wheat. I did not come to Congress to help raise grain freight rates or permit it to be done if I could avoid it.

Nebraska people are duly grateful for what Congress has done for them. When I heard my distinguished colleague state that the tariff bill recently passed was useless, or words to that effect, so far as the farmers of Nebraska are concerned, it reminded me that ingratitude is one of the most flagrant vices. The fact is that the people of Nebraska are producers; they sell much more than they buy. This bill and the law before it protects and takes care of every competitive product Nebraska produces, and everything we produce is strongly competitive for the home market except wheat. Everything that we produce is protected under this bill. I desire the House know that when Nebraskans asks fair treatment and you have granted it we do not propose to offend you by saying, "It is nothing."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the President's orders had caused a reduction of from 6 to 9 cents a bushel in the freight rate on wheat from the Middle West?

Mr. SLOAN. I desire it to be understood that at the suggestion of the President of the United States the railways of this country did reduce the freight on wheat for export at various places averaging from 6 to 9 cents per bushel, and that is not anything new or unusual for surplus export farm products to be given favored rates.

Mr. RANKIN. When did that go into effect?

Mr. SLOAN. It went into effect not long ago, and it expires September 30. It was to take care of the surplus product of last year and the new crop rush of this year now on hand. The very object expressed in the preamble of by colleague's resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. And wheat has gone down in price almost steadily since that time?

Mr. SLOAN. That is immaterial and irrelevant, as the gentleman, a lawyer, knows. The question I was discussing was whether or not wheat transportation rates had been lowered, and not the effect on the price. Yet I will say wheat has fluctuated sharply since that time, due in large part to congressional delay for which neither the gentleman from Mississippi nor myself were responsible.

Mr. RANKIN. I am trying to find out the gentleman's idea as to the effect of it.

Mr. SLOAN. I told the gentleman about the reduction, and that is all resolution No. 95 calls for, and that is all that is pertinent to this discussion.

Mr. RANKIN. What I am trying to learn from the gentleman from Nebraska is whether or not, since this reduction of freight rates, wheat has not gone down steadily, and whether in his opinion you can help those western farmers by reducing the freight rate on wheat.

Mr. SLOAN. I was not discussing that, and neither will I discuss it, because the issue that I am discussing is a reduction of freight rates by giving a reduced rate for export. The gentleman, of course, is alert and adroit, but when he gets me away from this issue he will be an older man than he is now. I know what an issue is, and I think I know how to adhere to it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The reduction of wheat rates is a temporary reduction, is it not?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; this one is. It expires September 30.

Mr. JONES of Texas. And the reduction on steel has been in effect for upward of 30 years, and is from 45 to 60 per cent, while the reduction of wheat rates is from 10 to 30 per cent.

Mr. SLOAN. Now, go ahead. I am discussing wheat rates and not steel. But I do say the gentleman's statements as to reductions in wheat and steel are substantially inaccurate, as I shall show later on.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think that a 10 to 20 per cent temporary reduction on wheat is the equivalent of a 45 to 60 per cent permanent reduction on steel?

Mr. SLOAN. Certainly, of course, if your premise were correct. The corrections I shall make are in part drawn from Mr. JONES's own speech of June 7.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; I would go out of my way to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. I know; and nobody could take an issue away from the gentleman, or better state his position than the gentleman himself. No one can take him from an issue, and no one can make a better statement than the gentleman.

Mr. SLOAN. That is somewhat flattering. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman refers to the resolution introduced by our friend from Nebraska, former Governor HOWARD.

Mr. SLOAN. Governor HOWARD?

Mr. GARNER. Yes. I understand that his resolution provides for a permanent reduction of freight rates on wheat intended for export. The gentleman is talking about a temporary reduction. The governor's resolution provides for a permanent reduction. Are you in favor of a permanent reduction on wheat freight rates for export?

Mr. SLOAN. The longer the reduction is made, the better it would suit me. But before I would make any complaint about the Speaker of the House, knowing that we have lodged the power to make rates in the Interstate Commerce Commission and knowing that if we changed or modified that, it must be done by permanent legislation passed by both Houses instead of just a resolution. Moreover, his resolution is based upon the temporary emergency, and not a permanent condition, as will be seen from the fourth and fifth sections of his resolution's preamble, which are as follows:

> Whereas there is now a surplus of wheat in the elevators and storage places of the United States and the time for harvesting the new wheat crop is rapidly approaching; and
> Whereas these conditions have caused a great depression in the price level of wheat and it is desirable, in so far as it is practicable, to secure an outside market for the present supply before the new crop is harvested:

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SLOAN. May I have 10 minutes longer?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. Now, then, I want to say that this farm tariff proposition is agreed upon by nearly all Americans through their national platforms. In both platforms it is declared that we are in favor of protecting the farmer and industry alike. Let me say to my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] including the amendments to the bill, everything that Nebraska produces is protected; and, speaking by and large, everything that we produce in the Corn Belt is protected. The tariff duties will be effective as soon as the bill becomes a law. One of the best evidences of Nebraska favor is the strong clamor of the great eastern cities headed by the gentlewoman, Mrs. NORTON, of New Jersey, and the gentleman from New York, that the tariff will specially increase the expense of the dinner table. Well, the dining tables of the east are furnished from the field and yards of Nebraska. Those people have charged us well for what they sell us. We are entitled to our protection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I can not yield now, because I want to recite what you gentlemen have given to our part of the State, for I express gratitude instead of ingratitude. Our people are in favor of recognizing their obligations.

Mr. RANKIN. Just for a question.

Mr. SLOAN. I will yield for one question from the Rankin' Member of the minority. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. Why is it, with a tariff of 42 cents a bushel on wheat, wheat is higher in Winnipeg than in Chicago or Minneapolis?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Is it now?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; July wheat was $1.08 in Chicago at noon to-day, and $1.16⅞ in Winnipeg. It was a little more than 8 cents a bushel higher in Winnipeg to-day than it was in Chicago—and that with your 42-cent tariff on wheat.

Mr. SLOAN. I have followed that, because my personal affairs have led me to do so. I do not like to see wheat cheapened any more than anybody else.

The fluctuations for the last five years have been such that under our tariff we have obtained only an average of about 9 to 11 per cent protection on our wheat. Not so complete as if wheat were strongly competitive as corn, livestock, meats, milk products, eggs, poultry, oats, and every other product of Nebraska farms. Nearly everything we produce is taken care of by the American market, except our wheat. That is why I say that a protective tariff is advantageous to us. I know of no authority, political or economic, that denies that proposition at this time. The citizens of the Mississippi Valley, who are not like the Arkansaw Travelers, would object to taking down the dikes in the dry years, because they were then useless. They hold them against the day of the water's wrath. So do we with our wheat tariff wall.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. RANKIN. I will say this to the gentleman from Nebraska, since he invites me to answer his question: There is a tariff of 15 cents a bushel on corn and 42 cents on wheat. Both corn and wheat are lower to-day than before the war broke out, the lowest they have been in 15 years, and yet manufactured products are very much higher.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The gentleman from Mississippi is in error. When the World War broke in Europe wheat was selling at 61 cents in this country.

Mr. SLOAN. And I sold corn at home this week for 72 cents a bushel.

Mr. RANKIN. It is stated in the market report that corn and wheat are lower to-day than they have been for the past 15 years.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. That statement is unfounded. When the war broke out in Europe, under the Underwood tariff bill wheat was selling in Illinois at 62 cents.

Mr. SLOAN. It is selling at 86 cents at my home to-day. On Saturday, August 1, 1914, wheat was selling at Chicago for 87 cents a bushel. To-day it is selling for $1.07.

Mr. RANKIN. You will find from the market report in the New York Times that wheat is lower now than when the war broke out in Europe.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman has spoken of the price of wheat. How is rye selling?

Mr. SLOAN. I do not know. It would be higher probably if the apparently futile effort of my friend from Wisconsin were to prove successful in doing away with prohibition. However, he is doing prohibition a wonderful service in bringing this matter forward in season and out of season. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Since the passage of the House bill with respect to the tariff, the Nebraska Stock Growers Association, headed for a number of years by a distinguished Democrat in our State, has passed a resolution asking the Senate to increase the rates carried in the House bill on cattle, canned meat, and hides.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; every grower of livestock in the United States and every Nebraskan not in Congress knows the value of a protective tariff for cattle, meats, and hides.

Mr. SIMMONS. And not only do they say it is not too high, but they are asking that the Congress place the rates higher than in the House bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. They know what is good and ask for it.

Mr. HASTINGS. With the permission of the gentleman I want to emphasize how very valuable the import duty on wheat of 42 cents a bushel is when we only import of dutiable wheat one-fortieth of 1 per cent of the wheat we raise, according to the statistics of last year, and one-fiftieth of 1 per cent with respect to corn.

Mr. SLOAN. I was distinctive when I stated, "All we produce are strongly competitive now except wheat."

Mr. HASTINGS. How about corn?

Mr. SLOAN. Corn is competitive. Let me quote to you from a leading Democratic paper of our State, the Lincoln Star, which has been in season and out of season demanding an increase of duty on corn from 15 cents a bushel, which under the Hawley bill is increased to 25 cents. I have examined very carefully the prices of corn shipped from Argentina and the rates on corn carried from Argentina. The differential in freight makes a difference of from 13 cents to 19 cents between the carriage of corn from Argentina and carriage of corn from Nebraska to New York or San Francisco.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the Lincoln Star, to which the gentleman refers, is a Democratic paper?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. And how much corn was duty paid last year?

Mr. SIMMONS. And the Lincoln Star is complaining that we did not put the tariff high enough when we went to 25 cents.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. Few people in Nebraska repudiate both national platforms or reject the experience, as evidenced by their legislation, of nearly every forward-looking nation of the earth.

Mr. SIMMONS. Recognizing, of course, the fact that the Tariff Commission, if the facts justify it, can increase the rate proposed now to 37½ cents should the proposed rate become law.

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will now allow me to restate my question, we import one-fiftieth of 1 per cent of the corn we raised last year. These are the figures from the Department of Commerce, and yet the gentleman says a duty on corn is effective. We imported one-fortieth of 1 per cent of the wheat we raise, and yet the gentleman says the tariff is effective.

Mr. SLOAN. If the gentleman will remember, following the Underwood tariff law, which took the duty off corn, there was multiplied millions of corn shipped into this country duty free which was in direct competition with the corn that we produced throughout the Corn Belt, and our corn producers suffered from it. If the gentleman will look at the reports he will see there were large shipments into this country when corn was on the free list.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman dispute the figures I gave?

Mr. SLOAN. The figures that the gentleman gave just now?

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Why, no. Your conclusion, however, experience has shown to be unsound.

Mr. HASTINGS. They are from the Department of Commerce and are authentic.

Mr. SLOAN. But they are entirely immaterial. [Laughter.] I do not question your accuracy. If you should say the sun is shining, I would admit it, although I could not tell here. It is like the flowers that bloom in the spring, they have nothing to do with the case. But in any event, the tariff kept the imports down to the basis stated by the gentleman and the corn producers had their protection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The purpose of the tariff on corn and on wheat is to keep out these immense importations that we had under the Underwood tariff bill in both products and give the market to the American producer, and the reason we did not have any large importation of wheat is because we have a tariff of 42 cents a bushel.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman allow me to say that we imported last year from Canada 200,000 bushels of wheat and we exported to Canada and sold there 37,000,000 bushels of wheat. Do you want to destroy your export market to Canada on wheat?

Mr. SLOAN. Which has nothing to do with this discussion. Countries buy what their desires and necessities dictate. They do not do it for love.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nebraska may have five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. It seems to me the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] has effectively demonstrated the fact that the present protective tariff is giving to the American farmer the American market for corn and wheat.

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, that is just another assertion that my young friend from Nebraska makes without any argument or fact to sustain it.

Mr. SLOAN. But what a wealth of truth lies in that assertion. Our home market takes more than 90 per cent of our productions. It is better to hold that secure than to vainly seek a foreign market so often a commercial mirage.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS] states that we import but very little wheat or corn, and if we do not then the American farmer must have the market.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLOAN. I will yield for a question.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is it the gentleman's belief that a protective tariff increases the price of the domestic market?

Mr. SLOAN. It does frequently; yes, generally; sometimes to the full extent of the tariff and sometimes to the extent of part of it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then, in order to be fair to all, how would the gentleman suggest that the protective tariff be made effective on a commodity like cotton, of which we export more than 50 per cent?

Mr. SLOAN. I had not taken that up. I was discussing the products of Nebraska, and when the gentleman has time and will travel toward the North Pole far enough, he will find that in Nebraska we do not produce any cotton. I was discussing Nebraska products.

I should be very glad if the gentleman from Texas, instead of trying to solve the unsolvable cotton proposition, would look about and diversify industries in that great Empire State as is being done elsewhere throughout the South, erecting as they have in one case, a monument to the boll weevil for its destruction of cotton, resulting in the diversification of products which would be subject to ample protection. If he will do that he will raise less cotton, more corn, oats, livestock, and all those things of which that great State is susceptible. He will find the protective tariff a blessed blanket for the protection in all its diversity. But if he keeps on producing cotton, and nothing else, he will be in the situation that confronts the American wheat producer and will be up against this proposition——

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I have not completed my statement—I was giving the gentleman some wholesome advice which would be good for his soul. I desire to say that men in the wheat business—and I am in it to some extent—must realize that when poor, chaotic Russia is restored to its former productive capacity, as it will be, there will be little market outside the United States for our wheat. You can pyramid wheat with pools and coulfy it with debentures, you can brace it in any way you please; the only result will be your products will multiply and the price will go down.

So the great thing for you to do is to look ahead and get the benefit of the protective tariff which you indorsed in the Houston convention, and your intrepid leader and his lieutenants advocated in the great campaign when none of you dared repudiate it.

Look ahead and diversify your products as we do, to fit the circumstances, and obtain the benefits of this great doctrine and policy of protection under which the United States has been built with a prospect greater than its past. [Applause.]

THE FARMER'S DOLLAR

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] present, who has manifested so much misinformation about the wheat market, for I want to give him some information. I want to read from the Agricultural Yearbook issued by his own administration.

The price of wheat this month in Chicago, I believe, is around $1.04 a bushel.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Where is the gentleman giving the price of wheat?

Mr. RANKIN. I will take Minneapolis. In June, 1914, wheat was selling from $1.01 to $1.44 a bushel, or an average of $1.35 a bushel. Yet the gentleman from Illinois said that wheat was lower then than it is now. I have said that the reports of the market show that wheat is lower to-day than it has been for 15 years.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I want to make a statement. In August, 1914, wheat was selling in my district at 61 cents a bushel, and the Democratic farmers in my district said they would never vote for the Democratic ticket again. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman evidently resides so far from the market that I am surprised that he knew what the price of wheat was at that time. [Laughter.] The fact is that he did not know. If he did, he has forgotten.

On the exchange that you sell on, Minneapolis, it was $1.10 at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The farmer was getting 61 cents for it, and under the administration of Grover Cleveland they sold the wheat at 45 cents a bushel.

Mr. RANKIN. And he paid proportionately less for the things he had to buy.

Under the administration of Andrew Jackson and George Washington it was possibly sold at a less price, but we are living under the administration of Herbert Hoover, when the American farmer gets less for the things he sells compared with what he pays for the things he buys than he ever has in the history of this country.

The other day I got hold of one of these farm relief dollar bills, and I want to show it to you. Here is a new issue of the farm relief dollar bill. If any of you gentlemen have a dollar bill of the old issue, which you can let me have for the purpose of comparison, I shall be very glad.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am very glad to advance the gentleman from Mississippi $1.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin.

This new one ought to be called the farm relief issue. It ought to go down in history as a souvenir of the short time that Mr. Hoover was President of the United States. It represents the size of the farmer's dollar as compared with the industrial dollar. It is about one-half as large. To-day the farmer's produce, his dollar, his bushel of wheat, his bushel of corn, will buy just about one-half of what it would under normal conditions.

There is one mistake that I would like to correct. I should like to change the inscriptions on this dollar bill. On one side I would put a bale of cotton, a shock of wheat, and a stalk of corn, so that when it goes out to the farmer this summer, when it is issued on the 1st of July, he may look it over and understand and compare with this $1 bill and realize that it measures his prosperity as compared with that of people engaged in every other occupation in America. Not only that, but on the other side of this dollar bill, instead of the inscription that is there, I would have a typical American farm home in this year of our Lord 1929, a dilapidated barn, a vacant house with its eaves and doorsteps and verandas falling into decay, with its window lights out, fields uncultivated, the whole premises bearing out Shakespeare's description of "unfenced desolation."

In front of it I would picture an old farmer, because our farmers now are practically all old men. The average farmer is above 40 years of age. The young men have been compelled in the last few years to leave the farms and seek a livelihood in the cities and the industrial centers of the country. I would picture this old farmer standing before that home, bowed by the weight of poverty, leaning upon his hoe, and stoically gazing out over the desolate situation, the emptiness of ages in his face, and on his back the burdens of the highest protective tariff in the history of this country.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. I suggest that the gentleman do not forget to put an automobile also in the picture.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; I would like to have a picture of a broken-down automobile which has been sold him by some manufacturer in Michigan or Ohio, for which he paid two or three prices, and which he is now unable to repair.

You gentlemen are going home in a few days, and there has never been such a home-coming on earth as the one some of you are going to receive—such a reception!

It makes me think of the New Yorker who went up to Alaska some years ago. He there met a lady from Boston. She thought that he knew everything, and he thought so too. He was showing her around and explaining everything from Mount McKinley to the salmon fisheries. They finally came to a fox farm. She said, pointing to one of the foxes, "What is that thing?" He said, "Lady, that is a silver fox." The keeper had just told him what it was. He proceeded to enlighten her about silver foxes. She said, "You don't mean that that is where we get our fox furs from?" And he said, "Yes, that neckpiece you have on is from the fur of a silver fox." She then asked him how they got the fur off the fox and he said, "We skin the fox." Then she asked how many times they skinned the fox. He did not know that, but he had to appear to know it. He said, "Well, I'll tell you, we can only skin them now about five or six times, until they get so irritable that we have to turn them loose." [Laughter.]

You Republicans have skinned the farmer so much and so often in the last eight years that they are beginning to get irritable. They have stood it mighty well, but they have about reached the limit. When you get home and see the old farmer looking at his dollar and realizing that it is less than half the size of the industrial dollar, realizing that his taxes have gone from 10 per cent of his net profits up to 33⅓ per cent of his net profits, seeing his farm sold under mortgages, foreclosed every day in every county in your district, you are going to find a wave of protest; and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], of whom I am very fond, will more than likely come back here clamoring not only for reduced freight rates on farm commodities, for which his colleague [Mr. HOWARD] is fighting, but, with some others from that section of the country, he will come back one of the most enthusiastic debenturites this Capitol has ever seen. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In that connection, does not the gentleman think that he ought not to sit down until he thanks the gentleman from Nebraska for the free education that gentlemen gave him on the production and distribution of cotton?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, the gentleman from Nebraska might have done very well if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] had let him alone; but together they knew so little about the wheat market and the price of farm commodities generally that by the time they got through I do not think they had misled anybody as to the price of either wheat or cotton. [Applause.]

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1453) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges, and for other purposes, and consider it in the House in accordance with the notice I gave earlier in the day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 1453 and consider the same. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if this is a Senate bill?

Mr. DENISON. That is correct.

Mr. GARNER. And the committee of the Seventieth Congress examined this bill and it had their approval?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The amendment the gentleman is going to offer also had the approval of members of the committee?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to offer an amendment which has been agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Do any of these amendments include a new toll-bridge project?

Mr. DENISON. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 1453

An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., (a) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River, between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and the city of Omaha, Nebr., or either of them, by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of the approval hereof.

(b) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ouachita River at or near Calion, Ark., authorized to be built by the State Highway Commission of Arkansas by the act of Congress approved March 12, 1928, as amended by act approved May 25, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

(c) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Red River at or near Garland City, Ark., authorized to be built by the State Highway Commission of Arkansas by the act of Congress approved May 25, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

(d) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Clarendon, Ark., authorized to be built by the State Highway Commission of Arkansas by the act of Congress approved May 29, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

(e) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Augusta, Ark., authorized to be built by the State Highway Commission of Arkansas by the act of Congress approved May 26, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

(f) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Cotter, Ark., authorized to be built by the State Highway Commission of Arkansas by the act of Congress approved May 1, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

(g) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Shawneetown, Gallatin County, Ill., and a point opposite thereto in Union County, Ky., authorized to be built by the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing J. L. Rowan, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Shawneetown, Ill." approved May 1, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 1, 1929.

(h) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Stony Island, Wayne County, State of Michigan, authorized to be built by the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the Detroit River Canadian Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Detroit River at or near Stony Island, Wayne County, State of Michigan," approved May 21, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 21, 1929.

(i) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Perdido Bay at or near Inerarity Point, in Escambia County, Fla., to the mainland of Baldwin County, Ala., authorized to be built by the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing the Northwest Florida Corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across Perdido Bay, at or near Inerarity Point, in Escambia County, Fla., to the mainland of Baldwin County, Ala.," approved May 26, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 26, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 15, insert a new paragraph to read as follows:

"(j) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Aberdeen, in Monroe County, Miss., authorized to be built by the board of supervisors of Monroe County by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, on the date of the approval hereof."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to follow the amendment which has just been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL: Following the Rankin amendment, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(k) That the States of Illinois and Indiana be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge, with approaches thereto, across the Wabash River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Vincennes, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906.

"There is hereby conferred upon the States of Illinois and Indiana all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and to use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, and operation or maintenance of said bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the States in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENISON: Add a new paragraph following the amendment offered by Mr. VESTAL, as follows:

"(l) That the time for commencing and completing construction of a bridge across Tampa Bay from Pinellas Point to Piney Point, Fla., authorized to be built by the act of Congress approved April 5, 1928, by Herman Simmons, jr., his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of the approval hereof."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to be added as a new paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS: Following the Denison amendment insert a new paragraph as follows:

"(m) That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Gainesboro and Granville, in the county of Jackson, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund authorized by the law of the State of Tennessee which provides for the construction of the bridge to be built under this act, which shall be sufficient to amortize the bonds issued under the law of Tennessee, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment, which is in the identical language of the one just adopted except as to the location of the bridge.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS: Following the last amendment, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(n) That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, on the projected Gallatin-Martha Road, between Sumner and Wilson Counties, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund authorized by the law of the State of Tennessee which provides for the construction of the bridge to be built under this act, which shall be sufficient to amortize the bonds issued under the laws of Tennessee as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have here another amendment. This is identical with the other amendments except as to the location of the bridge.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS: Following the last amendment, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(o) That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, on the projected Charlotte-Ashland City Road, in Cheatham County, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund, authorized by the law of the State of Tennessee which provides for the construction of the bridge to be built under this act, which shall be sufficient to amortize the bonds issued under such act as soon as possible under reasonable charges but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PASSAGE OF THE FARM BILL BY THE SENATE

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just been informed that the farm bill has passed the Senate by a vote of 73 to 8 and will probably be messaged over within a very few minutes. It might be well to recess the House and for the Members to stay here, because the message should be over in a very few minutes.

RECESS

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the previous order of the House, I move that the House take a recess, to be called at the option of the Speaker.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3.50 o'clock p. m.) the House stood in recess.

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired, the House met at 3.54 o'clock p. m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) entitled "An act to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table, and under the rule referred as follows:

S. Con. Res. 15. Concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 1,000 additional copies of the consolidated hearings held before the committee relative to tariff act of 1929; to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1. An act to establish a Federal farm board to promote the effective merchandising of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to place agriculture on a basis of economic equality with other industries;

H. R. 3317. An act to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes"; and

H. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution making appropriations toward carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1929.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 312. An act to provide for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses and to provide for apportionment of Representatives in Congress; and

S. 1452. An act to authorize the State of West Virginia to acquire a bridge over the Kanawha River at Cabin Creek in said State and to acquire the right to construct a bridge over said river at or near St. Albans in said State.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3317. An act to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes"; and

H. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution making appropriations toward carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a municipal center in the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1929.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. LAGUARDIA, for three weeks, on account of hospitalization.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—THE AMERICAN FLAG

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, the one hundred and fifty-second anniversary of the birth of the Stars and Stripes should arouse interest in its parent predecessor, the Continental "Great Union" Flag, our truly first American flag.

The historical data concerning this first official emblem are presented in a new and interesting illustrated pamphlet of 62 pages, with numerous footnotes and citations of authority, entitled "The Continental 'Great Union' Flag," published by the School Committee of Somerville, Mass., containing the result of the original researches, investigation, and study, of its author, Alfred Morton Cutler, of Somerville (228 Medford Street), a leading authority on the history of this flag.

Union flags were in existence long before the American Revolution. But the Union flag raised on January 1, 1776, within the citadel of the Continental Army on Prospect Hill—then in Charlestown, and since 1842 in Somerville, Mass.—was the first emblem to officially symbolize the union of the American Colonies. This Continental "Great Union" Flag contained 13 horizontal stripes, alternately red and white, with the Great Union of Great Britain—the red cross of St. George and the white cross of St. Andrew—as the canton, or upper left corner, where the stars appear in our present national emblem. In fact, the Stars and Stripes adopted by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777, was but a simple modification of the Great Union Flag—13 white stars being substituted for the crosses.

Just where, when, and by whom the Continental Great Union Flag was designed or originated is solely a matter of conjecture. The records of the Continental Congress and other contemporary sources do not reveal this important fact. But there is ample and authentic evidence as to the date and place of its first display by the Continental Army.

A letter dated Cambridge, January 4, 1776, from General Washington to his military secretary, Col. Joseph Reed, then in Philadelphia, states:

We are at length favourd with a sight of his Majesty's most gracious Speech, breathing sentiments of tenderness & compassion for his deluded American Subjects; . . . the Speech I send you—a volume of them was sent out by the Boston Gentry—and, farcical enough, we gave great Joy to them (the Red Coats I mean) without knowing or intending it, for on that day, the day [Monday, January 1, 1776] which gave being to the New Army (but before the Proclamation [Speech] came to hand) we had hoisted the Union Flag in compliment to the United Colonies, but behold! it was received in Boston as a token of the deep Impression the Speech had made upon us, and as a signal of Submission—so we learn by a person out of Boston last night—by this time I presume they begin to think it strange that we have not made a formal surrender of our Lines. * * *

In Dunlap's Pennsylvania Packet of January 15, 1776, the following account is related:

By authentic advices from the Camp at Cambridge, of the 3d and 4th instant, we learn, . . . That upon the King's Speech arriving at Boston, a great number of them were reprinted and sent out to our lines on the 2d [a mistake—should be 1st as other contemporary evidence shows] of January, which being also the day of forming the new army, the great Union Flag was hoisted on Prospect Hill, in compliment to the United Colonies—this happening soon after the Speeches were delivered at Roxbury, but before they were received at Cambridge, the Boston gentry supposed it to be a token of the deep impression the Speech had made, and a signal of submission—That they were much disappointed at finding several days elapse without some formal measure leading to a surrender, with which they had begun to flatter themselves. . . .

British, as well as American, contemporary accounts substantially prove that the Great Union Flag was not in use by the Colonial forces in Cambridge, Mass., or elsewhere in the camps before Boston, previous to the first display at Prospect Hill, Somerville, Mass., on the 1st of January, 1776.

The captain of a British transport, in a letter to its owner in London, writes the following from Boston under date of January 17, 1776:

I . . . acquaint you of my safe arrival here on the first instant. . . . I can see the Rebels camp very plain, whose colours, a little while ago, were entirely red, but upon the receipt of the King's speech, (which they burnt,) they have hoisted the Union Flag which is here supposed to intimate the union of the Provinces.

In a pamphlet published in London in 1784 appears a letter penned by Lieut. William Carter, of the British Fortieth Regiment of Foot, and dated "Boston, 26th January, 1776." He writes in part:

The Provincials have entered on the new year with spirit. . . .

The King's speech was sent by a flag [of truce] to them on the 1st instant. In a short time after they received it, they hoisted an union flag (above the continental with the thirteen stripes) at Mount Pisga, their citadel; fired thirteen guns, and gave the like number of cheers.

An account in the British Annual Register for 1776, published in London, also confirms the above testimony. That the Great Union Flag was first displayed by the Continental Army at Prospect Hill, January 1, 1776, seems to have been positively established. That it was previously in use by the Continental Navy at Philadelphia in December, 1775, has not been fairly and conclusively proven. However, Mr. Cutler in his history of The Continental "Great Union" Flag admits that this flag was more commonly used by the Navy and privateers, than by the Army, and asserts (p. 44) that—

The first Continental Naval Fleet (in part) left Philadelphia January 4, 1776, on its first expedition, . . . "under the display of a Union Flag, with thirteen stripes in the field." (American Archives: 4, IV, 964.)

Somerville's claim to being the place where the Great Union Flag of the United American Colonies "first waved defiance to a foe" has been perpetuated in the design of the corporate seal of the city of Somerville, designed in 1871. This historical fact is also featured in the design of a new bookplate used by the Somerville Public Library. In 1902–3 the patriotic citizens of Somerville, without financial aid, Federal or State, erected a unique memorial tower on Prospect Hill to commemorate this historic event of nation-wide importance.

The data contained in my address are derived from Mr. Cutler's published material and writings and have been compiled therefrom in condensed form and furnished me by Thomas E. Kissling, 76 Prospect Street, Somerville, Mass., and I wish to express my appreciation of his helpful service.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Monday, June 17, 1929, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. WOOD: Joint Select Committee on the Adjustment of the Numbers and Compensation of the Officers and Employees of Congress. H. R. 3966. A bill to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government; without amendment (Rept. No. 22). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WOOD: A bill (H. R. 3966) to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H. R. 3967) to provide for the making of loans to drainage, levee, or drainage and levee districts on lands now or heretofore subject to seasonal or periodical overflow, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. JAMES: A bill (H. R. 3968) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a sea wall at Squantum, Mass.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEAVITT: A bill (H. R. 3969) providing for annual inspection of United States Veterans' Bureau hospitals by an officer of the Inspector General's office, War Department; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

Also, a bill (H. R. 3970) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes," approved May 26, 1928; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. COLTON: A bill (H. R. 3971) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes, approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes," approved May 26, 1928; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. RANKIN: A bill (H. R. 3972) authorizing the extension of time for commencing and completing of bridge across the Tombigbee River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A bill (H. R. 3973) amending public act No. 534, Sixty-seventh Congress; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 3974) to provide, in the interest of public health, comfort, morals, safety, and welfare, for the discontinuance of the use as dwellings of buildings situated in the alleys of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GRAHAM: A bill (H. R. 3975) to amend sections 726 and 727 of title 18, United States Code, with reference to Federal probation officers, and to add a new section thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ESTERLY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 110) authorizing and requesting the Postmaster General to design and issue a special postage stamp commemorating the hiding of the Liberty Bell at Allentown, Lehigh County, Pa., during the period of the Revolutionary War; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

660. Petition of the Carpet, Linoleum, and Tile Workers Local, No. 1, asking Congress for a reduction of 50 per cent in the Federal tax on incomes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

661. By Mr. BAIRD: Petition of Civil War veterans resident in the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Home, Erie County, Ohio, asking increased pensions for surviving veterans and the widows of veterans; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

662. By Mr. BLOOM: Petition of the board of directors of the Merchants' Association of New York, approving the principles announced by President Hoover in opposition to the proposed export debenture plan of relief, and urging that such plan be not enacted into law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

663. By Mr. BOYLAN: Communication from Mr. Arthur Gran, of the American Colortype Co., 207 West Twenty-fifth Street, New York, protesting against increased tariff on casein; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

664. By Mrs. KAHN: Petition of Native Sons of the Golden West, of California, urging the passage of the Englebright bill, providing that September 9 of each year be a legal holiday for the Federal employees in the State of California; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

665. Also, petition of the Native Sons of the Golden West, of California, urging appropriations for the prevention of forest fires as provided in the Englebright bill; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

666. Also, petition of the Native Sons of the Golden West, of California, urging Congress to prohibit further entrance of Filipinos for permanent settlement in the United States; also urging Congress to provide for apprehension and deportation of violators of the immigration laws from Mexico to those who are ineligible to citizenship; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

667. By Mr. JONAS of North Carolina: Petition of sundry citizens of Celo, N. C., praying for the passage of Civil War pension bill in this special session of Congress; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

668. By Mr. SPEAKS: Evidence in support of House bill 3961, granting an increase of pension to Flora A. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE

MONDAY, June 17, 1929

Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo, D. D., minister of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Gracious and eternal Father, accept our thanks for the light of a new day, for the blessings of home and health, and for the privilege of serving the Nation. Ordain to us for another day Thy watchful providence to guard against all sickness and peril; Thy wise counsel to guide into every right thought and word; Thy sufficient grace to defend from all temptation of wrong; and Thy atoning love to cover all our sins. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Friday last, when, on request of Mr. JONES and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1453) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3671) to authorize and direct a survey to be made of the Escambia River and its tributaries, Alabama and Florida, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRINT PAPER FROM CORN AND COTTON STALKS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 61 (by Mr. HEFLIN, agreed to May 16, 1929), information relative to the making of print paper from cotton stalks, corn stalks, and other material, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

CLAIM OF WILLIAM K. KENNEDY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of William K. Kennedy, customs agent, El Paso, Tex., in the sum of $612.49, for salary and expenses incident to transporting three Federal prisoners from the Philippine Islands to the United States marshal at San Francisco, Calif., in the year 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—VOTE ON FARM RELIEF CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on last Friday, on the final vote on the adoption of the conference report on the farm relief bill, I was absent. I was absent on account of the assurance given me by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], that there would be no vote on the question on that day. But for that assurance, I should have been present to have voted on the adoption of the conference report. I wish the RECORD to show that if I had been present I would have voted "yea" on the final adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I can not let the opportunity go by without saying that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture never gave any assurance whatever in regard to the matter referred to by the Senator from Kentucky, but he gave it as his best judgment that there would be no vote on the question until Saturday, because, under the House rules, usually a conference report must go over for a day for printing. But on this particular occasion unanimous consent was given for the immediate consideration of the conference report in the House, and there was nothing that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry could do to prevent a vote in the Senate on the adoption of the conference report on Friday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am not complaining of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am merely explaining the reason why I was not here when the vote was taken and why I did not vote for the adoption of the conference report.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the San Francisco Funeral Directors Association and Local Union No. 1, Carpet, Linoleum, and Tile Workers, of San Francisco, both in the State of California, favoring a reduction of 50 per cent in the Federal tax on earned incomes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a memorial of sundry citizens of Clinton and vicinity, in the State of Oklahoma, protesting against revision of the present calendar unless a proviso be included definitely guaranteeing the preservation of the continuity of the weekly cycle without the insertion of blank days, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

STATE OF WISCONSIN.

Joint Resolution 70, A

No. —, 1929

Joint resolution relating to the repeal of the national-origins provision of the Federal immigration law

Whereas the so-called national-origins provision of the Federal immigration law will go into effect July 1, 1929, unless repealed, suspended, or modified prior thereto; and

Whereas this national-origins provision will greatly reduce the number of immigrants who can be admitted from Germany, Ireland, and the Scandinavian countries, the quota for Germany being reduced from 51,227 to 29,957, the quota for the Irish Free State from 28,567 to 17,853, and the quota for the three Scandinavian countries—Norway, Denmark, and Sweden—from 18,808 to 6,872, while, in contrast, the quota for Great Britain and the north of Ireland is increased from 34,007 to 65,721; and

Whereas this national-origins provision is a great injustice to all American citizens of German, Irish, and Scandinavian descent who for three centuries have helped to build the Nation in times of peace and to defend it in times of war; and

Whereas President Hoover, recognizing the injustice of this provision, has recommended to Congress the repeal of the national-origins clause of the immigration law, and action upon this recommendation must be taken at the present special session of Congress if it is to be effective: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby again memorializes the Congress of the United States to promptly enact legislation to repeal the national-origins provision of the Federal immigration law; be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of Congress and each Wisconsin Member thereof.

IMPORT OF FOREIGN OIL

Mr. PINE. Mr. President, I present a letter from the Hon. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, advocating a tariff on foreign-produced petroleum oil imported into the United States. I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Indianapolis, Ind., June 8, 1929.

Hon. W. B. PINE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As president of the United Mine Workers of America, and speaking for that organization, I earnestly urge upon the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States Congress the vital necessity of a tariff on the import of foreign-produced petroleum oil imported into the United States. And I request that in the preparation of a tariff law, a task with which Congress is now engaged, you provide for such tariff on oil. This action will be in the best interests of the general public of the United States, because it will aid very greatly in affording employment for many thousands of now idle men in the coal-producing industry, thus enabling these men to earn a living for themselves and their families.

The free importation of cheap oil from foreign countries into the United States has had a depressing effect upon American-produced coal, and we see no good reason why this great, vital, fundamental American industry should be thus penalized in favor of foreign industry and foreign labor. There is no question but that consumption of many millions of tons of coal have been displaced by the use of oil produced in the United States. This of itself has done vast injury to the coal industry. To permit the continued free entry of many more millions of barrels of foreign oil simply means still further shrinkage in the consumption of American coal and the wrecking of this great American industry. Just how this thing works will be made clear when I point out that the 431,067,000 barrels of fuel oil used in the United States in 1927 displaced 110,000,000 tons of coal, or approximately 20 per cent of the normal output of American coal mines. Even this displacement was so disastrous as to close a vast number of mines and to throw many thousands of mine workers out of employment. And now, if this Government permits the continued free entry of foreign-produced oil, it will mean the closing down of more mines and the unemployment of more thousands of men.

When hundreds of thousands—aye, millions—of men are out of work, as is the case at present, there must necessarily follow a slump in business and commerce of the country. These men, with no opportunity to earn a living, have no money to spend. They can not buy the products of mills, factories, and shops. They can not trade with local merchants and business men. Consequently the entire business and industrial structure of our country suffers from business depression. Especially is this true in those countless communities, once prosperous but now practically bankrupt, where coal mines either are wholly idle or operating but a few hours a week, and where the earnings of coal-mine workers have shrunk almost entirely if not altogether to the vanishing point. Coal is produced in 30 States and these conditions exist in each and every one of these 30 States. We contend that Congress should not take any step that would further aggravate this intolerable condition, and this is what would happen if foreign oil were given continued entry free of tariff duty into the United States.

We contend further that it is the duty of Congress to protect the interests of American labor rather than that of foreign labor. Americans are not employed to any appreciable extent in the production of oil in foreign countries. Wages paid for labor performed in the production of oil in those foreign countries go to inhabitants of those countries. They receive American money for producing oil that would be shipped duty free into the United States and throw thousands more American workingmen out of employment. There would be no justice in such a plan from the standpoint of the best interests of the American public. On the other hand, an adequate tariff on foreign oil, whether it comes from Mexico, South America, or anywhere else, would strengthen the demand for American oil and American coal for fuel purposes in this country, and it would mean employment, earning power, food, clothing, shelter, education, and progress for countless thousands of good, loyal American citizens. It would mean a revival of the coal industry, now so near to the industrial graveyard. It would mean improvement in industry, trade, commerce, and transportation. It would mean more business for the merchants and business men of the 30 coal-producing States. I may state it clearly as our position that these considerations far outweigh any benefit that could possibly accrue to the people of the United States by permitting foreign oil to enter this country duty free.

Our understanding of the matter is that tariff duties are levied for two purposes, viz, to raise revenue for the Government and to protect American industry and American labor from the destructive competition of pauper wages paid to labor in many foreign countries. I do not hesitate to say that Congress can find no other American industry that needs this kind of protection to-day more than does the fuel industry.

Therefore, in the name of the United Mine Workers of America, and in behalf of American labor, I again earnestly urge that Congress levy an adequate tariff duty on the import of foreign oil into the United States.

Very truly yours,

JOHN L. LEWIS, President.

SHOOTING AT FORT BAYARD VETERANS' HOSPITAL, NEW MEXICO

Mr. BRATTON. I present a telegram from representatives of certain veterans' organizations at the Veterans' Bureau hospital at Fort Bayard, N. Mex., relating to certain press dispatches concerning an incident involving a shooting at Fort Bayard Veterans' Hospital in connection with the enforcement of the prohibition law, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FORT BAYARD, N. MEX., June 15, 1929.

Hon. SAM G. BRATTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Albuquerque Journal carries Associated Press item dated Washington, June 13, stating Prohibition Commissioner Doran Thursday announced he had received a report of the shooting at Fort Bayard Veterans' Hospital of J. J. Thompson, alleged bootlegger, by prohibition agents. He further states his capture was a result of a drive by prohibition agents to prevent bootleggers from selling whisky in the vicinity of Fort Bayard Veterans' Hospital. This shooting occurred at Hanover, a mining town approximately 10 miles from Fort Bayard and had no connections with this hospital. Investigation has been made and we can not find that Thompson has ever been on this reservation. Realizing that the Director of the Veterans' Bureau is anxious to close this hospital, and fearing this false report released by the Prohibition Commissioner will be to our detriment, we are earnestly requesting that you condemn the Prohibition Department for this unfair report on our hospital. The patients and personnel of this hospital resent the stigma placed upon us by this erroneous publicity through the Associated and United Press given them by the Prohibition Department.

THE MEDITERRANEAN FRUIT FLY

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I present a couple of brief editorials regarding the Mediterranean fruit fly; also a communication and resolution upon that subject from the National Canners Association. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the editorials, communication, and resolution were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Gainesville (Fla.) Sun of June 8, 1929]

THE RIGHT ANGLE

In making a plea to the authorities in Washington for compensation to Florida growers to reimburse them for crops destroyed in the fruit-fly eradication work, members of the Florida delegation stressed the fact that indemnities should properly be considered a part of the eradication plan. From a legal standpoint perhaps there might be some question about that, but from a psychological and moral basis there can be no contrary arguments whatever.

Compensation, if it is finally enacted, is more or less of a necessary evil. It is not to be considered as charity in any sense of the word. Growers whose crops are destroyed will have suffered much more loss than if they had been allowed to market them, especially next year, when there is bound to be a short crop and good prices. And the amount which Congress is expected to set aside for this purpose will not begin to cover the economic losses sustained by this State in the way of actual losses to growers, packers, carriers, and allied interests—to say nothing of depreciated properties, depreciated land values, etc., which can be computed only in terms of scores of millions of dollars.

All of which loss is readily and cheerfully borne by Florida in the war to exterminate this pest—a pest which merely happened to stage its first serious outbreak in Florida—in order that the other States might be saved similar losses and sacrifices. Ten million dollars is little enough to enable these growers to maintain their groves on a normal basis, to say nothing of possible profits. The fly has got to go, and compensation will greatly aid its flight to other climes.

[From the Fort Myers (Fla.) Press of June 13, 1929]

GROWER INDEMNITIES NEEDED NOW

If Congress in enacting legislation for indemnities to Florida fruit and truck growers makes similar State appropriations mandatory, the Federal relief will become inoperative. Both Congress and the administration regard the Mediterranean fruit-fly infestations as a national menace. This has been borne out by the attitude toward the original outbreak and the eradication measures adopted to date. If that be true, compensation is also a Federal responsibility, although there is a marked tendency in Washington to make the contemplated appropriations contingent on the State's ability to go 50–50.

If reimbursement by the Federal Government was contingent upon Florida's willingness to stand half of the expense, it might be a different matter. Florida's spirit is willing, but the pocketbook is weak. This State is having a difficult time trying to raise enough funds to maintain its credit standing and to meet serious tax delinquencies. Right now it is in the midst of an extra session of the legislature, called for the sole purpose of finding ways and means to conduct State affairs on a most rigid economy basis. To match Federal appropriations running into the millions is out of the question right now. Nevertheless the compensation is an immediate and vital necessity.

However, the National Government may be assured that Florida is prepared to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to cope with its most serious economic problem—the fruit-fly invasion of the United States. It would seem an act of gracious consideration for Florida, as well as one of expediency in meeting a national issue, if the Federal authorities would release their part of the indemnity funds without forcing the State to guarantee its share first.

Florida realizes that it is up against a serious situation. Losses attributable to the fruit fly will affect every citizen in the State, regardless of his occupation. The pest will cost this Commonwealth millions upon millions of dollars, directly and indirectly. The growers whose crops are destroyed or quarantined out of regular market channels will be the biggest direct losers, even if they are compensated sufficiently to maintain their investment. We believe that everybody in the State realizes this and is prepared to fight it out no matter what the cost. And if the Federal Government will not make our immediate cash participation absolute, Florida will find a way to meet its part of the obligation.

NATIONAL CANNERS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1929.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I am inclosing herewith copy of a resolution which was passed by the board of directors of the National Canners Association at its meeting in Washington on May 23.

It is the desire of our association to assist in every possible way in helping the legislation which you have introduced to reimburse the Florida Fruit Growers for crops destroyed in furtherance of the Government's eradication program.

Very truly yours,

FRANK E. GORRELL, Secretary.

Mr. Preston McKinney presented the problem of the Mediterranean fruit fly infestation in Florida. On motion of Mr. Preston McKinney, the board of directors adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas within the last few weeks the Mediterranean fruit fly, a major pest, has for the first time been found in the continental United States; and

"Whereas, if permitted to spread, it will do tremendous damage to canning crops, both fruits and vegetables; and

"Whereas our Federal Government and the government and people of Florida have united in a thoroughgoing campaign of extermination: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the Federal Government and the State of Florida be upheld and supported in every proper way in this important work; and be it further

"Resolved, That should the United States Department of Agriculture and the Florida authorities conclude that, in fairness to the growers and as a part of the necessary means of extermination, reparation be paid for a part of the losses necessarily sustained by growers, we urge the Congress, the Bureau of the Budget, and the President to provide the necessary funds for such purpose, as well as any additional funds which may from time to time be required for work of extermination and for the work of thorough research; and be it further

"Resolved, That we heartily commend the determined spirit and ability of Dr. Charles L. Marlatt, Chief of the Plant Quarantine and Control Administration of the United States Department of Agriculture, and Dr. Wilmon Newell, of the State Plant Board of Florida, in their important battle; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to all parties at interest, including the Members of the Congress."

INTERNATIONAL RADIO CONFERENCE

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 102) making an appropriation for expenses of participation by the United States in the meeting of the International Technical Consulting Committee on Radio Communications, to be held at The Hague in September, 1929; and I ask unanimous consent for its consideration. I wish that it may be passed at the present time, so it can be sent to the House immediately.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Let the joint resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have no objection to its immediate consideration, but I want to ask a question or two about the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. I understand the Senator does not object to its present consideration?

Mr. DILL. I do not object, but, as I said, I wish to ask some questions. The Senator said it had to be passed immediately, but I desire to ask a question nevertheless.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

Mr. DILL. I understand the report of the committee cuts the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget from $35,000 to $20,000. Is that correct?

Mr. WARREN. It was reduced in the committee after investigation showing, so far as we went, that it was more money than would be needed for the purpose. It was stated before the committee that they desired $14,000 or more for shipping and $500 for railroad, and so forth, and upon investigation it was found the contracts could be made with the ships and with the railroads for a very much smaller amount. My desire is, since objection was made as to the amount, to have it passed with the amendment which we have reported and let it go to the House and see whether the amount should, in their opinion, be restored to the original sum or remain as it is, or that some point be agreed upon between the two figures.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator that the convention is a very important matter to the future rights of the United States in international radio. Upon the decision of the convention will depend largely the number of wave lengths to which this Government and this country will be entitled under the international arrangement for use for international purposes. I think we should be very careful not to limit the number of experts going there in such a manner as to hinder the work of those who will be there representing this country in presenting our case fully.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Surely there will not be 13 experts needed to take the trip and discuss radio. We thought to send 13 men there, some of them merely on a pleasure trip, as so frequently happens in cases of this kind, would be unnecessary. Half a dozen men, in our opinion, would be sufficient. Thirteen men carrying over $2,000 apiece would only be $26,000, and the committee could not see why they needed $35,000 to travel in a matter of this kind to The Hague. I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment which we have reported, cutting the appropriation from $35,000 to $20,000.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I do not want to make any fight about it. I only want to impress upon the Senate the importance of the convention, and to impress also of how little moment are a few thousand dollars when we consider that we are making a presentation of our case to secure wave lengths for international communication probably for many years to come. If the committee thinks that $20,000 is enough and will go into conference with the House ready to listen to representations that may be made and to raise the amount again if the representations are sufficiently convincing, I shall not object further. But I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to the convention because of its importance to the future of international radio.

I am not going to offer any amendments or to interpose any objection, but I do express the hope that the Senate conferees, if the matter goes to conference, will remember the great importance of the convention to the future of the country in international radio affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, line 3, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$35,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $20,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to remain available until June 30, 1930, to defray the expenses of participation by the United States in the meeting of the International Technical Consulting Committee on Radio Communications, to be held at The Hague in September, 1929, including travel and subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), compensation of employees, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary, rent of office, purchase of necessary books and documents, printing and binding, official cards, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. VANDENBERG:

A bill (S. 1536) for the relief of Blanch Broomfield; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 1537) to amend subdivision (a) of section 1 of the act entitled "An act making it a felony with penalty for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law," approved March 4, 1929; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. DILL:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) authorizing the Cascade Tunnel Association to enter upon and have reserved and conveyed land belonging to the United States within the forest reserve in the easterly limits of King County and the westerly limits of Chelan County, Wash., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

INTERNATIONAL PETROLEUM EXPOSITION

Mr. PINE. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution, which I ask may be read, and I ask then unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the President to invite the States of the Union and foreign countries to participate in the International Petroleum Exposition at Tulsa, Okla., to begin October 5, 1929, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to invite by proclamation, or in such other manner as he may deem proper, the States of the Union and all foreign countries to participate in the proposed International Petroleum Exposition, to be held at Tulsa, Okla., beginning October 5, 1929, for the purpose of exhibiting samples of fabricated and raw products of all countries used in the petroleum industry and bringing together buyers and sellers for promotion of trade and commerce in such products.

SEC. 2. All articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the International Petroleum Exposition upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of the payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and necessary exposure, the duty, if paid, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma a question. Is the resolution initiated by the oil producers who recently sought the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States under which they might form combinations in restraint of trade and foster the monopoly which largely exists among the large oil producers of the United States?

Mr. PINE. Mr. President, I hardly understand the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. Perhaps it was my fault. What I am trying to ascertain is whether or not the movement is sponsored by the Oil Trust of the United States, the six or seven Standard Oil corporations and a few others which control the Petroleum Institute, or by some persons who have been trying to get from the Attorney General permission, which, fortunately, he has denied, to form combinations in restraint of trade and more firmly to rivet the oil monopoly upon the people of the United States?

Mr. PINE. The exposition is sponsored by the people of Tulsa and the State of Oklahoma. Of course, those who are interested in the monopoly do participate in the exposition, but it has nothing to do with the monopoly of the industry whatsoever.

Mr. KING. Is it the thought, when the convention shall be held, if one shall be held at Tulsa, that there shall be an effort made to secure an international cartel which will control the price of oil?

Mr. PINE. It is not the desire of those who are behind the exposition to accomplish that end. The exposition is an annual exposition held at Tulsa, and Congress passed a similar joint resolution last year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I understand this is a joint resolution. It is the custom of the Senate that such joint resolutions shall go to a committee. I feel that for that reason alone I shall have to object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES

Mr. TYDINGS introduced a bill (S. 1535) to extend the time for the construction of the bridge across the Chesapeake Bay, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I introduce a bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge at Newport, Ark. A misunderstanding occurred between the highway commission of the State and the War Department with reference to it which makes the bill necessary. I ask that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1548) extending the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Newport, Ark., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHEPPARD subsequently said: Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce I ask leave to report back two bridge bills. They are unanimously reported by the committee, and I ask unanimous consent for their consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the reports will be received at this time.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1535) to extend the time for the construction of the bridge across the Chesapeake Bay, reported it without amendment; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress, approved February 15, 1927, to be built by the Chesapeake Bay Bridge Co., a corporation, across the Chesapeake Bay, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD also, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1548) extending the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Newport, Ark., reported it without amendment, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the White River at or near Newport, Ark., authorized to be built by the State Highway Commission of Arkansas by the act of Congress approved May 29, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTHA E. DAUGHERTY

Mr SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1456) granting an increase of pension to Martha E. Daugherty, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed

SALARY ADJUSTMENT FOR CONGRESSIONAL OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. BLEASE and Mr. ODDIE each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (S. 1531) to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO THE TARIFF BILL

Mr. NORRIS, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. PINE each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to House bill 2667, the tariff revision bill, which were severally referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRATTON submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2667, the tariff revision bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PROGRESS OF PEACE—ADDRESS BY HON. CHARLES E. HUGHES

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have in my hand an important address delivered by Mr. Charles E. Hughes entitled "The Year's Major Factors in the Progress of Peace." I desire to have this address printed as a Senate document, and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to obtaining the necessary consent and an estimate of the expenses of printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 3671) to authorize and direct a survey to be made of the Escambia River and its tributaries, Alabama and Florida, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXTENDING THE TIMES FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN BRIDGES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1453) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of certain bridges, and for other purposes, which was, on page 4, after line 15, to insert the following:

(j) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Aberdeen, in Monroe County, Miss., authorized to be built by the board of supervisors of Monroe County by the act of Congress approved February 8, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

(k) That the States of Illinois and Indiana be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Wabash River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Vincennes, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

There is hereby conferred upon the States of Illinois and Indiana all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the States in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such States, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such States.

(l) That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Tampa Bay from Pinellas Point to Piney Point, Fla., authorized to be built by the act of Congress approved April 5, 1928, by Herman Simmonds, jr., his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

(m) That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, on the projected Gallatin-Martha Road, between Sumner and Wilson Counties, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund authorized by the law of the State of Tennessee which provides for the construction of the bridge to be built under this act, which shall be sufficient to amortize the bonds issued under the laws of Tennessee as soon as possible under reasonable charges but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

(n) That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, on the projected Charlotte-Ashland City Road, in Cheatham County, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund, authorized by the law of the State of Tennessee which provides for the construction of the bridge to be built under this act, which shall be sufficient to amortize the bonds issued under such act as soon as possible under reasonable charges but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

(o) That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Gainesboro and Granville in the county of Jackson, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund authorized by the law of the State of Tennessee which provides for the construction of the bridge to be built under this act, which shall be sufficient to amortize the bonds issued under the law of Tennessee, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 25 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Washington that there is an amendment in reference to two bridges in Tennessee. I yield to the Senator from Washington to make a motion in regard to the bill, if he desires to do so.

Mr. JONES. I was going to move that the Senate concur in the House amendment; and I so move, Mr. President.

The motion was agreed to.

RADIO ADDRESSES OF SENATOR ALLEN AND SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Washington Star of Sunday, the 16th instant, contains a very interesting report of the speeches of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. ALLEN] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] on proceedings and enactments of the present session of the Congress. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTMAN AND ALLEN DEBATE FARM PLAN—KANSAN LAUDS PROGRAM OF ADMINISTRATION—NEVADAN ASSAILS IT

The farm-relief program of the Hoover administration, a program with the much-discussed debentures no part of it, was lauded and denounced in turn last evening in radio addresses by two Members of the Senate who figured prominently in the long legislative battle.

The bill which President Hoover signed yesterday with evident satisfaction was described as "a happy solution of a perplexing problem," by Senator HENRY J. ALLEN, Republican, of Kansas.

The opposite view was advanced by Senator KEY PITTMAN, Nevada Democrat, who asserted that in passing the bill "the Republican administration has violated its pledges to the farmers of the country."

DISCUSS HISTORY OF MEASURE

The two Senators discussed the history of the passage of the bill and gave their views on what may be expected to develop from its provisions, in addresses broadcast over a coast-to-coast network of stations as features of the National Radio Forum, arranged by the Star and sponsored by the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Senator ALLEN, who succeeded to the seat held formerly by Vice President Curtis, did not stop with an expression of gratification over the passage of the farm bill. He predicted that the tariff bill passed by the Senate—"if one is passed"—will be "a very different bill from the one coming from the House.

SEES BORAH RESOLUTION O. K.

Asserting that President Hoover called Congress into extraordinary session to accomplish tariff revision with special reference to agricultural products, he described the House tariff bill as one that would set up "an astonishing revision of schedules." Senator ALLEN expressed the opinion that the Senate this week will pass the Borah resolution under which the Senate Finance Committee, which has the tariff bill in charge, would be instructed to limit revision to agricultural schedules.

"Passage of that resolution will be grim notice on the House that the Senate intends to follow out the Republican Party's pledges in the presidential campaign," he declared.

Commenting on the farm bill, Senator ALLEN said it was not surprising that the debenture clause finally was stricken out. Nobody doubted its ultimate defeat, he said, for the reason that Members of Congress opposing the President's announced views would not take the responsibility of going to the country with a refusal to concur in an effort to solve the farm problem. He remarked that once the Senate forced the House to go on record with an expression on the debenture plan, that body voted against it "with surprising alacrity."

"It is astonishing," he said, referring to Members of the Senate as well as the House, "that men will denounce a measure up to the very moment of the vote and then vote for it. I realize," he added, "that the statement casts reflection on a man who gets himself in a parliamentary box."

PITTMAN'S EXPLANATION

Senator PITTMAN'S explanation of the final vote in the Senate, which disclosed only eight of all who had fought for the debenture plan voting for the bill without it, was as follows:

"In the face of the active and bitter opposition of the President to the debenture plan, and in view of the conduct of the House of Representatives, further effort upon the part of the friends of the farmers seemed hopeless and futile, so some of these Senators surrendered, for the present, their convictions and voted to pass the administration bill in the hope that experience will convince the administration of their error where pledges, reason, and logic have failed."

Senator PITTMAN contended that adequate discussion of the debenture plan was had before the Senate Agricultural Committee incorporated it in its bill. The discussion, he said, incorporated testimony before a subcommittee of Agricultural Department experts to whom the President had referred the subject. He cited Senator BORAH'S advocacy of the debenture plan, describing BORAH as one of the responsible spokesmen for Mr. Hoover during the presidential campaign.

ALLEN HELD IT "STRANGER"

Senator ALLEN'S view was that injection of the debenture plan by the Senate was "surprising." Agreeing that the plan had been discussed in an earlier period, he held that the public was "an entire stranger to debenture." In view of pledges made during the campaign, he asserted, the people were bound to hold that Congress would follow the President more closely perhaps than at other times because of the primary emergency of the agricultural situation.

Senator PITTMAN prepared his address in advance of delivery, but Senator ALLEN spoke extemporaneously, not having had an opportunity to put his views in writing for the broadcast.

Senator PITTMAN spoke as follows:

"Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, through the kind invitation of the Star National Radio Forum, I have the honor and privilege to address you with regard to the reasons for and the accomplishments of the present special session of Congress.

"Let us first ascertain the reasons which impelled the President to call the special and extraordinary session of Congress. In the first sentence of his message to Congress he said:

"'I have called this special session of Congress to redeem two pledges given in the last election—farm relief and limited changes in the tariff.'

"The pledges referred to in the President's message were those made by him and by his authorized spokesmen during the last campaign, and the promises contained in the Republican platform that 'the Republican Party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which shall place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with the industries to insure its prosperity and success.'

"The limited changes in the tariff evidently referred to changes that would tend to reduce the price of things the farmer must buy and increase the price of the products that he sells. That tariff revision alone could not fully accomplish such purpose was confessed by the adoption of the program in the Republican platform for farm relief and in the speeches delivered by the Republican candidate to the voters of the country.

PROGRESS IS REVIEWED

"The necessity for a general revision of the tariff schedules or the raising of the tariff rates upon the products of manufacturing industries was not intimated in the Republican platform.

"What has been accomplished so far by the special session of Congress in the redemption of such pledges? Upon the convening of Congress substantially identical administration farm relief bills were introduced in the Senate and in the House of Representatives and referred to the Committee on Agriculture in each body. The Senate committee immediately proceeded with the consideration and study of the proposed legislation. Twelve hearings were held and 66 witnesses were heard. The so-called optional debenture plan was proposed in committee as an addition to the bill by way of amendment, so that it might be utilized by the President's farm board at their option, in the event that the permanent plan established in the bill should prove ineffective as to some particular crop. Such debenture plan was fully discussed and considered at such hearings. The committee favored the adoption of such debenture amendment. Before action was taken, however, a subcommittee, appointed by the committee, called upon the President to ascertain his views with regard to such debenture amendment. The subcommittee was advised by the President—so it was asserted in the Senate—that he had substantially at that particular moment no opinion upon the subject, but referred the subcommittee and the Committee on Agriculture to the experts of the Agriculture Department.

"Thereafter the Committee on Agriculture called before it the experts of the Agriculture Department and listened to their testimony. The hearings being closed, the committee voted unanimously to adopt the debenture amendment to the bill, and then, by unanimous vote, reported favorably to the Senate the bill, including the debenture amendment.

SENATE ADOPTED DEBENTURE

"The Senate by an aye and no vote adopted the debenture amendment to the bill, and then by an aye and no vote passed the bill as so amended. The chairman of the committee, on the floor of the Senate, after the adoption of the debenture amendment and the passage of the bill by the Senate, stated that he and three other members of the committee, in executive meeting of the committee, had reserved the right to change their minds and to vote in the Senate against the debenture amendment if they so desired. The committee is composed of 18 members.

"The bill, as amended, was then placed in conference between the two Houses to see if an agreement could be reached. The representatives of both bodies on the conference agreed upon the elimination of the debenture amendment and upon the House bill substantially as it was introduced.

"The Senate, on the 11th day of June, by an aye and no vote, refused to concur in such conference report and refused to pass the bill without the debenture amendment.

"The House of Representatives on June 13, by an aye and no vote of 250 to 113, declared that they would not agree that the debenture plan should be included in the bill as an amendment. This overwhelming vote was to be expected.

"The States whose chief industry is agriculture have a small representation in the House. A large element in that body coming from the manufacturing centers are opposed to any farm relief, while a still larger element is subservient to the party whip.

"The Senate finally on Friday, the 14th of June, passed the administration's farm marketing bill without the debenture plan amendment and substantially in the original form in which the bill was introduced in the House.

"In the face of the active and bitter opposition of the President to the debenture plan, and in view of the conduct of the House of Representatives, further effort upon the part of the friends of the farmers seemed hopeless and futile, so some of these Senators surrendered, for the present, their convictions and voted to pass the administration bill in the hope that experience will convince the administration of their error where pledges, reason, and logic have failed.

BORAH IS QUOTED

"And what is the bill and what has been accomplished by its passage? Does it constitute a redemption of the pledges made by and on behalf of the Republican Party? Let us consult the opinion of Senator BORAH for an answer to these questions. No one can question that he is a friend of the farmer and that he was the most effective supporter of the President during the last campaign. He took part in the drafting of the farm plank in the Republican platform. He understood and he explained its meaning to the farmers of the country, and won their confidence and their support for the Republican ticket. In his speech in the Senate on June 10, he said, 'We think we will be able to show that the debenture is one of the indispensable steps to placing the farmer upon an economic equality with the other industries so long as other industries are enjoying the protection which we give them through the tariff.' And farther on he declared, 'I repeat, as I said in the beginning, the real contest in this fight is whether the farmer is to be brought within the purview of the protective-tariff system. If he is denied a debenture, if he is denied adequate duties, then he is outside the system, its victim, and not its beneficiary.' In reply to Senator ALLEN, he said, 'I do not agree with the Senator upon that matter. I maintain that if the debenture plan is essential to placing the farmer upon an economic equality with other industries which enjoy the protective tariff, then our failure to do it would be a profound violation of the pledge we made.' In those words he reasserted the position that was maintained by all of the advocates of the debenture amendment.

"Senator JOHNSON, in his speech in the Senate on June 11, in opposition to the administration bill in the form that it afterwards passed the Senate, said: 'You may take it that in the days gone by when the Jardine bill was presented to the Committee on Agriculture—and it is the bill that is presented to us to-day, minus the debenture provision—that bill was repudiated by the Committees on Agriculture of both Houses of the Congress, by the Republican Party, and by the entire Congress.' Thus spoke Senator JOHNSON, who ran with Roosevelt.

HOUSE PASSES NEW BILL

"Not an advocate of such bill denied such charge. Similar assertions have been made on the floor of the Senate and no denial was ever recorded.

"The House of Representatives has passed an entirely new tariff bill, revising upward hundreds of schedules. What do the Republican Senators, who voted for the debenture and who are the proven friends of the farmers, have to say with regard to this tariff act? I again quote from Senator BORAH'S speech. A colloquy took place between the Senator and Senator EDGE. Senator EDGE asserted that the new tariff act to a very decided extent increased the tariff upon practically all agricultural products. Senator BORAH replied: 'Does the Senator contend that the tariff bill just passed by the House would afford protection to American agriculture?' To which Senator EDGE responded: 'The representatives of the agricultural States, Members of the Senate in 1922, practically wrote the schedule for agriculture that appeared in that bill.' To this last statement Senator BORAH replied: 'I do not know anything about that; but if the representatives of agriculture wrote the bill which just passed the House, my conception of protection of American agriculture and theirs is widely different.' Continuing, Mr. BORAH said: 'Mr. President, it is not enough that they put duties upon the agricultural products; the important point is the protection which they give to agriculture compared with the protection which they give industries. * * * He (the farmer) is not willing, in order to get those protective duties, to have embargoes placed upon manufactured products.' Thus spoke BORAH, the avowed advocate of the protective-tariff policy.

"It is clear, in the opinion of the advocates of the debenture plan in both parties, that nothing beneficial has been accomplished so far during the special session, and that the Republican administration has violated its pledges to the farmers of the country, in which opinion I respectfully concur."

FARM RELIEF AND THE TARIFF

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Baltimore Sun of last Saturday entitled "The Devil Drives," in which farm relief and the debenture are discussed, and an editorial from to-day's Baltimore Sun entitled "Tariff Warnings," dealing with the resolution introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE DEVIL DRIVES

The farm-relief measure that is to become law is not a redemption of the pledge made by the Republican Party in Kansas City to equalize agriculture with industry. It offers no prospect, at the best, of more than stabilization of prices, which is not at all the same thing as equalization of agricultural prices with those of industry. At the same time the measure makes hash of the Republican preachments on keeping the Government out of business, dinned into the public's ears with merciless monotony these past nine years, for never in time of peace has a bureaucracy so gigantic been raised by the Government to guide and regulate the business affairs of millions of individual citizens.

To tell the plain, bald truth the President and his party do not know how to produce an equalizer between agriculture and industry. Industry has been favored for generations with effectual tariff protection, which permits the manufacturers to lift the prices paid by farmers as well as by the urban communities which share the profits of protection. Mr. Hoover dare not take the tariff off industry, as some of the more radical western members of his party have suggested. Nor can he make tariff protection for the farmers effectual with respect to the great basic crops. It is obvious that tariff duties are meaningless on crops of which we produce a surplus that must be exported. That has been explained too often by economists and has been admitted too often by eminent Republicans to call for discussion.

Republicans like Dawes and Lowden have said this situation must be met by the Government's putting agriculture on stilts and then assessing the net costs against the farmer—through the equalization fee—so that he would not overproduce and multiply his existing troubles. But Mr. Hoover, like Mr. Coolidge, has held that the system of assessing benefits against the farmer, through the equalization fee, is not workable, and they made out a powerful case. Republicans like BORAH have said that a direct Government bounty on agricultural exports, called a debenture, is on all fours logically with the protective tariff for industry, and they have proved that. But Mr. Hoover holds that, whatever the analogy in principle, in practice the debenture would be disastrous, and he has substantially proved that.

Yet, needs must when the devil drives. There is the fact that after all these years of "the American system" of which Mr. Hoover boasts, the farmer is on the down end of the economic seesaw. There is also the fact that Mr. Hoover and his spokesmen, Senators BORAH and BROOKHART conspicuous among them, led the farmers to believe he would remedy their ills. Moreover, Mr. Hoover talked very largely in his campaign about the insignificance of "several hundred millions" taken from the Public Treasury of so rich a Nation as this for the benefit of the farmers. And therefore we have ahead of us a law under which the Government, with a fund of half a billion from the Treasury to draw on, will begin to see what it can do by stepping into the farmer's affairs here and there the while it evades direct responsibility wherever possible.

This half billion fund is an enormous lot of money, and may be used to regulate virtually every stage of the movement of crops from the time they appear above the ground to the time they appear upon the consumer's table. And under the bill the Government is prepared to sustain absolute losses as a result of interposition. Yet the administration insists that the Government is not doing this. Stabilization corporations, owned by the farmers, are to do it with the Government's money, if the Government is convinced that it should grant specific sums desired. And the objective of the Government, as revealed in inner discussions among those in touch with its authorities and experts, is to stabilize the price of certain crops—that is, to check, if possible, violent fluctuation in the price of a crop in a given period—which certainly is not identical with equalization of agricultural prices with those of industry, although it involves interference with private trade.

Clearly, then, there is to be no bold undertaking to redeem the Kansas City pledge to equalize, and yet there is to be set up a bureaucracy so immense and so powerful that, however it may be camouflaged as a farm board working through stabilization corporations and other farmers' agencies, surpasses anything the country has known in peace times. Mr. Hoover is to try to do something, though he is not certain what he can do or how far he should go, and he is to work through a vast bureaucracy, though he professes to hate bureaucratic interference with business and wishes to call this by another name. All of this should be recognized. That done, everyone will hope that in cautious experimentation with his new machinery he will ultimately produce real and not illusory benefits for the distressed farmers, even though they may be less than promised, and that he will not find his new bureaucracy a Frankenstein monster.

TARIFF WARNINGS

The possible consequences of unrestrained and indiscriminate tariff boosting such as is provided by the bill passed by the House have been plain to informed people ever since the agitation started. Dramatic substantiation of these unheeded warnings, however, is given in the report in to-day's Sun by Mr. J. A. Stevenson, from Ottawa, citing the already bitter feeling in Canadian farming circles against American tariff policy. The victory of an unprecedented number of Conservatives in the provincial election in Saskatchewan, which is ordinarily as Liberal as Mississippi is Democratic, is attributed by Mr. Stevenson to rural resentment at the American duties on cattle and to a desire to put into power the political partly already committed to tariff reprisals. Mr. Stevenson's prediction is that not even a promise by Premier Mackenzie King to support such a tariff will avail to save his party, for the simple reason that when reprisals are desired the people will prefer the political party which is whole-heartedly for reprisals, i. e., the Conservative Party.

Add Canada to France and Argentina as the most articulate objectors to our irresponsible tariff plans, and we have a picture of what the future holds in store. The attempt of Senator BORAH and Senator ALLEN to hold tariff revision down to the agricultural schedules, as Mr. Hoover originally suggested Congress should do, will not, of course, improve the feeling in western Canada described by Mr. Stevenson, but it represents a worthy effort to reduce friction generally and to prevent the development of other even more dangerous unpleasantness in other quarters. Senator JIM WATSON, the Republican leader in the Senate, insists that the President favors industrial tariff increases along with those on farm products. Messrs. BORAH and ALLEN insist that Mr. Hoover is for a farmer's revision only. Although it is possible to quote

Mr. Hoover, like Scripture, for a variety of purposes, it is reasonable to believe that his message, in which he asked for restraint in the revision of the tariff, suggests his real opinion.

Although it seems very likely that the general revisionists will succeed in the Senate as they did in the House, the Borah resolution provides the occasion for a fight well worth making. Because of the freedom of debate in the Senate, frank criticism and honest discussion is certain to be directed against the tariff bill, criticism and discussion which the "efficient" machinery of the House made impossible. There is in the Senate a chance to mobolize the sentiment for a decent tariff bill as opposed to the preposterous rationalized horse trading which came from the House. Before the debate is over the country will at least have heard of such situations in the world as that in the western Provinces of Canada. There are many straws to show the way the wind is blowing, and in the Senate it will be impossible to confine the discussion to the plaintive recitals of lobbyists for alleged infant industries and undisputed campaign contributors.

RHODE ISLAND SOLDIERS AND SAILORS WHO DIED ON THE WESTERN FRONT DURING THE WORLD WAR

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, Rhode Island is very proud of her record in the World War. Her sons responded nobly to the call for soldiers. Many of them who went to France have never returned, and they rest in the cemeteries on the field of battle. I would like to send to the desk a list of these veterans who are buried in foreign cemeteries and ask that it be printed in the RECORD as a tribute to these men.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ENTERTAINMENTS AT THE WHITE HOUSE

Mr. BLEASE. I send to the desk a Senate resolution, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 93).

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. EDGE. My point of order is made under Rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, which reads:

OBJECTION TO READING A PAPER

When the reading of a paper is called for, and objected to, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate, without debate.

I assume that the reading of the paper has been completed, of which I am very regretful; but under Rule XI I call for a vote of the Senate upon the reading of the paper.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold that it is too late to do so. What has been read is a resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina, and the matter it contains has already been read.

Mr. EDGE. In view of the fact that the paper has already been read, under the ruling of the Chair, I move that it be stricken from the RECORD of the Senate.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, the resolution is not before the Senate. I have introduced the resolution and have asked that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. There is not a word in the resolution which reflects on anybody. Mrs. Hoover did entertain a negro. Nobody denies that, I understand. Nobody denies that the people were there whom the newspapers have said were there. Personally I am not surprised. I said in the campaign last summer in three States in which I campaigned that if Mr. Hoover should be elected President of the United States negroes would be entertained and would eat in the White House. That has come to pass. This is simply to call attention to the fact that, in order to keep down a certain condition which might arise, the occupants of the White House should be careful as to whom they invite to come there hereafter. I do not care whether the Senate strikes the resolution from the RECORD or not. I have got what I want out of it. I have had it read.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to discuss or debate the contents of the matter which has been read. It is as near obscenity as it is possible for such a thing to be, in my judgment. Whether I am too late in the invocation of Rule XI or not, of course, the Vice President must decide.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. EDGE. I will yield in just a moment. It is for the Vice President to determine under Rule XI whether this issue shall be decided without debate. I have made the motion that the matter be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the words to which he objects are embodied in the resolution and are a part of it. Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think that there is a different way to dispose of the resolution without undertaking to lay it on the table, which cuts off debate and consideration. I agree that the resolution should not have been read, but I am not in favor of the proceeding which has been suggested by the Senator from Connecticut. The resolution is here now, and the mere fact of laying it upon the table will not change the situation in the slightest.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I have a motion pending.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Under the rule, as I understand, the resolution goes over for one day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rule, the resolution will go to the Committee on the District of Columbia, if some other disposition is not made of it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. EDGE. I should like to ask the Vice President whether my motion that the matter read be expunged from the RECORD is in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it would be in order, but the Chair thinks if objection were made it could not now be expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. BLEASE. I object.

Mr. EDGE. I ask unanimous consent that the matter be expunged from the RECORD.

Mr. BLEASE. I object.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, may I inquire as to the nature of the motion offered by the Senator from New Jersey? I understood that it referred only to the document accompanying the resolution, and not to the resolution itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no document accompanying the resolution; the matter which was read is a part of the resolution. That is why the Chair made the decision he did. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I move that the resolution offered by the Senator from South Carolina be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and that all further reference to it be expunged from the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done unless the action by which the resolution was sent to the Committee on the District of Columbia be reconsidered. Is there objection to the reconsideration of that order?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BINGHAM. Was there a vote on sending the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was so sent without objection. No objection was made, and it went to the committee as other resolutions go to committees when the request therefor is made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——
